"But I am slow of speech, and of a stammering tongue; I have but little education, and am poor. What can I do?" Well, the Lord does not require any thing from you that you have not the ability to do. But will you do little errands for the Lord? What if we do not understand Greek and Latin? What if we can not give dates for all the great events that have taken place since the world began? And supposing we do not remember just how long has been the reign of every king since God first gave rebellious Israel a king in his wrath? It does not hinder our being useful, and doing good. We may be ignorant of all these things, and ten more, and still each be a cheerful sunbeam in this cold, dark world, if we will, and carry a ray of light and warmth to many sad hearts. It does not require Greek or Latin to speak kind words of sympathy to the afflicted and sorrowful. It does not require great learning to go to the house of the poor sick mother, who is oppressed with care and anxiety, and say cheerfully, "Well, my friend, what can I do for you to-day?" We do not need great eloquence to tell poor sin-sick souls that Christ stands with outstretched arms all ready to receive them.

I have no doubt many have heard and admired eloquent sermons, and smart, stirring exhortations, when a warm grasp of the hand, a tear in the eye, and a few simple words of affectionate, earnest, heartfelt sympathy or entreaty, would have done them more real good. Public exhortations, however eloquent and forcible they may be, are apt to be received in a careless manner. They are spoken to all, and it is too often the case that no one lays them to heart. The hearers want to know that the speaker is interested in their case personally, before they can be reached. All people crave sympathy, and a few words from an affectionate, sympathizing heart, although spoken in a broken manner, may sometimes do more good than a great sermon.

Sister, go to that young friend who looks so sad and lonely; put your arm around her, tell her how much Jesus loves her, and what a beautiful home he is going to provide for his people. Win her affections, and then lead her like a little child to the Savior.

Brother, go, speak to that young man. Do not tell him what an awful sinner he is, and that he deserves to be damned. Speak kindly. Make him feel that you have an interest in his welfare; then tell him what great love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we might be called the children of God.

If we are poor, we can scatter kind words and pleasant smiles. If we cannot write for the public, we can write sympathizing and encouraging letters to those who are sick, afflicted and discouraged. Oh! there are hearts in every direction aching and breaking for the want of sympathy and love. There are souls all around us who are sighing and pining for kind words. There are thousands who are longing for some good faithful christian to come and take them by the hand and lead them to the Fountain of living water. Let us search them out, and give them the hand of christian friendship.

No one ought to make excuses. There is work for all. The great and small, the rich and poor, the learned and unlearned, have all a place. God help us each to fill our place, and not stand all the day idlers. B. P. F.

THE PARIAN CHRONICLE.

NUMBER THREE.

Another proof of the incorrectness of the method of reckoning upwards from B. C. 264 is found in the 30th period of the Chronicle; in which time Homer the Poet flourished, in the reign of Diognetus. This is done by adding the number of years, as given in the period, to 264, placed in the year B. C. 907. But Dr. Hales says, "Diognetus, in whose archonship Homer flourished, did not begin to reign till B. C. 893; consequently, the date B. C. 907, furnished by the supplemental number, which is perfect, must be erroneous." But if we follow the method used by the author of the Chronicle, which is to reckon downward, instead of upward, the apparent difficulty is removed; for, according to this method, each date falls twenty-five years lower. If from 907 we take 25, we have B. C. 882, and the reign of Diognetus commenced B. C. 893; so then the poet flourished in the 11th year of his reign, hence all the apparent difficulties are removed.

Now the interval between the taking of Troy and the reign of Alyattes, as given by the Chronicle, is 604 years, and the true date of the taking of Troy was B. C. 1184, from which take 604, we have the year B. C. 580 for the beginning of the reign of Alyattes; and having proved by Herodotus that this is strictly correct, we shall, after the method of the author of the Chronicle, reckon downward from this to get the true dates as given in it. But as I am now examining the Chronicle with reference to Bro. Stevenson's arrangement, I shall, in each period, first use his method, that all may see how far the Parian Chronicle favors his theory.

The next period offered by him, to prove the time of the reign of Cyrus, is the 42d, which being imperfect, it stands thus:—"Since Crœsus S—— of Asia —— Delph—— 102." The "conjectures" of the learned make it to read thus:—"Since Crœsus sent ambassadors out of Asia to Delphi, 292 years"; which added to 264 gives B. C. 556. We have already noticed that his method of reckoning gives B. C. 605 for the beginning of the reign of Abyattes, who reigned 57 years; this taken from 605 leaves B. C. 548 for the beginning of the reign of Crœsus, which taken from 556, leaves 8; so it would appear that the time when Crœsus sent ambassadors to Delphi was eight years before the beginning of his reign; but Bro. Stevenson did not pretend to clear up this difficulty. We have above noticed that the correct date for the beginning of the reign of Crœsus was B. C. 580, and the interval as given by the Chronicle between the two dates is just forty-nine years, which taken from 580 leaves 531; but this being eight years before the beginning of the reign of Crœsus, we are here involved in the same difficulty with that of Bro. Stevenson. But since it is not the Parian Chronicle that involves us in this difficulty, but that which is supplied by the "conjectures of the learned," we may clear it up by supplying the deficiencies so as to make it read thus: "Since Crœsus, the son of Alyattes, was by his father sent out of Asia to Delphi 292," for this falls in the 49th year of the reign of Alyattes, and is just eight years before his death. Now Herodotus informs us that "on his recovery from sickness he . . . dedicated at Delphi a large silver bowl, with a saucer of iron inlaid, an object that deserves attention above all the offerings at Delphi."—b. 1, c. 25. If this, as Herodotus affirms, "deserves attention above all the offerings," the natural inference is that this is the circumstance alluded to by the author of the Chronicle, which clears up the difficulty. THE VOICE OF HISTORIANS.
"The Lord's Day"—The True Christian Sabbath.

NUMBER NINE.—(Concluded.)

(From Mosheim's Eccl. Hist., by Maclaine, pp. 35, 56-57, and 109, 110.)

"Since, then, there was such a variety in the ritual and discipline of the primitive churches, it must be very difficult to give such an account of the worship, manners and institutions of the ancient christians as will agree with what was practised in all those countries where the gospel flourished. There are, notwithstanding, certain laws, whose authority and obligation were universal and indispensable among all christians, and of those we shall here give a brief account. ALL CHRISTIANS WERE UNANIMOUS IN SETTING APART THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK, on which the triumphant Savior arose from the dead, for the solemn celebration of public worship. This pious custom, which was derived from the example of the church of Jerusalem, was founded upon the express appointment of the apostles, who consecrated that day to the same sacred purpose, and was observed UNIVERSALLY THROUGHOUT ALL THE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES, as appears from the united testimonies of the most credible writers. The seventh day of the week was also observed as a festival,* not by the christians in general, but by such churches only as were principally composed of Jewish converts, nor did the other christians censure this custom as criminal and unlawful. It appears, moreover, that all the christian churches observed two great anniversary festivals; the one in memory of Christ's glorious resurrection, and the other to commemorate the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles. . . .

"There is no institution so pure and excellent which the corruption and folly of man will not in time alter for the worse, and load with additions foreign to its nature and original design. Such, in a particular manner, was the fate of christianity. In this (second) century, many unnecessary rites and ceremonies were added to the christian worship, the introduction of which was extremely offensive to wise and good men. These changes, while they destroyed the beautiful simplicity of the gospel, were naturally pleasing to the gross multitude, who are more delighted with the pomp and splendor of external institutions, than with the native charms of rational and solid piety, and who generally give little attention to any objects but those which strike their outward senses. But other reasons may be added to this, which, though they suppose no bad intentions, yet manifest a considerable degree of precipitation and imprudence.

"And here we may observe, in the first place, that there is a high degree of probability in the notion of those who think that the bishops augmented the number of religious rites in the christian worship, by way of accommodation to the infirmities and prejudices both of Jews and heathens; in order to facilitate thus their conversion to christianity.

"Both Jews and heathens were accustomed to a vast variety of pompous and magnificent ceremonies in their religious service. And as they considered these rites as an essential part of religion, it was but natural that they should behold with indifference, and even with contempt, the simplicity of the christian worship, which was destitute of those idle ceremonies that rendered their service so specious and striking. To remove then, in some measure, this prejudice against christianity, the bishops thought it necessary to increase the number of rites and ceremonies, and thus to render the public worshp more striking to the outward senses. This addition of external rites was also designed to remove the opprobious calumnies which the Jewish and Pagan priest cast upon the christians, on account of the simplicity of their worship, esteeming them little better than Atheists, because they had no temples, altars, victims, priests, nor anything of that external pomp in which the vulgar are so prone to place the essence of religion. The rulers of the church adopted, therefore, certain external ceremonies, that thus they might captivate the senses of the vulgar, and be able to refute the reproaches of their adversaries.

"This, it must be confessed, was a very awkward, and, indeed, a very pernicious stratagem; it was obscuring the native lustre of the gospel, in order to extend its influence, and making it lose in point of real excellence, what it gained in point of popular esteem. Some accommodation to the infirmities of mankind, some prudent instances of condescension to their invincible prejudices, are necessary in ecclesiastical, as well as in civil institutions; but they must be of such a nature as not to inspire ideas, or encourage prejudices incompatible with just sentiments of the great object of religious worship, and of the fundamental truths which God has imparted by reason and revelation to the human race. How far this rule has been disregarded and violated, will appear too plainly in the progress of this history. . . .

"We shall take no more than a brief view of these rites and ceremonies, since a particular consideration of them would lead us into endless discussions, and open a field too vast to be comprehended in such a compendious history as we here give of the christian church. The first christians assembled for the purposes of divine worship, in private houses, in caves, and in vaults, where the dead were buried. Their meetings were on the first day of the week; and, in some places, they assembled also upon the seventh, which was celebrated by the Jews. Many also observed the fourth day of the week, on which Christ was betrayed; and the sixth, which was the day of his crucifixion. The hour of the day appointed for holding these religious assemblies, varied according to the different times and circumstances of the church; but it was generally in the evening after sunset, or in the morning before the dawn. During these sacred meetings, prayers were repeated, the holy Scriptures were publicly read, short discourses upon the duties of christians were addressed to the people, hymns were sung, and a portion of the oblations, presented by the faithful, was employed in the celebration of the Lord's Supper and the feasts of charity.

"The christians of this century celebrated anniversary festivals in commemoration of the death and resurrection of Christ, and of the effusion of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles. The day which was observed as the anniversary of Christ's death, was called the paschal day, or passover, because it was looked upon to be the same day with that on which the Jews celebrated the feast of that name. In the manner, however, of observing this solemn day, the christians of the Lesser Asia differed much from the rest, and in a more especial manner from those of Rome. They both, indeed, fasted during the great week, (so that was called in which Christ died) and afterwards celebrated, like the Jews, a sacred feast, at which they distributed a paschal lamb in memory of our Savior's last supper.

"But the Asiatic christians kept this feast on the fourteenth day of the first Jewish month, at the time that the Jews celebrated their passover, and, three days after, commemorated the resurrection of the triumphant Redeemer. They affirmed that they had derived this custom from the apostles John and Philip, and pleaded, moreover, in its behalf, the example of Christ himself, who held his paschal feast on the same day that the Jews celebrated their passover. The western churches observed a different method: they celebrated their paschal feast on the night that preceded the anniversary of Christ's resurrection, and thus connected the commemoration of the Saviour's crucifixion, with that of his victory over death and the grave. Nor did they differ thus from the Asiatics, without alleging also apostolic authority for what they did; for they pleaded that of St. Peter and St. Paul, as a justification of their conduct in this matter. . . . It would be almost endless to enter into a minute detail of all the different parts of public worship, and to point out the disadvantageous changes they underwent.

"A few observations will be sufficient upon this head. The public prayers had now lost much of that solemn and majestic simplicity that characterized them in the primitive times, and which were, at present, degenerating into a vain and swelling bombast. The Psalms of David were now received among the public hymns that were sung as a part of divine service. The sermons, or public discourses, addressed to the people, were composed according to the rules of human eloquence, and rather adapted to excite the stupid admiration of the populace, who delight in vain embellishment, than to enlighten the understanding, or to reform the heart. Nay, it would seem as if all possible means had been industriously used, to give an air of folly and extravagance to the christian assemblies.

"For the people were permitted, nay, even exhorted by the preacher himself, to crown his talents with clapping of hands and loud acclamations of applause; a recompense that was hitherto peculiar to the actors on the theatre, and the orators in the forum. How men, set apart by their profession to exhibit examples of the contempt of vain glory, and to demonstrate to others the vanity and emptiness of all temporal things, could indulge such a senseless and indecent ambition, is difficult to be conceived, though it is highly to be deplored.

"The first day of the week, which was the ordinary and stated time for the public assemblies of christians, was, in consequence of a peculiar law enacted by Constantine, observed with more solemnity than it had formerly been. . . . It appears farther, by innumerable testimonies, that the Lord's Supper was administered, (in some places two or three times a week, in others on Sunday only), to all those who were assembled together to worship God. It was also sometimes celebrated at the tombs of martyrs, and at funerals, performed in honour of the saints, and for the benefit of the dead." T. M. PREBLE.

East Weare, N. H.

* "It is in vain that many learned men have labored to prove that in all the primitive churches, both the first and last day of the week were observed as festivals. The churches of Bithynia, of which Pliny speaks in his letter to Trajan, had only one stated day for the celebration of public worship; and that was undoubtedly the first day of the week, or what we call the Lord's day."—Note by Mosheim.

THE PUSHING OF THE RAM.

OTHER FACTS.

1. It is a fact that the "ram" represented "the kings of Media and Persia."—Dan. 8: 20.

2. It is a fact that Daniel saw "the kings (or kingdoms) of Media and Persia pushing westward, and northward, and southward."—Dan. 8: 4.

3. It is a fact that the order of Persian conquest was first westward toward Babylon, then northward toward Armenia, and southward toward Egypt.

4. It is a fact that the pushing of the ram was against symbolic "beasts."

5. It is a fact that the term "beasts" in Dan. 8: 4, is the same in signification as in Dan. 7; 3, 17. It was so understood by the Seventy who translated the Hebrew into Greek nearly three hundred years before Christ; for they use the Greek word Theeria to express the sense in both passages.

6. It is a fact that the "beasts" of Dan. 7: 3, 17, represent kingdoms, and as the "beasts" of Dan. 8: 4 have the same signification, they must represent kingdoms also. Theeria, the Greek word rendered "beasts" in the Septuagint, signifies "wild beasts," and never represents God's people when used as a symbol.

7. It is a fact that no kingdoms could stand before the conquests of the Medes and Persians, in the sense intended by inspiration in Dan. 8: 4. Did not Daniel tell Belshazzar "Thy kingdom is given to the Medes and Persians"? Did not Belshazzar's kingdom embrace "all people, nations and languages"? (Dan. 5: 19). If then "all people, nations and languages" were given to the Medes and Persians," was it not therefore true that there were none "that could deliver out of his hand"? Was Cyrus wholly deceived when he said "The Lord God of heaven hath given me ALL THE KINGDOMS OF THE WORLD"? Herodotus' account of Cyrus' defeat and death by the Massagetæ is questioned on high authority. Xenophen makes him die peaceably in bed, surrounded by his family. The difference between these two historians is thus accounted for by Rollin. Vol. ii. Ante J. C. 529, p. 141.

"Herodotus himself explains it to us. In the very place where he gives account of Cyrus' birth, and in that where he speaks of his death he acquaints us that even at that time these two great events were related differently. Herodotus followed that which pleased him best, for it appears that he was fond of extraordinary and wonderful events, and readily gave credit to them. Xenophen was of a graver disposition and less credulous; and in the very beginning of his history acquaints us that he had taken great pains to inform himself of Cyrus' birth, education and character."

Dan. 8: 4 predicts Persian supremacy over all kingdoms; Ezra 1: 2 declares that supremacy a fact. Let the record be true.

8. It is a fact that the prophetic greatness of the Persian ram was SUBSEQUENT to the prophetic pushing of the ram, and not vice versa, as some would make it.

9. It is a fact that if the word "might" (Dan. 8: 4) has "something significant" in it, "implying that an effort would be made for the destruction of some people that would not be accomplished," then none need have further difficulty with Persian efforts against Scythia, Ethiopia, and the Massagetæ as being in harmony.

10. It is a fact that the Persian bear (Dan. 7: 5) had "three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it."

11. It is a fact that the previous defeat and captivity of these "ribs" is fully implied in this Scripture. The bear must first conquer and capture an animal before he can place its ribs between its teeth. If any one should say that it might pick up three old ribs of a carcass devoured by some other beast, I reply that I hardly think dry ribs much of a temptation even for a hungry bear.

12. It is also a fact that oppression is implied in this Scripture as the condition of the ribs. To be between the teeth of a bear is to be oppressed. If any doubt it let him try it.

13. It is a fact that to be between the teeth of a bear is to occupy a position of suffering and of peril; hence

14. It must be a fact that those people, represented by these "ribs," were a conquered people, a captive people, an oppressed people, a suffering and imperiled people. Such was neither Haman nor his family; for the king "advanced him and set his seat above all the princes that were with him."—Esther 3: 1. He had great power over the king so as to act for him. That man is great to whom a king would say "The silver is given to thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee,"—Esther 3: 2. Haman was on the back of the bear riding and controlling rather than in its mouth. His position was more like that of the Roman harlot than that of the "three ribs."

15. It is a fact that the pronoun "they," occurring in Dan. 8: 5, does not always relate to the last thing mentioned for its antecedent, but generally refers to the people. Dan. 7: 26,—"The judgment shall sit, and they (the people) shall take away his dominion." Dan. 11: 21,—"And in his estate shall stand up a vile person, to whom they (the people) shall not give the honor of the kingdom." Dan. 11: 22,—"With the arms of a flood shall they (the people) be overflown before him." Dan. 11: 31,—"Arms shall stand on his part, and they (the people) shall pollute the sanctuary." Therefore we may read Dan. 8: 5,—And the people said unto it, Arise, devour much flesh." Was not this the voice of the Persian people as they followed their leader to conquest? Was not a desire to devour a characteristic of the Persians?

While these things stand before me as facts, I cannot believe that the successful pushing of the ram predicted in Dan. 8: 4 was fulfilled in the abortive attempt of Haman, the Agagite, to exterminate the Jews. H. F. C.

"STEEPED IN INFIDELITY."

"I think the man who questions the immortality of the soul, is pretty well steeped in infidelity," said a learned professor in speaking with reference to my views concerning the nature of man. The reverend professor being asked what need there would be of a resurrection on his hypothesis, replied with an air of sanctimonious pomposity, "I think it would take a pretty loud trump to wake a dead man." The matter stands thus:

1. The immortality of the soul is not once mentioned in the Bible under that term, as its advocates all admit, though they insist it is taught in an indirect way.

2. The doctrine of a resurrection is directly stated forty-six times under the term resurrection, and is also frequently taught by other terms, in language like this: "Thy dead men shall live," "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," "the dead in Christ shall rise," etc.

Thus the very men who can scoffingly ignore a doctrine which is distinctly mentioned scores of times in the Bible, are the ones to raise the cry of infidelity against those who refuse to subscribe to a doctrine which is never once explicitly stated as a truth of revelation, and is alike averse to inspiration and reason. And the blind love to be led by the blind, and will together plod along till ingloriously engulfed in the ditch of irrevocable dismay.—W. SHELDON.—Voice of the West.

NURSING THE SICK.

BY IRA A. THAYER, M. D.

In order that the physician may discharge his highly responsible, noble, beneficent, and irksome duty, with credit and honor to himself and satisfaction to his employers, and be able to enjoy the pleasure of seeing his practice attended with the greatest possible success, it is imperatively necessary that the surrounding circumstances attending each individual case which he may have to treat should be favorable to the attainment of such results. This implies a condition of things met with in but a small proportion of cases to which the physician is usually called; and to this fact may properly be attributed, to a great extent, the want of success in many of those cases which prove fatal under his charge. Yet this is seldom taken into consideration by the people at large, who frequently call in question the skill of the physician, when the attending circumstances connected with the case are such as to render it impossible for the physician to carry into execution his plan of treatment.

I propose to consider, briefly, some of the more important points to be observed in nursing the sick,—to point out some of the most common errors to be corrected, as well as the measures which should be adopted in our efforts to relieve the suffering.

The first great essential to the invalid is a good supply of pure air. The deleterious effects of impure air have been alluded to in a previous paper (Hygiene No. 3). But I would call the attention of nurses to a few facts regarding the ventilation of the sick-room. It is too often the case that nurses are afraid of fresh air in the sick-chamber. They seem to think that the first duty devolving upon them is to keep the patient warm; and, accordingly, the windows and doors are kept as close as though they thought fresh air contained within itself the elements of disease and death. I have often entered the sick-room where there was such an accumulation of foul, carbonaceous matter that, in five minutes, I would be suffering from a severe headache. Under the influence of such air it would be impossible for a well person to retain health; much less for a sick one to regain it. In such cases a cure is almost impossible, and medicine comparatively useless. Especially is this the case where the patient is laboring under malignant fevers or eruptive and putrid diseases. In such cases, to have the room well ventilated is hardly sufficient; and I order chloride of lime placed in the room. This article aids materially in purifying the air. Where this is not at hand, I use charcoal, or onions sliced up and placed at some distance from the patient. The latter articles absorb a large amount of carbonaceous matter.

The highest room in the house contains the purest air, and should be selected as the sick-room. The bed should also be elevated; for the freshest portion of air is nearest the ceiling, which, displacing the more contaminated, causes it to descend toward the floor, and consequently the lower the position of the patient, the deeper is he immersed in the infectious gases. There is no danger of catching cold in a well-ventilated room; the close room is far more likely to produce such a result. You occasionally hear one expressing an apprehension lest he or she should be exposed to the night air. What other than night air could one expect or hope for during the night? Yet if one may judge from the cautiousness and regularity with which the dreaders of night air close their doors and windows before sunset, it would seem that they design and anticipate thereby to shut in a sufficient quantity of day air to sustain them throughout their nocturnal slumbers!

Excrementitious matter retained in the room is a great source of atmospheric impurities. All of the excrement of every kind should be removed. Common decency would seem to suggest this. Yet, as disgusting as it is, this is often neglected.

The cleanliness of the patient should receive especial attention. The clothing should all be changed at least once every day; and in malignant and infectious diseases, twice within twenty-four hours. We breathe through every part of the body; the whole skin is porous, and "from the hair of the head to the sole of the foot" gases are momentarily escaping, creating perspiration, and causing uncleanliness; the vapors adhere to and often saturate the garments worn; whilst the unwashed surface increases the fever within, and impedes the egress of the disease. Cleansing the body and changing the clothing are matters of vital importance. They revive the departing strength of the invalid; they are refreshing, as well as invigorating, and they cannot be neglected without more or less impeding the prospect and progress of a recovery.

Inexperienced nurses are often too fearful lest the patient whom they are attending will die for the want of food. Hence they are continually coaxing him to "eat something," ignorant or unmindful of the fact that nature, as a good and wise physician, deprives the sick person of his wonted appetite, in order that the whole system may enjoy quiet, so essential to the restoration of health. If he does not feel the want of food, we may rest assured that he does not need it. To force him to eat would, therefore, most probably hasten, or even cause the patient's death. Vitality feeds on the adipose tissue previously provided and stored away by nature; and so long as that supply lasts, no foreign substance is actually necessary; hence the sick man is not hungry, and to tempt him to violate the laws of nature, is to inflict an absolute, perhaps an irreparable injury.

When nature begins to assert her rights, and there is a demand for food, our attention must be directed to the quality as well as the quantity of food. The common custom is to urge on an appetite by the exhibition of dainties and edibles intended to please the palate and afford a relish. But in a majority of cases these choice delicacies do more harm than good; in some diseases, indeed, they are positively injurious, being incompatible either with the disease contracted, or the medicine administered. They nauseate instead of modifying the stomach; they augment the malady or neutralize the medicine. This is especially the effect of feeding and feasting the patient on spiced delicacies, rich jellies, jams, etc. These, too, are sometimes intermingled with medicine to disguise the objectionable flavor accompanying the draught, or powder, as if to restore health was not of more consequence than to sweeten the ingredients. It is well and wise, indeed, to modify, so far as is reasonable and practicable, the unpleasantness or bitterness of curative doses; but that, if done at all, should be done only by the physician, and nothing should be appended "to take the taste out of the mouth" without his knowledge or consent. In my own practice I have often been surprised and disappointed at finding my prescribed remedies not producing the anticipated result; and, upon inquiry, have repeatedly ascertained that they had been administered in some palliative incompatible with the given medicine. One fully appreciates the kindness and applauds the motive which suggests this course of action; and without wishing to speak discouragingly, I most earnestly protest against this well-meant, but ill-timed attention to the sick. Cracked wheat mush, Indian meal gruel, rice, baked potato, fish, "dropped" egg, and sometimes ripe fruit, are among the articles which would be allowable in most cases of convalescence.

One very essential point to be observed is, to keep the patient quiet. Too much talking, or, what is worse, a constant whispering, or buzzing, kept up between the nurses, aggravates the patient prodigiously. When two nurses are employed, it is best for one to retire to another room, and let the solitary attendant watch without interrupting the invalid sufferer. Sickness requires rest—all attainable quietude; hence the nurse should be careful not to disturb the patient upon whom he is waiting and wishes to serve. Where a patient is very low with disease, frequent visits from neighbors and friends should not be allowed; but what is more, do not allow any conversation relative to the patient's condition, or the probability of its proving fatal, be heard by him. If it becomes necessary to inform him of the prospect, let the physician, or some one selected from the friends, perform that dreaded task. With some nurses, almost the only thought which seems to occupy their minds when in the sick-room is of death; and by their constant gabble about how such an one appeared after death, and what a struggle such an one passed through in yielding up life, and all manner of similar talk, they keep the patient's mind upon nothing but death and the prospect of his speedy dissolution. Now there is nothing which the nurse or friends can do, short of giving direct poison, that would kill the patient sooner. The opposite course should be pursued. A cheerful and happy countenance, soothing words, and conversation relative to pleasing subjects, bright prospects, and happy anticipations, should take the place of those long faces and that deathly gabble. The influence over disease is very great; the one course tends to rapid prostration and death, the other to vivification—to health and comfort.

OUR EYES.

Indigestion is the principal source of weak eyes. Reading in the cars often seriously disturbs the vision. A delicate and wonderful apparatus within the eye is constantly busy in adapting it to the varying focal distances. The jerking motion of the cars compels an exhausting effort to maintain the required adaptation. Thousands of eyes are spoiled by reading in cars and other vehicles. Recently I was consulted by a railway expressman who had become totally blind by reading the newspapers in the cars. Thousands, who have never consciously suffered any inconvenience from the habit, are obliged to wear glasses prematurely, to correct an unsteadiness of vision produced in this way. Reading with the gas-light before you is another cause of weak eyes. The light should always hang quite high and behind you, and allowed to shine over the shoulder. If convenient, it should be over the left shoulder. If using kerosene, it is best to employ the lamps which hang on the wall. Neither should you read with your face toward the window.

Reading by twilight is dangerous. Gradually accomodating itself to the receding light, the eye is unconsciously strained. I have seen more than one case of grave disease of the eye, produced by an undue effort to use the vision too long at twilight.

White paint is another mischief to the eyes. White paint outside, white paint inside, white paint everywhere. During the season of brightest sunshine the glare hurts the eye. I wonder if it is not in bad taste likewise? I notice that artists have none of it about them.

In our constant reading, the eye-sight is much tried by the white paper. I hope that the tinted paper, with a still deeper color, may become fashionable.

Avoid reading by artificial light when you can. We read too much. We read as we eat—pell-mell, hotchity-potch; no mastication, no digestion. If, as a people, we read less, we might know more. Few indications are more unpromising in a child than a remarkable passion for books. I doubt if a good lady, who called on me the other day, with her son, will ever forgive me for what I said to her. Her boy was of the regular Boston type—great head and eyes, with small and narrow chest. She said in a mournful voice, but with evident pride: "Ah, doctor, he has such a passion for books. As soon as he is out of bed he is down at some great book, and scarcely leaves it but for his meals. He never plays like other children." I told her, among other things, that, unless she could break up that habit, her son would very likely turn out a dolt. She left very soon with the belief that I did not understand her son's case. I should have about as much hope of a man who gave himself up to childish sports as I should of a child who gave himself up to the habits and life of a man.

The newspapers have much to answer for in the way of small type and imperfect printing. I would cheerfully give two hundred dollars a year to support a newspaper which would give us, morning and evening, a half column of the really reliable news, instead of fifteen columns of diluted speculations and tricky canards, the reading of which hurts our eyes and wastes our precious time.

HEALTH EXPERIENCE.

Having been afflicted with inflammatory rheumatism more or less for ten years, and having tried many remedies, I found nothing to meet my case till last spring as I started to Minnesota I left off eating pork, and while with Bro. John Bostwick in Minn., and talking with him about the importance of strict dietetic habits in order to adopt the two-meal system, leaving out meat of every variety, which I commenced about the first of October, and have followed strictly ever since. I have not taken a drop of medicine of any kind. The result is, I have had no rheumatism, though I am much exposed traveling and preaching in crowded houses, and sleeping in damp beds, one of the surest ways of taking cold and being made sick. Yet I have not so much as taken a slight cold. I enjoy as perfect health as probably can be enjoyed in this mortal state. I would not return to my old habits of eating for any consideration.

Oh that diseased mortals would remember that much of their suffering is the result of their eating and drinking and other unlawful habits which they must leave off, or must continue to suffer. I thank God for the light he has given upon this subject. May many be blessed as the result, is my prayer.—ISAAC SANBORN.—Review and Herald.

AIR.—In no way can we make ourselves more effectual as students, as laborers, as cultivators of any art, than by always providing ourselves with abundance of air. Anything that interferes with breathing, interferes with life and cuts short its amount. Closed windows do it; crowded apartments do it; want of exercise does it; tight clothing does it. A tightly fitting vest reduces the amount of air consumed in respiration several per cent., and with it the amount of life. We can reduce the amount of food required by nature, with less injury than the amount of air.

If we would have the full use of all our powers—power to study without exhaustion, labor without weariness, power to think wisely and vigorously, ability to enjoy life—we must see that, at all times and places, we have an abundance of this God-given element.

THE DESTRUCTION OF PHARAOH.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

Lo, the myriads of Egypt went forth to devour,
With their king in his swift-rolling chariot of power,
And the horsemen and warriors that bowed to his nod,
Lay black on the path of the armies of God.

From his seat decked in purple the monarch espied
The foe that his sceptre had marked and defied,
And he sprang on the prey like the hound on the deer,
While the cheek of the Hebrew grew pallid with fear.

Stand still, cried the prophet, nor pale at his ire,
Our God will look out from his pillar of fire,
And the blast of his nostrils shall scatter the foe,
Till they sink in the depths of the waters below.

Rush on in thine anger, rash king, to thy doom,
Till that pillar shall wrap thee in midnight and gloom,
Till the dark seething billows shall hiss at thy pride,
And tell how a monarch in madness once died.

It was night, and the legions of Pharaoh's proud host
Stood up with their banners, with might and in boast;
It was morning, and lo, all their vaunting was o'er,
For the glory of Egypt lay dashed on the shore.

Sing ye to the Lord, who the battle hath won;
His power shall be sounded wide under the sun;
The horse and his rider are drowned in the sea,
And the tyrant is vanquished, the captives are free.

For the car of Jehovah rolled on in its wrath,
And the hand that would stay it lay crushed in its path;
Not with spear of the mighty, nor edge of the sword,
For thine was the victory, O, arm of the Lord.

So perish thy foes, O Jehovah and King;
So reign till the stars of the morning all sing;
Till Sin, Death, and Hell, are forever unknown,
And creation restored is Emmanuel's throne.

PTOLEMY'S ECLIPSES.

THREE DIGITS.

It is argued by Eld. T. that several of Ptolemy's eclipses were too small to be seen unless they were expected and looked for at such a time; especially those which were of only three digits or less. He begins this criticism on page 32, in examining the first triplet of eclipses. He says: "As Ptolemy's tables made three full eclipses here, it follows that he arranged his chronology according to his imperfect knowledge of astronomy. But since this science is now so much better understood, we know there were but two eclipses there, and one of them was too small to be noticed by those who knew nothing of an eclipse until they saw it. Ptolemy, therefore, was mistaken in supposing that there were three eclipses of the moon, which Hipparchus found among the public records of Babylon." The eclipse which Mr. T. thinks too small to be noticed is that of Sept. 1, 720 B. C., recorded as "more than half," or of above six digits, though computed in Struyk's catalogue as of a little more than five digits.

Again, in April 21, 621 B. C., the moon is recorded as "one fourth" eclipsed, or three digits. The eclipse is given by Struyk as of 2 digits and 36 minutes. Eld. T. finds by Ferguson's tables one digit eclipsed at sunrise in Babylon; "but this, being too small to be noticed by the heathen, amounts to nothing." (P. 33.)

Again, in Nov. 19, 502 B. C., the moon is recorded as eclipsed one fourth, or 3 digits; computed in Struyk's catalogue as of 1 digit and 52 minutes. "But this, if seen at all, is also too small to be considered worthy of record among the wonders as discovered at Babylon, or among those eclipses which had so much frightened that people as to cause them to keep a public register of them." (P. 33.)

Again, having on page 32 denied the occurrence of any eclipse in March 8, 720 B. C., Eld. T. says on p. 37, "about one digit is as large as the eclipse of March 8, B. C. 720, can possibly be made; and so far from this causing alarm, if all Babylon had been out that night they would have failed to discover one so small, or at least to have thought of this being an eclipse."

Eld. T. then gives the opinion of two practical astronomers whom he had consulted, one of whom did not think that an eclipse under three digits would be noticed by any except those who—knowing that an eclipse would happen at a given time—were looking out for it. The other thought that one looking frequently at the moon would not be apt to notice an eclipse of less than three digits. This astronomer once saw such an eclipse, and it would sometimes seem to disappear, and then appear again. Eld. T. concludes by saying, "We may, therefore, safely set down all eclipses under three digits, at that age, as invisible." (P. 38.)

In this argument are assumed two very important matters.

1. That Ptolemy's eclipses were made by his tables. This assumption has been repeated by the Crisis in an argument like this: that if Ferguson' tables are of so little use because they are a hundred years old, much more are Ptolemy's tables, sixteen hundred years old, quite out of date. Whereas, on the very face of the matter, and as I thought I had made plain enough, the eclipses are given to us as matters of ancient record, and not as the results of Ptolemy's computations. And if we may believe Ptolemy's own story, he never thought of making the eclipses by his tables; for his tables—of the moon's anomaly—were made from the record he found of the eclipses. Hence the assumption that the eclipses were a fruit of his estimates, is literally preposterous. It puts the last first and the first last, inverting the just relation of eclipses and tables which has not been questioned in this case before, so far as I know. No tables could ever be made except on the basis of recorded eclipses. The heathen Ptolemy knew enough to know this. And it is a mark of his sagacity that he sought the oldest records, and compared them with the most recent observations.

2. It is assumed that, during long centuries, no one in Babylon was looking out for an eclipse. It seems to be further supposed that an eclipse, in order to get recorded in Babylon in that age, must be a wonder and create a little panic among that heathen people. I will not set this down as a part of Mr. T's logic, however, but only of his controversial rhetoric; though I think even that will appear to have no foundation.

An eclipse under three digits would be noticed only by one who was looking out for it,—Mr. T. was told by the astronomer. Very well. Now the account of Ptolemy's eclipses (Crisis, April 4) shows six eclipses of three digits or less, recorded as having been seen at Babylon, in the course of about 350 years, an average of one in about seventy years. Two of these are recorded as of two digits, and as occurring at the same distance from the node. And the first problem is, of course, to account for the record, or at least to say whether it is a record or a fiction. Eld. T. rejects the whole, for the extreme improbability of so small an eclipse being noticed and recorded once in seventy years!

But how could these eclipses even pretend to have come from Babylon, unless it were supposed that somebody there was given to meteorological observations? And, once allow that there was a clerk of the weather, or any gentleman of the sort, in Babylon, and the wonder would be if a small eclipse was not noticed once in threescore years and ten. If there was only one such man in a generation, his astronomical tastes would be known to a few acquaintances at least. And if he was not so fortunate as to see a small eclipse himself in all his life, he might find one faithfully reported to him. Out of regard for the stargazer, some friend on the police, or some physician often called out at night, or even some lover serenading his mistress, might be on the lookout for an eclipse of the moon when it was full,—it would so oblige the gentleman that reckons such a record a rare treasure. And people who keep such records now are apt to have them well preserved, for the benefit of those who follow them in their labors or studies.

Thus, on the most meagre supposition which the case requires, it seems to me these small eclipses might be fully accounted for as actual records. At least, I would sooner risk my poor reputation as an astronomer on this way of accounting for the record, than by rejecting it as Eld. T. does.

But the regard which Ptolemy had for these eclipses requires something more than this meagre supposition. And now what are the facts? Simply these: The "heathen" people of Babylon are famous in all antiquity—and among all modern astronomers, too—for their astronomical observations. What means the Chaldean Saros, or period of about 18 years, in which the eclipses all recurred, with some approach to exactness? It was by means of this, probably, that Thales predicted his famous eclipse. And it was, as the name indicates, a Chaldean discovery, made by the observation and comparison of eclipses, large and small, for generation after generation. That simple phrase, the Chaldean Saros, refutes all Mr. T.'s argument about three digits. I might cite numerous allusions to the stargazing habits of the people in question. I will give one from Syncellus, who says, "The Chaldeans accurately noted the periods and motions of the heavenly bodies, reckoning from Nabonassar; and the Greek mathematicians received them from the Chaldeans," (Chronography, p. 207.) And Ptolemy himself states that a continuous series of observations was in existence up to the commencement of the era of Nabonassar. (Almagest, b. 3, c. 6.)

Such a people would not likely be "frightened" by any eclipse. If they were not, like the Persians, devout worshipers of the sun, they doubtless had a great respect for that fountain of light, and they did not despise his fair consort, the moon. And when these worthies played at hide-and-seek around the earth, these poor "heathen" were above all the nations of the earth pleased with their gambols. If a half dozen of their petty games have reached us from so remote periods, I am not unwilling to thank the Chaldeans for the record.

But one need not be versed in antiquity or in astronomy to guess that the Chaldeans were star-gazers. The Bible intimates as much. And among the books of the Bible none indicates this more plainly than the book of Daniel, sealed or unsealed. "The king commanded to call the magicians, and the astrologers, and the sorcerers, and the Chaldeans." Chap. 2: 2; compare 1: 20; 2: 10, 27; 4: 7; 5; 7. Astrology is not indeed the same as astronomy. It was an art of divination. Yet, though it was a gross delusion, it began in actual and extended observation of the motions of the heavenly bodies. In the course of time the word Chaldean came to mean astrologer. Now it is easy to say that the ancient and original astrologers were not likely to notice an eclipse of three digits or less. But where is the proof of this?

TRUE FREEDOM.—No man is free who has not the command over himself, but suffers his passions to control him.

For the World's Crisis.

DEATH OF AUGUSTUS CÆSAR.

"To ascertain the years in which Julius Cæsar and Augustus died," says Dr. Jarvis, in his able work on chronology, "is to settle two of the most important points in chronology." This must appear very evident to all, I think, from the fact that if the years in which these two emperors died cannot be ascertained, then, indeed, we cannot tell the years of Christ's birth or crucifixion; nor the year of any other event, from the beginning of the world up to 200 years this side of Christ, or the beginning of the Christian Era. Hence the importance of a careful investigation of this point.

Mr. Thurman puts down the death of Augustus in A. D. 14, and proves it, as he seems to suppose, by an astronomical computation —by an eclipse of the moon, which, according to Tacitus and Dio, took place after the death of Augustus, while the army in Pannonia were in a state of mutiny. Mr. Thurman shows that the eclipse of the moon in A. D. 14, took place on the 28th of September. Augustus died, according to Mr. Thurman and the universal testimony of history, on Aug. 19. Therefore, from the date of the death of Augustus, Aug. 19, to the eclipse of the moon, Sept. 28, A. D. 14, is thirty-eight days.

Now it is my purpose to show that the events which took place between the death of Augustus and the eclipse of the moon following in the year in which he died, cannot possibly be crowded into this thirty-eight days; and thereby show the eclipse of the moon in A. D. 14 cannot be the one referred to by Tacitus and Dio.

The distance from Rome to the army in Pannonia, says Dr. Jarvis (p 255), is at least seven hundred Roman miles. The death of Augustus, says Dio, was not immediately make known; but as soon as it was made known, Tiberius sent the news to the army in Pannonia. Tacitus relates that "on receiving this intelligence, Julius Blaesus, the General, granted a suspension of military duty. This relaxation of discipline led to a fierce and violent mutiny. After some days a calm was produced by sending the General's son to Rome to obtain a redress of their grievances." On his arrival several meetings of the Senate are spoken of by Tacitus before the subject of the mutiny was introduced. On hearing of the disturbances Tiberius dispatched Drusus, with a powerful body of infantry and cavalry, to quell the insurrection. "For some time, however," says Tacitus, "the arrival of Drusus only increased the mutiny; nor was it checked until the eclipse of the moon took place." How long would it take these heavy-armed troops to march 700 miles?

By a note at the bottom of p. 255, (Dr. Jarvis' chronology), it is shown that "the usual day's march of the best appointed armies, both in ancient and modern times," is not over twelve geographical miles per day. Forced marches are reckoned twenty miles per day; and in either case, the whole army rests every fourth day. At this rate, it would take the army, at a forced march, resting every fourth day, forty-six days to march from Rome to Pannonia; or if they marched the whole 700 miles without resting a single day, it would take them thirty-five days; thus leaving only three of the thirty-eight days for the other events before mentioned; and these three days would hardly have been sufficient time to get the army ready for such a tremendous march. The news of the death of Augustus could not have reached the army in less than about ten days, and especially so since his death was not immediately made known. Then, as I have before shown, it was sometime before the mutiny took place, and the General's son was sent to Rome to obtain redress of their grievances. The shortest time that we could allow for this interval would be three days, (but it was no doubt nearer three months than it was three days), which added to the ten days would make thirteen. Ten days more must have been taken up for the General's son to reach Rome, at the rapid rate of seventy miles per day. Then several sittings of the Senate took place, after which Tiberius collected and got ready a powerful body of infantry and cavalry for a seven hundred miles march.

This, I think, could not have been accomplished in less than about a week, including the several sittings of the Senate. This would make, in all, from the death of Augustus to the day that the army left Rome, thirty days more. This, added to the thirty-five days,—the time taken for the army to march from Rome to Pannonia, and we have sixty-five days; and then the eclipse of the moon did not take place for sometime, as I have before shown, after the arrival of the army.

It is thus proved, I think, beyond question or doubt, that the eclipse of the moon, A. D. 14, could not be the one referred to by Tacitus and Dio. Thirty-eight days is, most certainly, entirely too short a time for the accomplishment of so many events and circumstances. Indeed, leaving out everything else, if the army had rested only one day in seven, it could not have been got ready and marched the 700 miles in the thirty-eight days.

In all probability, the time occupied by these events, was more than double the time that I have given them, as there was no occasion for haste in the matter, since the army agreed to wait until their grievances could be redressed by the General's son going to Rome. Therefore, there was no necessity for any forced march, without a single day's rest on the part of the army. Notwithstanding that this of itself is quite sufficient to prove Mr. Thurman's chronology incorrect, yet there is one other fact which I wish to mention, which is, if possible, still more fatal to his theory, which is the following: Dio and Eusebius, two of the most reliable ancient historians, state, that at the death of Augustus there was a total eclipse of the sun. See Dr. Jarvis, pp. 244 and 276.

Petavius shows (Jarvis p. 276) that in A. D. 14, where Mr. Thurman puts the death of Augustus, there was no eclipse of the sun of any kind whatever, and that Petavius is correct, is proved by M. Pingre, in the Art of verifying dates, approved by a committee of the French Royal Academy of Science. In this work it is shown that there is but one total eclipse of the sun in a period of eighteen years—from A. D. 11 to A. D. 29. This eclipse took place in A. D. 19.

Augustus, therefore, according to "the truth-testing powers of astronomy," must have died either in A. D. 11 or A. D. 19. Either of these dates are fatal to Mr. Thurman's chronology, and therefore to his arrangements of the prophetic numbers; for to move one point is to move the whole. For instance, if we move the death of Augustus, backwards or forwards, we move the birth of Christ, the cross, the destruction of Jerusalem, etc., the same, and by consequence, the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, and thereby the beginning and termination of the 2300 days, etc.

Is not Mr. Thurman clearly called upon, from all these facts, to clear up this matter if he can, and if not, to give up his theory and arrangement of the seventy weeks and the 2300 days, which many others as well as myself, regard as monstrously absurd? I am deeply interested in the time question, and I believe that we have a clear and unmistakable light on the time of the second advent, which will shine out so soon as a little of the fog of the 2300 days theory begins to pass away.

DR. A. DECKER.

For the World's Crisis.

DIFFICULTIES.

In a former article we presented the insurmountable difficulties which lie in the path of those who would make the "seven times" of Leviticus 26: 28 a prophetic period of 2555 years, and then mould them into a key to unlock Daniel's "time, times and a half" (Dan. 12), and bring forth the unwarranted translation of "time, five times and a half." The main difficulty to which I called attention was the fact that there were four distinct chastisements of "seven times," each mentioned in Lev. 26, and these chastisements of "seven times" each were to follow each other in succession in case of continued disobedience on the part of the Jews; and if one of them was a period of 2555 years, then the others must have been; hence it would require a period of 10,220 years to inflict the threatened punishments, all of which have been deserved by the still rebellious Jews.

I have waited months to be taught how the Jews could be punished so many years if Jesus was coming in A. D. 1868; but no ray of light has been offered. I ventured to suggest that, instead of making the "seven times" a prophetic period, we should give it the sense of seven fold, as though God threatened a second chastisement seven fold more severe than the first, and a third seven fold more severe than the second, and so on to the last. One in reply hides behind the terror of figures thus: 7x7x7x7–2401, and inquires if we can conceive of a punishment 2401 times more severe than the first one recorded? Lev. 26: 15–17. Let Josephus answer in his preface to his history of Jerusalem's destruction (for in that event the last chastisement was inflicted), when he gives the following testimony, viz: "It appears to me that the misfortunes of all men from the beginning of the world, if they be compared to those of the Jews, are not so considerable as they were." From his testimony we may state the case in arithmetical proportion, thus: as 1: 2401 :: misfortunes of all men from the beginning of the world :: sufferings of the Jews at Jerusalem's overthrow.

In the light of this mathematical problem, the idea of intensity in the phrase "seven times" appears less like "intense nonsense" than some suppose. But all this figuring does not meet the questions, How can we make one of four successive chastisements of "seven times" each a prophetic period of 2555 years, and not the others? Where, this side of Jesus' coming, can we find space of time for four such periods? That these chastisements are distinct and successive is evident from the fact that each contains some affliction not mentioned in the others; and each succeeding one is more severe than the preceding. That they are successive is virtually admitted by Eld. Thurman when he says, "The expression 'more,' as used here saying, 'I will punish you seven times more,' declares that they had once been thus punished for their sins." (See "Sealed Book Opened," B. C. 1571, p. 63). Strange it is that, after making two of these chastisements successive periods of 2555 years each, not willing to stretch out time for the accomplishment of the other two, he quietly passes them by without even a look of recognition.

Leaving these difficulties with those who refuse a straighter path, I wish to study out loud in the hearing of the readers of the Crisis the recent and novel exposition of Dan. 8. In a recent article I gave what I believe to be facts proving that the "pushing" of "the ram" can not refer to the plot of Haman to exterminate the Jews. Among those facts were these, viz., 1. The "pushing" of Dan. 8 was successful; Haman's plot was abortive. 2. The "pushing" preceded the "greatness" of the ram; Haman's plot came afterward. 3. The "pushing" was against symbolic "wild beasts"; Haman's plot was against God's people, who are never represented by "beasts." 4. The position of the "ribs in the mouth" and "between the teeth" of the Persian bear denotes wretchedness and degradation, suffering and oppression; the wealth, influence and position of Haman forbid their application to him. But I am for a moment to waive these facts and to suppose that the Sealed Book Opened has given us the true starting point of this vision at Haman's plot B. C. 426, and the true terminus A. D. 1875. If this position be correct, what follows?

1. It follows that Roman history does not terminate till A. D. 1875. The vision before us exhausts the history of Persia, symbolized by the "ram"; the history also of Greece, symbolized by the "goat"; and it exhausts the history of Rome, symbolized by the "little horn." There can be no doubt that the "little horn" symbolizes Rome. Rome in power stood up "in the latter time of their (Alexander's successors') kingdom." Dan. 8: 23. Rome was the nation of fierce countenance that was to besiege Jerusalem until its high and fenced walls should come down. Dan. 8: 23; Deut. 28: 50, 52. Rome took away "the daily sacrifice," and cast down "the place of his sanctuary"; Dan. 8: 2. Rome destroyed "the mighty and the holy people"; Dan. 18: 24. Rome stood up against the Prince of princes; and Rome "shall be broken without hand." This closes the vision, and if the vision ends not till A. D. 1875, then Rome falls not till then.

2. It follows that "the sanctuary" (the holy land, Ex. 15: 17) and "the host" (Israel or God's people) shall "be trodden under (Gentile) foot" until A. D. 1875. "How long the vision . . . to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?"—Dan. 8: 13. "And he said unto me, Unto two thousand three hundred days." If these days terminate not till A. D. 1875, then until that time Gentile feet shall tread down "the sanctuary and the host."

3. It follows that probation for Gentiles shall continue till A. D. 1875. "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Luke 21: 24. From this scripture we learn that Gentile rule in Jerusalem is to continue as long as Gentile probation. From Dan. 8: 13, 14, we learn that Gentile rule in Jerusalem is to continue to the end of 2300 days. If, then, these days terminate not till A. D. 1875, and Gentiles shall tread down "the sanctuary and the host" until A. D. 1875, then probation to Gentiles continues until A. D. 1875; for Jesus in Luke 21: 24 makes Jerusalem's desolation and Gentile probation terminate together.

Therefore receiving B. C. 426 as the true starting point for the 2300 days, and A. D. 1875 as the true terminus of them, according to the Sealed Book Opened, if I believe in Jesus' second coming in A. D. 1868, I am compelled to believe that he will come seven years before Rome terminates her history, and seven years before Gentile rule ends in Jerusalem, and seven years before Gentile probation closes. Who with Rev. 18 and 19 before them can believe that Rome will have any history to write seven years after Jesus comes? Who with Ps. 2: 9; 110: 5; Joel 3: 11, 12; Dan. 2: 44; Rev. 11: 15 before him, can believe that Gentile rule will continue seven years over "the sanctuary and the host" after Jesus comes? Who with Matt. 25: 10, and Luke 13: 24, 25 before him can believe that probation for Gentiles will continue seven years after Jesus comes? Yet these points must be admitted if the vision of Dan. 8 terminates not till A. D. 1875, while Jesus comes in A. D. 1868

Believing as I do the testimony of the Scriptures to be that Rome closes her history before or at Jesus' coming; that Gentile rule in Jerusalem and elsewhere ceases at Jesus' coming; that probation ceases at Jesus' coming; whoever rightly fixes the date for one event, fixes the date for all these events. If the date of one be A. D. 1868, the date of all these must be then. If the date of one be A. D. 1875, the date of the others must be.

I cannot reconcile two distinct dates, wide apart, for this event. I have not yet mentioned half my difficulties in so doing. If any can reconcile them, I patiently wait their attempt. Until they do, definite "time" is as closely sealed as ever, and perhaps it may be afterwards. While we snatch moments of our time to study these questions, let us take heed lest some faithful Nehemiah, intent on building up the waste places, shall have occasion to reprove us, saying, "Why should the work cease?"

TIME HARD TO UNDERSTAND.

Every effort that can be made by the enemy of truth to blind the eyes of the Lord's children, is being made. Not content with pointing to past mistakes in computing prophetic time, as though that had proved untrue the angel's statement, "The wise shall understand," an effort is being made to convey the impression that it would be unreasonable to suppose that the Lord would use astronomy to reveal the time of his coming, seeing so few understand that science—thus leaving the impression that the time argument for 1868 is founded on astronomy. Now this is a perversion of the facts in the case, and simply calculated to throw dust into the eyes of the Lord's children. The argument for the Lord's coming in 1868 is not founded on astronomy, nor is it claimed to be based on that science—very far from it. The argument is strictly a Bible argument, and easy to be understood by the simplest of God's children; but it is supported by history and astronomy—not by Thurman's astronomical computations merely, but likewise by the computations of noted astronomers, (in several instances,) who were strangers to the theory of the Lord's coming in 1868. There is a vast difference between founding an argument on astronomy, and confirming one already founded on the Bible. Many dates which are necessarily involved in chronological researches, are presented in history, and so linked with conspicuous events which occurred in connection with remarkable eclipses, that by the aid of astronomy we are enabled to definitely locate the reign of certain kings, and thus confirm Bible chronology. For instance: History locates the Battle of Actium in the seventh year of Herod's thirty-fourth year's reign, and begins the reign of Augustus Cæsar at that epoch, and also records an August eclipse (twelve years before the battle,) which locates this battle B. C. 31, by astronomical computation, as all admit—different astronomers having established the same fact: and as history gives forty-three years of the length of Augustus' reign, we easily learn that Herod's reign ended B. C. 4, in the twenty-seventh year of Augustus' reign—thus ending the reign of Augustus A. D. 14, Tiberius having been associated with him two years before his death, the fifteenth of Tiberius' reign, thus synchronizing with A. D. 26, in which year Christ was baptized, being thirty years of age—thus enabling us by measuring back thirty years from A. D. 26, to find the time of Messiah's birth—B. C. 5. Here it is plain to be seen how astronomy supports Bible Chronology—the Bible locating the birth of Christ before the death of Herod, whose death is located in B. C. 4 by numerous stubborn historic and scriptural facts.

But while astronomy is used, not as a foundation, but as a support of the time argument, it is susceptible of very clear demonstration without reference to astronomy: for instance, Daniel gives us a measurement of 1335 prophetic days from the setting up of the Papal "abomination" that maketh desolate, reaching to the time when Daniel is to "stand in his lot;" and inasmuch as this Papal power is to rise early enough to "pluck up" three of the ten Roman horns, and as that plucking up work began in 534, it follows that the Papal power rose previous to this date. The man of sin was constituted the "corrector of heretics" in the preceding year, A. D. 533, from which epoch the 1335 years measure to A. D. 1868, as the time for Daniel to be resurrected and stand in his lot. This all can see without the aid of astronomy—even the feeble lambs of the flock can grasp this argument, and comprehend it. Nothing can be plainer than this. That power must have come into existence before this measurement began, and must have come into existence before it could begin its work of plucking up the three horns, and therefore must have come into existence prior to 534, consequently the 1335 years cannot extend beyond 1868. If this were the only measurement in the Bible, it would be sufficient to plant our faith on, and all can understand it without a knowledge of even the first principles of astronomy. But some cold hearted Adventist, who is opposed to definite time, and yet claims to believe that we may know the event by the fulfillment of prophecy, may tell me that I must rely on history for my starting point,—to which I reply, so do you rely on history to prove that prophecy has been fulfilled in the rise and fall of earthly kingdoms, without which you could not even prove the event near, for it can never be proved near till after the rise of these predicted kingdoms, except by history. So reliable history is not to be blindly ignored for the sake of getting rid of definite time.

Much is being said and written on the termination of the prophetic periods, and as some minds seem to think of but little else but time, it may not be proper for me to express any thoughts on the subject. But I have a little anxiety to express some few ideas touching the matter. I will give them in as concise a manner as possible, and leave all to judge of their merits.

The vision of the eighth of Daniel, that embraces the Medo-Persian, Grecian and Roman governments, is undoubtedly 2300 years long; and to my mind the idea is very clear that the seventy weeks, or 490 years, constitute a part of the vision, or 2300 years, which cover the whole territory from the pushing of the ram till the power that desolates or treads down the host and the city is broken or destroyed without hand. The 490 years is Jewish time exclusively, and the rest of the vision, or 1810 years, is Gentile time exclusively. The Jews then must have precisely 490 years to exist as a nation, in which to offer their sacrifices and oblation, after which Gentiles must tread down their city and sanctuary precisely 1810 years.

I think the idea has been very clearly settled by Bro. Thurman in his chronology, that 490 years ended A. D. 65, when the Roman army surrounded Jerusalem, and the judgments of God commenced falling on that people and their city. This being the case, the Gentiles must have 1810 years from A. D. 65 to tread down the city and the sanctuary, for they are to do this work until the "times" of the Gentiles be fulfilled, which end in 1875. Gentile nations then will exist as nations until 1875, and the city will be under their tread till then also; then what will take place in 1875 when that vision of 2300 years ends? See Rev. 11: 15–18. "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were voices in heaven saying, the kingdoms of this world (and what are? Gentile kingdoms,) are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever. . . . And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them that destroy the earth." Now, then, all the above events, it seems to me, do not take place till the close of the vision, or until 1875.

Then, there is no necessity for the church to be looking for Christ in 1866, or '67, or '68, for he cannot come till the judgment, and the judgment is not introduced till the 2300 years end, or till the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ; and Christ does not appear till he judges the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom. So that instead of Christ's coming seven years previous to 1875, he does not come till 1875, and then all the events of Rev. 11: 15–18 will be fulfilled.

In the sequel I think it will be found that the 1335 years of Dan. 12 will end some time subsequent to 1875, in which Daniel will stand in his lot, or inheritance, which is the earth renewed. And I also think that whoever places confidence in the jubilees teaching Christ's coming in 1868, will meet with a disappointment. The fact is, those jubilees constituted a part of the law which Paul says is a shadow of good things to come; and Christ is the end of that law; it expired by limitation; and God never designed them to teach that Christ would come in 1868.

These thoughts appear to me to be truths. Let us all be cautious in our investigations, and not overdo the subject of time, as some appear to, and omit the weightier matters of the "royal law."

LITERAL INTERPRETATION.

NUMBER ONE.

Yes, the literal interpretation is what we want, and what we MUST HAVE. Its importance has been felt by the faithful expositors of God's word ever since that word was given. But this has been especially true at certain periods in the history of the church. When men professing to be leaders of the people, feet to the lame, and eyes to the blind, have valued their own peculiar tenets so much as to wrest the Scriptures from their literal and legitimate meaning, and substitute therefor an interpretation wholly repugnant to their most natural sense, God's servants have felt called upon to reply to such innovations, and to assert the claims of a literal exposition.

Martin Luther, the great reformer, as he is justly styled, when assailing the dogmas of the church of Rome, and contending for the truth, felt, and rightly too, that the only sure foundation for the christian is the literal sense of Scripture. Therefore he expresses himself on one occasion as follows:

"That which I have so often insisted on elsewhere, I here once more repeat, viz: that the christian world should direct his first efforts towards understanding the literal sense (as it is called) of Scripture, which alone is the substance of faith and of christian theology. * * The allegorical sense is commonly uncertain and by no means safe to build our faith upon; for it usually depends on human opinion and conjecture only, on which if a man lean he will find it no better than the Egyptian reed. Therefore Origen, Jerome, and similar of the Fathers are to be avoided, with the whole of that Alexandrian school, which, according to Eusebius and Jerome, formerly abounded in this species of interpretation. For later writers unhappily following their too much praised and prevailing example, it has come to pass that men make just what they please of the Scriptures, until some accommodate the word of God to the most extravagant absurdities; and as Jerome complains of his own times, they extract a sense from Scripture repugnant to its meaning; of which offense, however, Jerome himself was also guilty."—Annot. on Deut.

The case as stated so clearly by Luther, in relation to his own times, is but too sadly true in our day. But it is not because there are no well defined rules to guide us in our interpretations, that such fearful havoc is often made of the Scriptures; these have been given in abundance. The reason evidently is this: either such persons are ignorant of these laws, or, biassed by preconceived opinions, they ignore them and trample them under foot. And they cannot be exonerated from blame either way. For if they are ignorant of these laws, they should seek a knowledge of them before they urge upon the attention of the church a theory at variance with plain scripture. On the other hand, if they are acquainted with these rules, and broach a theory in opposition to them, they are doubly culpable, and like dissembling Peter are "to be blamed." Gal. 9: 11. Both classes are hence "without excuse." Rom. 1: 20. There are many ways by which the truth of God is "changed into a lie," Rom. 1: 25, or rendered contradictory and uncertain.

But in speaking upon this point, we shall content ourselves with noticing a few of the most fruitful sources of misinterpretation. A well known writer speaks as follows:

"One method is, to build up a theory upon mere inferences, irrespective of the vast amount of plain, positive, and pointed Scripture testimony to the reverse.

"Another method is, to gather here and there an isolated text of Scripture, and put an entirely different construction upon them from what the context will admit or justify. Thus, by wresting the connection, and giving the chosen text an unwarranted signification, a theory is easily erected!

"Another method is, to mystically expound the Scriptures—give them a mystical signification, and by thus perverting the Scriptures, any theory can be sustained!

"Another very popular method is, to first arbitrarily assume the premises of a position, and then with an air of independence soar away with the popular wings of conjecture, and after an eloquent display of shrewd abilities to frame together imaginations, pronounce the argument unanswerable,—when indeed we should readily conceive this, but deem them unanswerable, however, only from the simple fact that they contain nothing to answer! Inasmuch as the premises are defective, the conclusions deducted therefrom (let them be ever so eloquent or plausible) must also be erroneous.

"By adopting either of these modes of searching the Scriptures, men may support any theory and prove any doctrine which the wandering conjectures and wild fancies of imagination may induce them to manufacture."

GOOD NEWS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Grant:—I spend part of my time when confined at home in winter in trying to spread truth by writing, and sending works and papers to numerous friends. By so doing I hope to benefit some who never hear our preachers, nor have a chance to see our books. And as I am often made to rejoice in obtaining evidences that I "labor not in vain," I will again send some extracts from letters lately received, so that readers of the Crisis may, with me, "thank God and take courage."

The following is from a young Methodist minister of York State, to whom I have written and given our works.

"Dear Bro. Blain:—I received your kind and friendly note. . . . I cannot say much as to my views on the subject referred to in your letter; but hope I shall hear from you again, when perhaps I shall be better prepared to raise some inquiries, and to state some of my difficulties. Accept my thanks for the pamphlet and paper. I have had your 'Death not Life' some time, but never read it carefully until I had that conversation with you at Buffalo. I may say that my mind at present rather inclines to the doctrine of annihilation. As to the state of the dead after death, and whether there is any such thing as a soul in man capable of existing apart from the body, are subjects which I cannot as yet fathom. As to the doctrine of annihilation, I can see nothing unreasonable in it. And it certainly, as far as we know, cannot be for the good of any created intelligence to continue the wicked in endless misery. I have sometimes started this question for the purpose of drawing out the views of some with whom I have conversed,—'Does Scripture or reason teach any good which is to be the result of the endless life of the wicked in misery?' The almost universal answer would be—that we know as little of God's plans, and the necessities of his government, that we could not know what the good to result would be. I would reply that the question did not propose what we did not and could not know, but what we did know from reason and Scripture. When thus cornered to answer, all have admitted that they know no cause from Scripture or reason why the wicked should live. I do not see that the conscious or unconscious state of the dead is either for or against this doctrine. Either may be true, and this true also."

He raises some queries, to which I have replied. Some remarks of this brother show that he is yet some like the one who "saw men as trees walking"; but I see he has learned truth much faster than many of us did when our attention was first called to these subjects; and I am confident he will yet see more clearly, as his letter shows a capacity, and a desire to investigate, and also a sincere love to God and his cause.

A prominent Baptist minister of our State replies to my letters as follows:—

"Dear Brother,—In reply to yours of recent date, I will remark:

1. In regard to the coming of Christ I believe certainly that this stupendous event is near. There are indications of its proximity which might be easily enumerated, and although so many ministers of the gospel, and others, are incredulous, my faith is comparatively fixed. The coming is clearly premillennial. In fact, the Lord's glorious presence is to give to the millennium its assurance and glory. 'Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly.' The shivered and groaning earth requires its Messiah.

2. In regard to the unconscious state of the dead, I cannot speak with the same assurance and conviction. Still I think it is inferable from many passages of Scripture. But I have not the faculty of penetrating among passages which are apparently a little adverse in their import, though really in harmony, so as to arrive at a conclusion with entire positiveness. I do not feel at liberty, therefore, to proclaim the doctrine of such unconsciousness. The view I take is this,—in either case, the actual result is practically the same. Thus, if Abraham has lain unconscious in the grave for 3,686 years, and is raised to-morrow with all the righteous dead, the entire interval to Abraham is nothing. There is no mark or note of time at all. His first impression on waking is—'I died but a moment since, and here I am in glory.' It is the same with all the righteous dead. To them the resurrection is instantly after death. So practically both views are identical. This is unquestionably perfectly correct reasoning. The same view is presented in Abercrombie's Intellectual Philosophy.

3. In regard to the destruction of the wicked, I am inclined to believe this, though I dare not say I am certainly assured of it. If it be inquired—'Why not arrive at some positive conclusion one way or the other, and not remain in uncertainty?' I can only reply, it is impossible for a man to coerce his own conviction. It is inconsistent with the laws of mind. I am shrouded in some uncertainty, although I think the doctrine of destruction is every way more authorized and tenable than the doctrine of endless misery. Either view is sufficiently tenable as a prospect to the wicked—sufficiently powerful and dreadful to deter from neglecting salvation. To be enduring inconceivable pains for a single year, and then to subside into nonentity forever, is an awful prospect. Who can bear to cease to live for ever, and for ever, and ever? Yet it is doubtless preferable to being and enduring remedilessly and endlessly in anguish.

When it is impossible for me to feel perfect assurance in regard to the teaching of inspiration—I mean in regard to what is precisely and positively taught, I must hesitate in assailing the solemn convictions of many dear brethren and good christians. I feel it to be my duty to preach the terrors of God in judgment and retribution. So much is clear, etc. I am obliged to you for pamphlets transmitted."

Here we see again good progress in the three or four months since special attention was paid to the life and death question. He had seen the coming of the Lord before. But some remarks show the very common difficulty, especially with ministers, namely, a fear or unwillingness to disturb and offend good brethren in the churches by any new doctrine. And doubtless a fear of persecution has an influence, even in preventing as full an investigation as these doctrines demand, though brethren may not be aware of being thus influenced. Nor are they likely aware of the fact that, while they keep their new views to themselves, they are in reality preaching endless torment—hearers supposing they believe their old and published creeds.

Many do not seem to feel that it is a serious matter to hold up, by silence, what they do not believe. "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—James 4: 17. Paul "shunned not to declare all the counsel of God."—Acts 20: 27. I trust time and more study will enable these dear brethren to see more fully the importance of these doctrines; and also give strength to overcome those hindrances to proclaiming boldly the whole truth as they understand it.

DEATH OF AUGUSTUS CÆSAR.

The death of Augustus Cæsar is an important event for aiding us to establish the chronology relating to the baptism and death of Christ. It has been almost universally believed by chronologers that his death took place on the 19th of Aug., A. D. 14. According to some writers, his death was in A. D. 13.

We will now examine the proofs for these dates. We will first endeavor to establish the date for the birth of Christ.

It is certain that Christ was born before the death of Herod the Great, because he issued an order, a short time before his death, to have "all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof," that were under two years of age, put to death, for the purpose of destroying "the young child" Jesus. In the "Manual of Classical Literature," on p. 64, we find the following:—"It is evident from Matt. 2: 13, 15, 20, 21, that Christ was born only some months before the death of Herod. . . . The birth of Christ could not have been later than about the close of the 4709th of the Julian period," which corresponds with B. C. 5.

In the New American Encyclopedia," Vol. 9., p. 128, in an article on Herod, it is said:—"It was in his last illness, while a fearful disease was consuming his stomach and intestines, that he must have ordered the murder of the children in Bethlehem." "His death occurred in the year of the birth of Christ, that event being known to have taken place four years before the date in general use as the christian era."

Dr. Adam Clarke says:—"Our blessed Lord was born the last year of his [Herod's] reign.—Clarke on Matt. 2: 1.

It is very clear, from historical and astronomical facts, that Herod died in the spring of B. C. 4. Dr. Jarvis says in his Church History, p. 357, "As to the year of Herod's death there can be no uncertainty. He was made king by the Romans about July 20th, A. J. P. 4673." He reigned "37 years." These added to the Julian Period 4673 give July 20th, 4710, which, as Dr. Jarvis says in his able work, is "the latest possible date" for the death of Herod, which is B. C. 4.

Dr. Hales says:—"That Herod's death is rightly assigned to the year U. C.* 750, [B. C. 4.] is confirmed from the duration of his reign; for Josephus states, that by the interests of Anthony, Herod was appointed king by the Roman Senate 'in the 184th Olympiad, Caius Domitius Calvinus was Consul the second time, and Asinius Pollio [the first time.] U. C. 714." Josephus' Ant. b. 14, c. 14, s. 5.

Herod "was established in the kingdom by the death of his rival Antigonus, who had been set up by the Parthians, when Marcus Agrippa and Caninius Gallus were consuls at Rome, on the 185th Olympiad, in the third month, on the solemnity of the feast.' U. C. 717."—Josephus' Ant. b. 14, c. 16, s. 4.

Dr. Hales goes on to say, "Such a critical conformity of astronomical and historical evidence, both furnished by an author the most competent to procure genuine information, establishes both; and decides the question that Herod could not have died later than U. C. 750," [or B. C. 4.]—Dr. Hales' Anal. of Chron. Vol. I. p. 19.

He further remarks, "Christ's birth, therefore, could not have been earlier than U. C. 748, [B. C. 6,] nor later than U. C. 749, [B. C. 5.] He then says, "The latter year" is the "most conformable to the whole tenor of sacred history," and to "Chrysostom, Petavius, Prideaux, Playfair, etc."—Hales' Anal. of Chron. Vol. I. p. 190.

Having settled the point that Herod died B. C. 4, and that Christ was born B. C. 5, it may be well to inquire at what season of the year he was born. Dr. Lardner, in his very able and critical work on the Credibility of the Scriptures Vol. i, p. 369, says:—"The latter part of the summer, or the autumn season, seems to be the most likely time of the year for the birth of Jesus."

The Scriptures inform us that our Savior was born when shepherds were "abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night." —Luke 2: 8. It is said this must have been somewhere between April and September. E. Robinson says:—"The birth of Christ cannot in any case be fixed later than the autumn of B. C. 5."

Bro. Thurman presents a very plausible argument to show that Christ was born on the tenth day of the fifth month, [Aug. 14th] B. C. 5. This date is obtained as follows:—The captivity of the Jews at Babylon began on the tenth of the fifth month, B. C. 558. At the end of seventy years, on the tenth of the fifth month, B. C. 488, their captivity ended, in the first year of Cyrus; and sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years from that time must bring us to the birth of "the Messiah the Prince," according to Dan. 9: 25. The 483 years would terminate then, on the tenth day of the fifth month, B. C. 5, which, in that year, would be Aug. 14th. This would make the Savior's birth about eight months before the death of Herod. We cannot see any chance to put the birth of Christ any later than the foregoing facts indicate; hence we will consider this point settled.

The question may arise, can his birth be placed any earlier than B. C. 5? We think there is very clear proof that it cannot. We will give a brief look at the evidence on this point. In Luke 3: 1, 21–23, we learn that Jesus was baptized "in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar," and that "he began to be about thirty years of age." Then his baptism must have been about A. D. 25, because it is certain that the christian era did not begin till about four years after the birth of Christ.

Epiphanius* says:—Jesus was "twenty-nine years and ten months old when he came to baptism:—thirty years old, but not fully." —Epiph. Chap. 16. Let us now reckon twenty nine years and ten months from Aug. 14th, B. C. 5, and see to what year it will bring us in the christian era, and to what year of the reign of Tiberius.

From Aug. 14th to the end of the month are seventeen days. From thence to the end of the year, B. C. 5, are four months, and from thence to A. D. are four years. Now take four years, four months and seventeen days from twenty-nine years and ten months, and we have left, twenty-five years, five months, and thirteen days, or about the middle of A. D. 26, for the time of the baptism of our Savior.

According to the Scriptures, Christ attended four passovers after his baptism, which would make him about thirty-three and a half years of age at the last passover, where he was betrayed. The first passover after his baptism, in A. D. 27, would be in the following spring, when he would be about thirty years and eight months of age. At the second passover, in A. D. 28, he would be about thirty-one years and eight months old; at the third passover, A. D. 29, he would be about thirty-two years and eight months of age; at the fourth passover, in the spring of A. D. 30, when he was crucified, he was about thirty-three years and eight months old; or more exactly, thirty-three years, seven months, and twenty-three days, admitting he was born Aug. 14th, B. C. 5, as before shown.

Eusebius, the earliest church historian, says: "The whole time of our Savior's ministry is proved not to embrace four entire years."—Euseb. b. 1, s. 10, p. 40.

We think Bro. Thurman has very clearly shown that Christ was crucified on Thursday, April 6th, A. D. 30. Three months and six days of A. D. 30 belong to the life of our Lord; then go back twenty-nine solid years, and we arrive at the beginning of A. D. 1. From that point back to Aug. 14th, B. C. 5, where he was born, are four years, four months, and seventeen days, making in all, as before shown, thirty-three years, seven months, and twenty-three days.

* U. C. signifies, from the founding of Rome, B. C. 753.

* Epiphanius lived in the latter part of the fourth century.

Note. The foregoing article is only a preparatory one for fixing the date of the death of Augustus Cæsar, which we hope to do in our next.

SPIRITUALIST'S CONVENTION.

The Spiritualists have appointed a convention, to be held in Boston, the last week in May, which, no doubt, will be of much interest. It is to be held during the Anniversary week. An editorial article in the Banner of Light, April 22nd, shows that they think we have come to the time when they should take advanced ground in political and religious matters, and exert a controlling influence in the world. When referring to the "call" for this convention, the editor says:

"The call is universal. From all parts of the country we are invited to assemble for consultation and action. This convention is, no doubt, the most important one ever called in this country. Spiritualism is taking form. A deep and abiding conviction has fastened upon the minds of the true Spiritualists, that something must be done to correct, or rather counteract, the baleful influences of sectarian theology. A conviction that the position of a new dispensation is not one of mere negations. It must be positive, affirmative. We must build as well as pull down. Nay, we have no right to pull down, only as we do it to clear the way for a more noble edifice.

The dark clouds of war are riven, and the sunlight of peace darts a ray of promise for the future. We are to have, substantially, a new country. We have in the new revelations and inspirations of to-day, a new religion; and this religion is what our country needs and must have. The heavens intend that it should have it: they have done and will do their part. We have a part to act, and we doubt not this coming convention is designed for us to make a new commencement, incorporating with the invisibles. . . . We confess to a profound and reverent belief in Spiritualism. To us it is the all of religion, the summing up of all philosophy; hence, it is to be the regeneration of all human conditions and institutions."

RIGHTLY NAMED.

The following notice we clipped from the Boston Journal, of Apr. 7th, 1865:

"Prof. Norwood's salle diabolique at Music Hall is one of the most popular resorts in the city, and is nightly crowded. It will be seen by advertisement that great inducements are offered to patrons, independently of the presents given away. Performance for juveniles Saturday afternoon."

Salle diabolique signifies diabolical or infernal hall. Observe this is said to be "one of most popular resorts in the city, and is nightly crowded." While such places are "crowded," the prayer meeting is scarcely sustained. Why is this? Because the amusements are the most highly prized. Pleasures are loved more than the Lord, just as the apostle said it would be "in the last days." It is said the time has never been in the past history of our country where so many attended the scenes of amusement as at the present time; never a period before when there was so much extravagance in dress, food, residences, furniture, fine horses and carriages, and every thing else relating to personal display and pride. Let it be remembered that Paul said, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, "that in the last days . . . men shall be . . . proud." The prophet tells us that "all the proud . . . shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. 4: 1. Will it pay, then, to be proud?

The sin of pride is rapidly increasing. And yet, amid all these and evidences that men are growing worse, many professed watchmen are so blind as to tell the people that the moral condition of the world is better now than ever before. Just as the terrible storm of God's wrath is about to burst upon a wicked generation, the cry of "peace and safety" is echoed forth from eloquent lips, sweetly echoing in elegant church buildings, where the fashionable assemble in silks and satins, and the poor find no room. Has not the apostle said, "When they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them?"—1 Thess. 5: 3. And he locates the accomplishment of this prophecy at a period just before the coming of Christ. We think there is no room for doubt but that we are in the time when these scriptures are fulfilling. Let us watch and be sober.

"FICTIONS, SIR."

The following extract from one of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons shows one of the results of a belief in the doctrine that man is naturally an immortal being. It is a part of his address to the sinner:—

"When thou diest thy soul will be tormented alone; that will be a hell for it; but at the day of judgment thy body will join thy soul, and then thou wilt have twin hells; body and soul shall be together, each brim full of pain, thy soul sweating in its inmost pore drops of blood, and thy body from head to foot suffused with agony; conscience, judgment, memory, all tortured; but more, thy head tormented with racking pains; thine eyes starting from their sockets with sights of blood and woe: thine ears tormented with

'Sullen moans and hollow groans,
And shrieks of tortured ghosts;'

thine heart beating high with fever; thy pulse rattling at an enormous rate in agony; thy limbs cracking like the martyrs in the fire, and yet unburnt; thyself put in a vessel of hot oil, pained, yet coming out undestroyed; all thy veins becoming a road for the hot feet of pain to travel on; every nerve a string on which the devil shall ever play his diabolical tune of hell's unutterable lament; thy soul forever and ever aching, and thy body palpitating in unison with thy soul. Fictions, sir? Again I say, these are no fictions, and as God liveth, but solid, stern truth. If God be true and this Bible be true, what I have said is the truth, and you will find it one day to be so.

There is a real fire in hell as truly as you now have a real body,—a fire exactly like that we have on earth in everything except this—that it will not consume though it will torment you."

Is it any wonder that such a horrid doctrine leads men into infidelity, and makes them hate our Heavenly Father? We think no doctrine ever made more infidels than the one of eternal misery. Thank the Lord for the light that now shines upon his word, showing clearly that "the wages of sin is death," not eternal life in misery.

TOO LATE!

Bro. Grant:—This morning I had several letters to mail. I thought I was early and there was plenty of time. So I started. The postmaster was changing the mail when I reached there. I said to him, Here are a few letters I would like to have go out this morning. He said, "Too late, the mail has had to wait now. Cannot do it; would if I could." How these words rang through my ears—Too Late!

That is the way the world is moving on in the arms of ease, saying, Time enough yet! In this way, thousands will have to hear it said, Too Late! The door will be shut. They may and will doubtless beg more earnestly than I did for an admittance, but when once the door is shut it is closed forever. Too late! O! that it might ring on the ears of every son and daughter of Adam. How many professors will have to hear it said, Too late! Some work is left undone. They are found wanting. The Judge has come. The door is shut. In vain they plead for an entrance. Depart, ye workers of iniquity, I know you not!

I fear that some who profess to be looking for the coming of the Lord will not be ready. Many are looking in the future for certain events to be fulfilled, and say the Lord will not come yet; others say in such a time he will come. When the Master says, "When ye see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors."—Matt. 24: 33. Also, "Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is." "Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh; at even, at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning; lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." —Mark 13: 33, 35–37. These texts and many more which might be quoted show the position the church will occupy when he comes.

We are taught by the apostle to be looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Tit. 2: 13. He says of the Thessalonians that they had turned from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. Brethren, soon it will be said, The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. Rev. 19: 7. Let us be ready, for at such a time as we are not aware of, he will come, and then they that are ready will go in and the door will be shut. Brethren, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." Luke 21: 34. We are living in a time that is filling up fast with events that tell, to my mind plainly, the Lord is coming soon. Soon the warfare will be over. Soon the last battle will be fought. Soon the last tear will be shed. Soon in glory we shall reign. By the grace of God, I intend to meet all the loved ones on the other shore. Thy brother who is striving for a home in the new earth, George A. Streeter.

TRUTH ADVANCING.

The following extract from the correspondence of a Methodist minister, will be read with interest.—Ed.

Bro. Grant:—Dear Sir, I am a stranger to you, but I want to tell you a little of my experience. I have been a licensed local preacher for three years past in the Free Methodist church, and have traveled a circuit one year as a supply, and last conference was sent on another circuit. I have been a bitter enemy to the doctrine of the final destruction of the wicked, which I now believe to be Bible doctrine. I used to search my Bible, not to see if these things were so, but if I could not prove them to be false; and I resorted to every means within my reach to disprove the doctrine that is so plain to me now. I have read four different authors on the natural immortality of the soul and eternal torment. I searched Webster's Dictionary for the primary meaning of words, but I found no help from Webster. The more I searched the darker it grew. It was with me as it was with the Jew who was conversing with a christian concerning Christ. After the christian had proved from the Old Testament that Jesus of Nazareth was the true Messiah, he said, "I will not be persuaded by thee, though thou dost persuade me."

I struggled against the light and tried hard to believe the old doctrine; but it had become a settled conviction in my mind that the doctrine of natural immortality and endless misery were not true, and when I was thinking about it I often felt like saying, the doctrine of destruction is true, for these words were in my heart, but I would not yield.

Weeks passed away, and the conviction grew stronger. In my most devoted moments this doctrine would come before me, and I verily believe that I should have backslidden had I not yielded when I did. I felt in my heart that I could not preach eternal torment any longer, so I preached my farewell sermon, and told the people why I did so, and then left the circuit and withdrew from the society. I am still trying to preach the word.

I spent the most of January and February visiting and talking and praying with people, and I found numbers of them that received the doctrine of Life only in Christ joyfully, and I feel greatly encouraged to labor. I think the minds of people are preparing for the reception of this great Bible truth. In the same church that I have belonged to, I know of six others in two little classes (and one of them is a preacher), who believe as I do. I am sure that the doctrine of the natural immortality of all men, and endless misery, is giving place to Bible truth. A. S Cook.

THE PARIAN CHRONICLE.

NUMBER FOUR.

The 43d is the next period offered by Bro. Stevenson, as proof of his position. Being imperfect, it stands thus: "Since Cyrus king of Persia took Sardis and—Crœsus who was de—the—ia—Er—." The deficiencies being supplied by the so called "happy conjectures of the learned," it is made to read thus: "Since Cyrus, king of Persia, took Sardis and apprehended Crœsus who was deceived by the Pythians 284 years"; which, added to 264, gives B. C. 548 for the time at which Cyrus took Sardis. We have before noticed that the former period gave B. C. 605 for the beginning of Alyattes' reign, and that he reigned 57 years and Crœsus 14, in all 71; which subtracted from 605 leaves B. C. 534, which taken from 548 leaves 14; so that the method followed by Bro. Stevenson places the time at which Cyrus took Sardis at the beginning of the reign of Crœsus, instead of the end. But this contradicts the express language of Herodotus, who says that Alyattes reigned 57 years and Crœsus 14. Then is it not very strange that Bro. Litch could have endorsed Bro. Stevenson's theory, and thus to have supposed that such confliction and clashing of authors prove Daniel to have been mistaken in supposing that "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem" there were to be but just 69 weeks. As the period of 284 years, which was supplied by "the conjectures of the learned," places the taking of Sardis by Cyrus at the beginning of the reign of Crœsus instead of the end, we discover that it is too much by just 14 years; which subtracted from 284 leaves 270 for the proper date that should have been given; and 270 added to 264 gives 534 for the time as corrected by the 36th period and by the book of Herodotus. And now if we will but continue Dr. Hales' rectification of the Chronicle, we must from this period of 534 subtract 25 years, which gives B. C. 509 for the time Cyrus took Sardis, the same year in which we have above proved that Cyrus did take Sardis.

Thus the Chronicle, so far at least, instead of proving the incorrectness of the word of God, corroborates and confirms the true Bible chronology.

The next period on which Bro. Stevenson places great stress in proof of the correctness of his theory is the 45th, which being imperfect stands thus: "Since Darius reigned over the Persians, —— Magus —— being dead —— 50— years." By the so called "happy conjectures," this is made to read thus: "Since Darius reigned over the Persians, Smerdis Magus being dead 256 years, which, added to 264, gives B. C. 520 for the first year of the reign of Darius." This is the first date which seems even to have the least appearance of favoring Bro. S.'s position. But while we admit that this has some appearance of favoring him, we discover that it cannot bear the touchstone of criticism. Then if we would "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good," we can first by Ptolemy, and then by the Chronicle itself, prove Bro. S.'s position to be incorrect. Thus, this gives B. C. 520 for the first year of the reign of Darius; and if his reign commenced B. C. 520, then his 20th year was before Christ 501, and his 31st year B. C. 490; in which years the eclipses recorded by Ptolemy are not found; hence this is incorrect. And by the Chronicle we prove this to be incorrect thus: we have observed that the method of reckoning, as used by the author, was not that of reckoning up from B. C. 264, but downward from the reign of Cecrops; that is, from B. C. 1558. And this interval, as given in the Chronicle, from the reign of Cecrops to that of Darius, is 1063 years, which, taken from 1558, leaves 495.

Again we have observed that Troy was taken B. C. 1184, and the interval given by the Chronicle from the taking of Troy to the reign of Darius is just 689 years, which, taken from 1184, leaves 495. We have further proven by the Chronicle, and also by Herodotus, that the reign of Alyattes commenced B. C. 580, and the interval given in the Chronicle between the beginning of his reign and that of Darius is just 85 years, which, taken from 580, leaves 495. Or if we continue the rectification according to Dr. Hales' method, and reduce the period as given at the left hand of the table by 25 years, we get the same period: thus, from 520 take 25, and we have 495. Thus we can abundantly prove that the date as properly given in the Chronicle for the beginning of the reign of Darius, is B. C. 495, which is the very year that we, knowing nothing but the word of God, had given before we had any knowledge of the Chronicle, thus proving that the apostle Paul was correct in supposing that "the Holy Scriptures are able to make" one "wise unto salvation"; and the truthfulness of the word of God, "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths."

We now discover that instead of the name "Smerdis," as added by the "conjectures of the learned," the defect in the Chronicle should have been supplied thus: "Since Darius reigned over the Persians, (beginning 17 years before) Magus being dead 256 years, for his government commenced just 17 years before the death of the Magus."

The next date Bro. S. offers in support of his theory is the 49th epoch, which reads thus: "Since the battle of Marathon was fought by the Athenians against the Persians . . . 227"— which, being added to 264, gives B. C. 491 for the time of the battle of Marathon. Thucydides says "in the tenth year after it, the barbarians came again with the great armament against Greece to enslave it" (b. 1 c. 18.) The tenth year after 491 is B. C. 482. But this cannot possibly be correct, for we are informed by Herodotus that they were celebrating the Olympic games at the time Xerxes invaded Greece. And 482 is the third year of those games; hence the time he invaded Greece must have been at least two years later, that is, 480 instead of 482. But this would be the twelfth year from the date given in the Chronicle, which is positive proof that we must continue Dr. Hales' method of rectification at least as low as the 49th epoch.

As Bro. S. placed so much stress on this (49th) epoch, declaring that it, being perfect, proved the correctness of his theory, we must also emphasize a little here, or call the attention of the reader to the clear and positive proof as given by Herodotus and Thucydides, either of the incorrectness of Bro. Stevenson's method of getting the date by adding the epoch to 264, or the incorrectness of the Parian Chronicle; for one of the two is clearly and positively proven to be erroneous. But as the author of the Chronicle says nothing about this method of adding the periods to 264, or reckoning upward, let us at least give it a fair trial by using that method of reckoning downward, as was employed by the author. The space of time as given by the Chronicle for the interval between the taking of Troy and that of the battle of Marathon, is 718 years. The date as given by Dr. Hales and others for the taking of Troy was B. C. 1184: and if from this we take 718, we have the year B. C 466 for the time of the battle of Marathon, as given by the Parian Chronicle, which is within one year of the time as given in our table of Chronology on p. 244. Hence the Chronicle, so far at least from proving the incorrectness of Bro. Stevenson's position, favors the true Bible chronology.

The next period that was referred to by Bro. S. in proof of his position was the 50th epoch, which being imperfect reads thus: "Since Darius dies and Xerxes—son—reigns 210—1 years." Its defects being supplied by the learned it is made to read—"Since . . . Darius dies and Xerxes his son reigns 226 years," which being added to 264 gives B. C. 490 for the death of Darius and the accession of Xerxes. But according to Ptolemy the death of Darius and the accession of Xerxes was B. C. 485, that is, five years later, and both cannot be correct. According to Herodotus, Xerxes invaded Greece in the fifth year of his reign; so that if his reign had commenced in B. C. 490, we would have 486 for the time he invaded Greece, which cannot be correct; for B. C. 486 is the third year of the Olympic games, while Xerxes invaded Greece in the first year of those games.

Again we have noticed at epoch the 49th, that Bro. Stevenson's method of reckoning by the Chronicle gives B. C. 491 for the time of the battle of Marathon; from which take 490, the time he gives for the beginning of the reign of Xerxes, and we have but one year from that battle for the time of the beginning of the reign of Xerxes; hence his fifth year, at which time he invaded Greece, could not have been more than the sixth year from the battle of Marathon. But Thucydides informs us that the time Xerxes invaded Greece was in the tenth year from the time of that battle; thus proving the incorrectness of Bro. Stevenson's position. But if continuing Dr. Hales' method of rectification, or after the manner of the author of the Chronicle, we reckon downward instead of upward, we will have B. C. 450 for the date given in the Chronicle; and if to this we add ten to supply the deficiencies in the Chronicle we will have B. C. 460 for the death of Darius, which is within one year of the time as given in our table of chronology. Hence a serious error is not detected here.

The next period referred to by Bro. S. was the 52d epoch; and it reads thus: "Since Xerxes joined together a bridge of boats on the Hellespont and dug through (Mount) Athos and the battle was fought at Thermopylæ and the sea fight by the Greeks at Salamis against the Persians in which the Greeks were victorious 217 years." This being perfect, Bro. S. placed much stress on it as proving his position. Therefore we should give it a critical examination. By reckoning upward according to his method, or adding 217 to 264, we have B. C. 481 for the date of the battle of Thermopylæ and the sea fight by the Greeks at Salamis against the Persians, which we can clearly prove to be false; for those battles were fought in the first year of the Olympic games; but B. C. 481 was the fourth year of those games.

If we continue Dr. Hales' method of rectification by reducing this period twenty-five years, we have B. C. 456 for the date of those battles; the very year as given in our table of chronology on page 245. To prove that this is strictly correct, let us reckon downward as did the author of the Chronicle. Thus the interval as given in the Chronicle between the taking of Troy and the battle of Salamis is just 728 years, and the correct date as given by Dr. Hales for the taking of Troy is B. C. 1184, from which take 728, and we have B. C. 426 for the date as given by the author of the Chronicle, according to his method of reckoning downwards as he engraved each period upon the marble. Hence if we could prove the antiquity of the Chronicle, we could prove, first, the erroneousness of the received chronology, and secondly, the strict correctness of our Bible chronology.

The next and last epoch as referred to by Bro. Stevenson was the 53d, which stands thus: "Since the battle at Platæa was fought by the Athenians against Mardonius, the General of Xerxes, in which the Athenians conquered and Mardonius fell in the battle. . . . 216 years;" which being added to 264, according to Bro. Stevenson's method of reckoning upward, gives B. C. 480. Another positive proof of the incorrectness of his position and the received chronology; for it is well known that "Mardonius fell" in the second year of the war, which was the second of the Olympic games; but B. C. 480 was the first year of those games. At the last period, that is, epoch 52d, we noticed that according to that method of reckoning downward as used by the author of the Chronicle, the battle of Salamis was B. C. 456, and since he places the battle of Platæa, in which Mardonius fell, one year later, we have here only to drop one year which gives B. C. 455 for the time at which Mardonius fell, which is the very year given in our table of chronology.

This remarkable harmony of the Parian Chronicle with the true Bible chronology, is an internal evidence of its having been written before the Jews corrupted their chronology; hence before A. D. 65, or the end of the seventy weeks, in which the vision of Daniel was sealed up by an incorrect chronology.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. B. Hoyt.

Bro. Grant:—Enclosed find —— dollars to be placed to my credit for the "Crisis." I will help sustain, at almost any price, this or any other paper that tries to eliminate the primitive faith and doctrines of the apostles from the rubbish of heathen systems and teachings of demons that now so universally prevail. I believe the promises of God are to be received by simple faith, as did Abraham, and that if we are Christ's, then are we Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise; that we are also joint-heirs with Christ in an inheritance which the Scriptures alone describe. The true believers in all ages profess that whatsoever is not read in holy Scripture, nor proved thereby, is not to be required or believed as an article of faith.

For the past ten years, I have been studying the Scriptures as I never studied any book on science, and in connection with the works of our ablest Advent authors. I have examined all the mooted points of doctrine in the original text of the New Testament, and believe, without any doubt, that the gospel age is near its close, that the Bridegroom will soon come, and I want to be ready.

While some oppose Bible chronology with arguments which seem to me irrelevant, I rejoice to see your views are calculated to cheer the desponding. Inward frames of feeling are fleeting and sometimes extravagant, as I have learned from history and observation; so I strive with all my power, and pray God to deliver me from any spirit that does not agree with his written word, and that he will preserve me and all the waiting ones unto his heavenly kingdom. In the apostles' doctrine, steadfastly your brother,

Sandwich, N. H. Aaron B. Hoyt.

From Bro. C. H. Shepherd.

Bro. Grant:—Where are the watchmen upon the walls of Zion? Are they trying to please the people more than God? Do they love the fleece more than the welfare of the flock? Oh mighty God! shield the true watchmen.

While listening to a discourse on the death of a friend, I thought it not strange that darkness covers the land, when the remark was made to the youth, by the minister, "When you look upon your friend in the coffin, and see her laid in the grave, then remember that she is not there, but in the realms above, with the saints praising God." And when it was said in prayer that "since Jesus has died for us, now we could say, 'O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?'" thought I, if this be so, why do people die in such pain? why do we follow them to the grave mourning? Then the word of God answered me—It is not true, the time has not come, but will when Jesus does, and then the dear saints will sing the song—"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Oh, glorious day! Praise God and the Lamb forever! Jesus, come, hasten the time! Yours, in hope, C. H. Shepherd.

From Bro. L. Fancher.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say to the readers of the Crisis, that we as a church have had rejoicing over many sinners that have repented since this year commenced, and some twenty have been added and reclaimed, that we hope will participate in God's eternal kingdom, and enter through the gates into the city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

Dear waiting ones, I want to give you the Bible measurement of this city. Twelve hu-dred furlongs are equal in our measurement to 1500 miles in circuit, and when put in square miles, more than all New England. Then the street is pure gold, as it were transparent glass. Also the city is pure gold, like unto clear glass. Brothers and sisters, according to God's word, who among us will be there and in the city? Rev. 21: 27 will tell you who will not be there,—"And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie, but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." My prayer is, that we may be an unbroken company, joyously waiting for God's kingdom and city to be established in the earth as soon as 1868, or for probationary time to cease. May God help us to be ready. Amen.

Obituaries.

G. G. EDGERLEY.

Died in New Orleans, La., July 15, 1864, George G. Edgerley, aged twenty-five years, four months and seventeen days.

Our brother was engaged in the Sanitary Commission at the time of his death. The following extracts will give some idea of his worth as valued by many friends while sacrificing his health and life to relieve others as agent of the Commission.

Extract of a letter from Dr. E. A. Crane, dated New Orleans, July 20, 1864.—"I am exceedingly pained to be compelled to announce to you the death of one of our most valued agents, Mr. G. G. Edgerley. He returned to this city from Cairo on the hospital transport, N. W. Thomas, convalescent from an attack of measles, contracted during the voyage up the river. His symptoms were neither regarded by himself or others as likely to prove serious, until a few days previous to his death, when by our advice he went to the 'Home,' where we were better able to render him that service, attention and good nursing, which we believed to be chiefly essential to his recovery. While at the 'Home,' he grew rapidly worse, and continued to sink until the morning of the 15th inst., when he quietly and peacefully left us. Mr. Edgerley was always regarded as one of our most valuable and efficient employees, and his loss is one which falls heavily upon us, as also upon the large circle of friends and the many acquaintances he had formed while in the discharge of his duties as agent of the Commission."

A correspondent of the New York Tribune, under date of July 26th, thus alludes to Mr. E.'s death: "The Commission lately met with a serious loss, in the person of Mr. Edgerley, of New Hampshire, who came to this city a year ago and has labored since in the work of Commission with unflagging assiduity and zeal. His loss is much regretted by the Sanitary Commission, and by many friends in this city, as well as among the soldiers whom he had ministered to in the army."

The subject of this notice professed faith in Christ in 1854, and was buried in baptism by the writer soon after. His remains were brought to Meredith Centre, N. H., his native place, for interment, Feb. 24th and buried the 28th, when a discourse was delivered by Eld. H. Bundy at the Freewill Baptist house. By this death loved ones are left to mourn the loss of one whose advantages of learning and the improvement of the past, led them to hope for his society and usefulness in time to come; but he is thus early cut down. May grace sustain. J. G. SMITH.

S. A. TATE.

Died in Hampton, N. Y., March 15th, Mrs. Sarah A., wife of William I. Tate, aged thirty years.

Mrs. Tate had been a professor of religion for about nine years, during which time her life had been that of an exemplary christian. Her death was one of holy triumph. He mind was almost overwhelmed with a sense of what the Savior had done for her. "Praise the Lord," "Glory be to Jesus," and expressions of like import came forth in rapid succession from her full and exultant heart. She said to the writer, "Will you go to my funeral and tell what the Lord has done for me? Do not praise me, but tell them what Jesus has done for my soul."

She leaves a husband and two daughters, whom she exhorted, in language more impressive than often falls from human lips, to meet her in heaven. I trust those appropriate and burning words will not be unheeded, but ere long those who now mourn, will greet her on the other shore.

D. H. LOVELAND.

The subject of the above notice anxiously desired that one of her own faith should preach her funeral sermon, because, as she remarked, she "so loved her hope," but desired the Methodist minister, who so kindly visited her during her sickness, to be present, and tell the people what Jesus had done, which duty he faithfully performed on the day of her burial, which occurred the day after the late freshet. No minister of her faith being able to get there, the funeral sermon was deferred until Lord's day, April 23d, when I discoursed from Job 14: 11, 12, to an attentive congregation.

S. G. MATHEWSON.

ASA T. LORD.

Fell asleep in Levant, Me., April 20, 1865, after a short illness of thirty-six hours, Asa T., son of Bradford H. and Mary Ann Lord, formerly of Lynn, Mass., aged five years, eight months and twenty days.

My last and only child is now laid in the cold grave, there to await the morn of the resurrection.

MARY A. LORD.

RUTH ROBINSON.

Died in Kennebunk, April 18, 1865, Ruth Robinson, aged fifty-six years.

Sr. Robinson died very suddenly of fever, but she was a CHRISTIAN, and fell asleep expecting to be raised when Jesus comes to die no more.

W. H. M.

ABEL R. WHITE.

Died in Springfield, Feb. 8, 1865, Bro. Abel R. White, aged thirty-four years.

I have been acquainted with Bro. White about two years, and quite intimately. The last year of his life in this vale of tears his trials often were severe; his dear companion was prostrated a long time; life was despaired of; but through the mercy of God she recovered, and he rapidly declined, until he sank into the dark, cold grave. I visited him through the whole period of this suffering time, until bereft of reason. He reviewed on that bed of sickness his entire life, lamented his neglect of duty, which he believed was to call sinners to repentance, in the more public capacity, than he had occupied, and for this neglect, he viewed his severe affliction as chastisement from God. Still he felt at peace with the Lord, and expressed a clear evidence of his acceptance with the Lord. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. A. Ross.

ETHAN O. ALLEN.

A. M. MCINTIRE.

Died in Tuftonborough, N. H., April 6th, Alphonso M., son of Bro. Peltiah and Sr. Hannah McIntire, aged nineteen years, four months and twenty-three days.

Alphonso had left his father's house but a few minutes before, for a mill, in which he was at work sawing, and while below, oiling the machinery, his clothes were caught between two cog wheels, where he was instantly drawn in and crushed to death. May the Lord bless the afflicted family. Sermon by the writer. T. W. PIPER.

JAMES SMITH.

Died at Montreal, C. E., March 24th, 1865, James W. Smith, infant son of George and Margaret Smith, aged four months, twenty-one days.

Sleep, baby, sleep, while our lone hearts weep
O'er thy early, dark entombing;
We shall meet again on the evergreen plain,
Where the lilies of Eden are blooming.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Advices of the 26th and 27th ult.

The news by the Nova Scotian of the assassination of Mr. Lincoln was published throughout England on the 26th ult. It created the most profound sensation.

The strongest feeling of sympathy, indignation and horror were universally expressed throughout the country, and those who sympathised with the cause of the South evinced quite as much indignation as the warmest friends of the North. In all places it was the all-pervading topic, and caused an almost total suspension of business, particularly in Liverpool and Manchester.

The Times of the 27th says: "This evening it may be expected that the leaders of the great parties in the House of Commons will take the opportunity of expressing, in the name of the nation, the horror which is everywhere felt at this crime, and of assuring the American people that whatever difference of opinion may exist in this country as to the present war, there is but one feeling of sympathy with them at the loss of an honest and highminded Magistrate."

The London and provincial journals alike describe the intense excitement which the news created, and all unite in warm eulogisms upon Mr. Lincoln and bitter denunciations of the assassination.

The scene on 'Change at Liverpool will not soon be forgotten. The excitement has rarely, if ever, been excelled. Late in the day a requisition to the Mayor was drawn up requesting him to call a public meeting to express the sorrow and indignation of the people.

Hundreds signed it and the Mayor issued a proclamation for a meeting at St. George's Hall on the afternoon of the 27th, to be adjourned to the evening of the same day, that the working classes may likewise have an opportunity of attending. The flags on the Town Hall, and other buildings, and the shipping at Liverpool were displayed at half mast.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies adopted an address, expressing grief at President Lincoln's assassination. The Chamber was draped in mourning in respect to his memory.

Paris letters say that news of the assassination caused a most profound and universal regret and indignation throughout that city.

M. Mason, in a letter to the Index, repudiates the crime in behalf of the Confederate States.

The Liverpool Post of the 27th is printed with its columns in mourning.

The Times says there is nothing in political history that can be remembered that has ever brought forth a more unanimous feeling than this news.

The Daily News says Lincoln has not fallen in a flash of triumph, for no thought of triumph was in that honest and humble heart; but his task was accomplished and the battle of his life won, and in all time to come, among all who think of manhood more than rank, the name of Abraham Lincoln will be held in reverence and love.

The Daily Telegraph says:—"From vulgar corruption, from factious hatred, from the meanest jealousy and uncharitableness, this great Ruler was wholly free. At last came what seemed to be the fruition of his labor, the reward of his patience and courage. He entered Richmond as a conqueror, but he launched no decree of proscription against the South, for the fight appeared to him to be over, and it was not in his large heart to bear malice against a beaten foe."

BELGIUM.

A meeting has been held at Brussels, followed by a great demonstration in honor of the late Federal victories. An immense procession repaired to the American Consul's residence. The Consul received the deputation and made a congratulatory speech. A serenade followed.

ROME.

Vegezzi has offered to the Pope to admit Bishops in the Ancient Pontifical States, and has requested the Pope to recognize the King of Italy's right to appoint Bishops to other parts of Italy, conformable to former usage. The Pope hesitates.

RUSSIA.

The Czarowitz of Russia died at Nice on Sunday. The Czar, Princess Dagmar, and the Queen of Denmark were with him.

DOMESTIC.

Springfield, Ill., May 4. About noon the remains of Mr. Lincoln were brought from the State House and placed in the hearse. The funeral procession was under direction of Maj. Gen. Hooker, Marshal-in-Chief, and Brig. Gens. Cook and Oakes. The military and firemen appeared finely. The guard of honor was the same as during the entire route. The procession was long, including the Governors of seven States, members of Congress, State and municipal authorities, delegations from adjoining States, Free Masons, Odd Fellows and citizens, including colored citizens.

The procession arrived at Oak Ridge Cemetery at one o'clock. On the left of the vault, in which the remains of the President and his son were deposited immediately on arrival, was a platform on which were singers who sang appropriate music. On the right was the speaker's stand.

The vault is at the foot of a knoll in a beautiful part of the grounds which contain forest trees of all varieties. It has a doric gable resting on pilasters, the main wall being rustic. The vault is fifteen feet high and about the same in width, with semi-circular wings of bricks projecting from the hillside. The material is limestone, procured at Joliet, Ill. Directly inside of the ponderous doors is an iron grating. The interior walls are covered with black velvet dotted with evergreens. In the centre of the vault is a foundation of brick capped with a marble slab on which the coffin rests. The front of the vault is trimmed with evergreens.

The Dead March in Saul was sung, accompanied by a band of music, as the remains were deposited.

Thousands of persons were assembled at the Cemetery before the arrival of the procession. The scene was of solemnly intense interest.

The religious exercises commenced by singing a dirge. Then followed the reading of appropriate portions of the Scriptures and prayer. After a hymn by the choir, the Rev. Mr. Hubbard read the last Inaugural of President Lincoln. Next a dirge was sung by the choir, when Bishop Simpson delivered a funeral oration. It was in the highest degree eloquent and patriotic and portions were applauded. Then followed another hymn, when the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Dr. Gurley. The procession then reformed and returned to the city.

Our mournful duty of escorting the remains of Abraham Lincoln hither is performed. We have seen them deposited in the tomb. The bereaved friends, with subdued and grief-stricken hearts, have taken a last adieu, and turn their faces homeward, ever to remember the affecting and impressive scenes they have witnessed.

The injunction so often repeated on the way, "Bear him gently to his rest," has been obeyed, and "the great heart of the nation throbs heavily at the portals of his tomb."

New York, May 3. The Tribune's Washington dispatch has the following items:

Payne, the Seward assassin, has made a confession of his guilt.

A most protracted and important session of the Cabinet took place to-day, the subject being the free trade question. It is understood that the whole system of giving permits to favorites was denounced. There was a decided preponderance of opinion in favor of opening trade in all parts of the South not subject to Union authority.

The address of the Swiss delegation to the President contained the hope that the glorious success of the Union would bear on the preservation of all other sister republics on the American continent; but to the indignation of the delegation, the Acting Sec'ary of State struck that part out, before delivering the address to the President, as irrelevant.

New York, May 4. The Richmond Whig of the 3d had authentic information from South-west Virginia. No portion of Gen. Thomas' force came east of Bristol. The only United States force that penetrated into Virginia was a portion of Stoneman's command, as before stated.

Gen. Echols, commanding all the rebel forces in South-west Virginia, 3000 or 4000 in number, has disbanded his troops. Those living contiguously have returned to their homes. Col. Giltner's Kentucky cavalry surrendered to the United States authorities on the terms granted to Lee. Basil Duke's regiment, formerly Morgan's, has started for the Mississippi, and Vaughan's wild cat East Tennessee cavalry are still at large. The latter are very odious in Virginia for their thieving propensities.

Gen. Early is confined to his bed at Lynchburg with rheumatism.

A report at Richmond said all the silver plate taken from the people of Richmond in the last hours of the Confederacy has been captured by our forces beyond Farmville.

New York, May 6. The Herald's Richmond dispatches represent as existing in Virginia a terrible state of impoverishment among the people, owing to the drafts of the rebel military establishment upon their resources of all kinds. Thousands of people are kept from starvation by supplies from the United States Commissaries. Farmers are without implements and seed to do their planting, and unless they are speedily given them there will be no forthcoming crop.

It is understood that the Army of the James will remain in Virginia for the present. The 25th corps, colored troops, will encamp at City Point.

The principal citizens and local officials of Richmond are coming forward and taking the oath of allegiance.

Washington, May 4th. Information has been received here that Louis Napoleon endeavored some months ago to persuade the British Government to enter into a secret alliance on American affairs, guarantying to each other, respectively, possession of Canada and Mexico against any invasions from the United States. The British Minister, after deliberation, declined the alliance, declaring that Great Britain was only disposed to retain her American colonies so long as they desired to retain their allegiance to the Home Government.

There are good reasons for believing that offers are now being made to officers and enlisted men receiving honorable discharges here, to leave for Mexico as emigrants, with the understanding that on their arrival they are to enter the Republican army. Gen. Ortega and his son are directing this movement, and they make liberal advance payments in gold to such officers as are recommended to them by a board entrusted with the selection. It will not be many months before Maximilian will have to return to Paris.

There are many speculations as to the course that the Canadian authorities will pursue respecting the conspirators who are known to be in that province. Should the Colonial Government hesitate about giving them up, the home authorities may exercise its imperial authority.

Copies of the full confession of Harold, and of the equally important evidence found on the person of Booth, were sent to London by the steamer which sailed yesterday.—Cor. Journal.

ENGLISH SENTIMENT.—The London correspondent of the Philadelphia North American says the news of the fall of Richmond has produced a profound feeling of disappointment there. This feeling is universal, being entertained alike by the humble tradesman and the aristocracy. All sympathize with the South. Only in the manufacturing districts is there any warm feeling in favor of the North. There is no arguing with Englishmen on the subject. It is vain to put forth facts and personal testimony, for the people will not believe. Two positions are assumed and adhered to with dogged obstinacy and stupidity. These are, that the North began the war, and that the South had a right to secede. Another favorite sentiment is, death to Gen. Butler.—Journal.

☞ A French company have secured the exclusive right to construct a canal across the Isthmus, from Chili. It is learned there is a prospect of a rupture between that country and Spain, growing out of claims made by the latter for treatment of her fleet on its way to Peru.

The reported capitulation of Montevideo to the Brazilian forces is confirmed, and Gen. Flores has assumed the supreme power in Uraguay under the protectorate of Brazil, thus terminating the war.

A new revolution has broken out in Bolivia headed by Gen. Belza, who has been proclaimed President. President "Metgarogo" immediately marched on La Pase, and after a struggle took possession ofthe town. Gen. Belza was shot and peace restored.

The whole Southern portion of Peru is in a state of revolution against the government. There is little hope that the President will be able to maintain his position.

THE RUSSIAN EPIDEMIC.—The Russian Minister of the Interior has drawn up a statement in regard to the true character of the epidemic. It is a fever of the typhoid class. It is attributed to the consumption of unfit vegetables, the immoderate use of spirits made from grain, and the overcrowding of the working population. One death among eleven patients has been the average rate. During the last six months of 1864 and January, 1865, the whole number of deaths was 2000 in excess of the return of the preceding year.

THE RECRUITING SERVICE.—The Provost Marshal General has issued an order directing a material reduction in the force of employes in provost marshal offices, a termination of all contracts for lodgings and subsistence of recruits, substitutes and drafted men, the release of all men drafted under the last call and not mustered into service, and for a rigid and sweeping curtailment of expenses throughout all the branches of his department.

CHEAP LIGHT.—A London lamp manufacturer claims to have invented a lamp which will burn magnesium wire. By burning a strip of zinc in conjunction with two strips of magnesium, he is able to reduce the cost of the light two-thirds. He predicts that in the course of time it will be possible to illuminate a street a mile long at the rate of a half-penny an hour. The people who are paying three or four dollars a thousand for gas will like to see Mr. Grant's prediction speedily realized.

ITEMS.

☞ Detachments of colored troops have been sent out from Richmond to the battle fields in the neighborhood, and employed in the burial of the Union dead lying there exposed for a year past. Several hundred skeletons were put under the sod upon the battle grounds of Gaines' Mill and Cold Harbor, and other battle fields are being attended to in their turn.

☞ Secretary Seward has had an ingenious contrivance adjusted to his fractured jaw by a New York dentist, which holds the several portions in place, and there is reason to hope that in three or four months the fracture will have become knitted together. He is recovering the use of his right arm, and his bodily health is good.

☞ A Washington despatch says the Canadian authorities have intimated that in the event of a demand by our government for George N. Sanders, Beverly Tucker, and William C. Cleary, they will be surrendered to the national authorities.

☞ Gov. Pierpont expects to leave Alexandria in a few days with his State Government for Richmond. Judge Underwood will at once open the United States Courts, and will proceed immediately to try indictments for treason without any favor.

☞ President Johnson's proclamation offering rewards for the arrest of the leading conspirators meets with general approval. The prisoners already captured are confined in the Old Penitentiary, at the arsenal, and are well guarded.

☞ A musical festival of German singers is to take place at Dresden next summer. No fewer than 16,000 are already announced, of whom 8,000 will come from Saxony, and 3,500 from Prussia. It is thought that 24,000 in all will attend.

☞ There are in Europe forty-three reigning sovereigns. Of these nine belong to the Roman Catholic religion, but one of that number is excommunicated; thirty-two are Protestants, one is of the Greek church, one is a Mahometan, and the forty-third is the Pope. The excommunicated sovereign is King Victor Emmanuel.

☞ A man has built a house of iron, air and water tight, filled with sawdust between double walls, and ice in the garret, in which he preserves fruit, vegetables, butter, oysters, and all other kinds of food from one year's end to the other.

☞ The largest carpet manufactory in the world is that of Crossley & Sons, at Halifax, England. This firm has a capital of one million six hundred and fifty pounds sterling, and employs 4,400 people.

☞ Since the recent orders for the reduction of expenses, The Quartermaster's Department has effected a reduction of its daily expenses of ocean and coastwise trade $3,000 per day, which is saving more than $1,000,000 per month.

☞ Postmaster Gen. Dennison has ordered that the post office in Maryland known as Surratt's, be henceforth called Robeysville, thus expunging the name of the assassins from the books of the Department.

☞ A correspondent says the confession of Harold, and documentary evidence found on Booth's body, fastens beyond cavil the plot and its full sanction upon Jeff. Davis and his Canada Commissioners.

☞ A letter from Jacksonville, Fla., April 27th, says Gen. Jones had held an interview with the rebel Gen. Vodges for the purpose of arranging for the surrender of the rebel forces in Florida.

☞ Robert Ould, Capt. Heath and other rebels who had control of money and valuables sent to the Union prisoners, have been arrested by order of Gen. Grant.

☞ Jeff. Davis was reported, at last accounts, nearly surrounded, in the mountains of South Carolina, by cavalry. His escape is deemed next to impossible.

☞ May 5th, was the 44th anniversary of the death of Napoleon I., which took place at St. Helena, May 5th, 1821, at eleven minutes before six o'clock, P. M.

☞ Prussia proposes to expend £7,500,000 in creating a formidable fleet. Ten iron-clads are to be built. She has got to borrow the money to do it with, however.

☞ Of 22,000 rebel prisoners at Richmond, all but four have taken the oath of allegiance.

☞ Montreal, C. E., May 6. Sanders and Tucker have both disappeared. It is reported that they have gone in the direction of Halifax.

☞ Jeff. Thompson surrendered his whole army to Capt. Mitchell May 2d.

POSTPONEMENT.—As at present prices the proposed tent would cost nearer $600 than $500, and as not quite $400 is pledged, it is thought best to wait a little for the fall of cotton. Meanwhile let others pledge. Those who have pledged need not send yet, but retain the money till further notice.

THE CHRISTIAN AND HIS ECHO.

(Re-published by request.)

True faith, producing love to God and man,
Say, Echo, is not this the gospel plan?
The gospel plan.

Must I my faith and love to Jesus show,
By doing good to all, both friend and foe?
Both friend and foe.

But if a brother hates and treats me ill,
Must I return him good, and love him still?
Love him still.

If he my failings watches to reveal,
Must I his faults as carefully conceal?
As carefully conceal.

But if my name and character he blast,
And cruel malice, too, a long time last;
And if I sorrow and affliction know,
He loves to add unto my cup of woe;
In this uncommon, this peculiar case,
Sweet Echo, say, must I still love and bless?
Still love and bless?

Whatever usage ill I may receive,
Must I be patient still, and still forgive?
Be patient still and still forgive.

Why, Echo, how is this? thou'rt sure a dove,
Thy voice shall teach me nothing else but love.
Nothing else but love.

Amen! with all my heart then be it so;
'Tis all delightful, just and good, I know;
And now to practice I'll directly go.
Directly go.

Things being so, whoever me reject,
My gracious God me surely will protect.
Surely will protect.

Henceforth I'll roll on Him my every care,
And then both friend and foe embrace in prayer.
Embrace in prayer.

But after all these duties I have done,
Must I, in point of merit, them disown,
And trust for heaven through Jesus' blood alone.
Through Jesus' blood alone.

Echo, enough! thy counsels to mine ear
Are sweeter than to flowers the dew-drop tear;
Thy wise, instructive lessons please me well;
I'll go and practice them. Farewell, farewell.
Practice them. Farewell, Farewell.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER EIGHT.

To BRO. W.:—Dear Brother,—It was with much pleasure we received and perused your last letter. . . . . What momentous and opposite events have transpired within the brief space of one week! The merry ring of the bells, the booming of the cannon, the floating of flags, the exultant shout, the brilliantly illuminated dwellings, all combined to give expression to the thrill of joy which so universally pervaded the heart of this nation at the fall of Richmond and the surrender of Lee! But the week ushered in by such acclamations of delight closes on a sorrowful people. Thousands have felt the terrible shock as sensibly as though one from their own fireside had been suddenly smitten down. Strong-minded men are not ashamed to manifest their deep sorrow by the falling tear. The drapery of mourning hangs from those dwellings so recently lighted up in token of gladness. How great, how sudden, how awful the change! It impressively teaches us the uncertainty of all things earthly. Yet this may prove to be as great a blessing as the former.

"God moves in a mysterious way, and we who see through a glass darkly cannot comprehend his mighty workings. "Behind a frowning providence," he often "hides a smiling face." One thing we do know, for we have seen it most clearly evinced; i. e., that He makes the wrath of man to praise him. The South sought to establish the vilest system that ever saw the sun, upon an immovable basis. God so overruled as to make their own efforts for this end the very means of its entire overthrow. They sought the ruin of those who have pleaded in the behalf of the oppressed; but the sword has entered their own heart. The North has flourished and prospered, while the desolating scourge has visited their own fair land, trampled down their cultivated fields, burned their treasures, desolated their homes, and left them scathed, blackened, overthrown, ruined, with their idol torn from their fond embrace forever. Yes, thank God, slavery is abolished! The millions of down-trodden and oppressed ones, who have toiled these many years beneath the cruel lash of the hard-hearted task-master, while their cries have been poured into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, are free at last. And their masters have been made the instrumentality, under God, of accomplishing this great work! Yet to them no praise is due. They intended evil, as did Joseph's brethren when they sold him to the Midianites; but God overruled it all for good.
His wonders to perform;"

The slave master is now beginning to reap, in some degree, the bitter fruits of his sin. Long time have they been treasuring up wrath for themselves; now it is being poured out. Long time have they been filling the cup of fury that is now put into their hands to drink; and deeper, far deeper still must be their draughts. Possibly, yea, very probably, they might have escaped all that full measure meted out for them, if Lincoln had not fallen. His great heart of benevolence would have prompted him to forgive and pardon those whose great crimes against the laws of their country call justly for retribution. He has finished that part of the work assigned him by God; till then no assassin had power to harm him. Just at this critical point, when the rebels are in the power of the Union army; when the flush of victory calls into exercise the kindly feelings of the heart; when mercy and forbearance are manifested toward rebels and traitors to a degree unparalleled in the history of any war;—Lincoln, the humane, the noble-hearted, the friend of his foes, falls, and a man of sterner make—true to his country from his heart's core (if report be reliable), but with no false sympathy for traitors, no pity that will bias him to undue lenity,—is chosen to fill the vacant chair, and finish up the work begun.

This last cruel thrust from the slave power has roused anew the ire of the North, and fanned it to an intenser glow; and now the South will be made to know that she has overshot the mark in causing the death of one who would have pleaded in her behalf as none other will. The dagger will recoil and penetrate her own vitals. In this matter, as in the other, it will be manifested that she is the heaven-appointed instrument of bringing about her own retribution. "Is there evil in the city, and the Lord hath not done it?"

I recognize an Almighty power ruling among the nations of earth, accomplishing his own wise purposes, and none can hinder. Nebuchadnezzar was driven forth from among men, to dwell with the beasts of the field, until he should be led to acknowledge the fact that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will."

My brother, we who have taken heed unto the "sure word of prophecy" can see in all this the fulfillment of the prophetic word; and just beyond these turmoils and strifes—the shaking of earthly kingdoms—we behold the coming of a King who shall rule in righteousness, and peace shall extend from sea to sea, and from the rivers to the ends of the earth. Our King is immortal; no treacherous hand shall destroy our Sovereign; He is alive forevermore; and the subjects of his kingdom will never die.

What need now of watching unto prayer, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping. As we cannot determine the precise time of the Nobleman's return, we are told to watch continually. The tokens are too evident to be mistaken that he is soon to come, and, if ready, whether found on our pillow asleep, or in the field at work, the angels will gather the elect to meet him in the air.

May we be found of him in that day, with girded loins, and well-filled and brightly burning lamp; so shall we be guests at the marriage feast. M. D. W.

"MINISTRATION OF DEATH." "Ministration of the Spirit."—No. 1.

THE SABBATH.

What does ministration mean, as found in 2 Cor. 3: 7, 8? Does it mean dispensation? So it is rendered in the Emphatic Diaglott. What does dispensation mean? Webster defines it thus:—"4." . . . "A system of principles and rites enjoined; as, the Mosaic dispensation; the gospel dispensation; including, the former, the Levitical law and rites; the latter, the scheme of redemption by Christ."

This word ministration, or dispensation, is from the Greek diakonia, meaning service, etc. The idea, then, of this matter appears to be this:—The great constitution, or the organic law of the Mosaic dispensation, was "written on stones,"—and is "done away." But the superior constitution, or organic law of the gospel dispensation, is written with the "Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshly tables of the HEART."

The first, or Mosaic dispensation, was a dispensation of "DEATH"; because death, physical and immediate death, inflicted by man, was the penalty for the violation of any one, or of all of the "the ten commandments," or articles of the first, or Mosaic constitution.

The second, or gospel dispensation, is a dispensation of the "SPIRIT"; because it is a dispensation of mercy and grace; and the penalty for a violation of any one, or of all of the ten commandments, or articles in this second or gospel constitution, is to be "the second death"—inflicted by the Lord himself, when the day of probation is passed,—when even those who suffered physical death, for a violation of the law during the dispensation of "death," must, at the resurrection of the wicked, be "cast into the lake of fire," with all others who may have lived and died sinners, during the entire period of man's probation.

The reason why we say the organic law or ten commandments of the dispensation of Death is "done away," is because the penalty of physical death is done away. To illustrate: Suppose a state or nation at any time should pass a law against ten particular criminal acts, the penalty for a violation of either to be death by hanging by the neck until they were dead. Then, after a series of years, this same state or nation, being differently situated, finally pass another law against the same particular criminal acts, the penalty for the violation of either or of all these ten commandments should be imprisonment for life, instead of death by hanging. Would not the first law be repealed? Surely it would. But still there would be a law against the same ten criminal acts; but the old law, or dispensation, would be "done away." So in the case now under consideration. The old law of the decalogue, which was during the dispensation of death, is "done away," because the penalty has been changed. But still there is a new law against the same ten criminal acts; and this law is written "on fleshly tables of the heart"; but the penalty for a violation of this law will be inflicted by the righteous Judge, at the final retribution of ungodly men.

But, says the objector, there is no law written in the heart! Please hold a moment; let the apostle Paul speak:—"This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them."—Heb. 10: 16. Here the "Holy Spirit" says that the Lord will put his "LAWS INTO THEIR HEARTS, and in their minds will I write them." And let Mr. Objector just take notice that this is under the "new covenant." And all reasonable minds must acknowledge that the "Holy Spirit" is a competent "witness to us."—Heb. 15.

What says the "Spirit"? "THE LETTER KILLETH." Is it not strange, then, that any one living in the dispensation of the "Spirit" should ask for a law written with "ink" to direct them which day is to be kept for the Sabbath? The law, which points out the day for "us" to observe as the Sabbath, is "WRITTEN NOT WITH INK" (2 Cor. 3: 3), but with the "SPIRIT OF THE LIVING GOD"—"IN THE HEART." Why, then, look for a law written in the New Testament for keeping the Sabbath? That law written with "ink" is "done away"—it is "DEAD." The law written with ink relates to the "seventh-day"; but that law which is written in the heart relates to the "first day ofthe week" (Sabbaton).

Remember—"The letter killeth." The penalty of that law which has been written with ink was death—the transgressors of that law were to be stoned to death. This shows why we have no particular code of laws, written with ink, in the N. T. (as were written in the O. T.) for keeping the Sabbath. The law for keeping the Christian Sabbath—"the first day of the week," or "LORD'S DAY"—is not written with ink, but is written by the "Spirit"—"in the heart." Hence, we can see what harmony there was with the apostles and early christians, as shown by their practice, in keeping "the first day of the week." They needed no precept directly written with ink; neither do we. Their exampleis enough for us.

But let us prove that the gospel dispensation is a dispensation of the "Spirit." It so begins. Christ was begotten by the Holy Spirit. Matt. 1: 18, 20. (In treating upon this topic, I shall use the term "Spirit," instead of "Ghost," for this word is invariably from the Greek pneuma, and should always be rendered Spirit. The term "Ghost" is a little too much like ghostly Roman Catholicism for the use of Protestants.) Christ was not only begotten by the Spirit, but the Father put his Spirit upon him, that he might "show judgment to the Gentiles." Matt. 12: 18. Christ also cast out demons by the Spirit. Matt. 12: 28. The Spirit anointed Christ to "preach the gospel." Luke 4: 18. T. M. PREBLE.

AN EXPOSITION OF JOHN 11: 26.

"Whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die."

My conviction is, that the commonly received exposition, that Christ here refers exclusively to those who are alive and remain unto his coming, is incorrect. While it is a fact that those who are Christ's at his coming who are alive, will not die, yet I am fully persuaded that in the text before us, Christ does not refer to that portion of his followers only, but to his followers then living, and all who ever should live after them. One text will at once give us the true exposition, and that is in John 8: 51,—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, if a man keep my saying he shall never see death. Every one that keeps Jesus' saying, that is, who believes that he is "the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the word," "shall never see death."

There is an apparent discrepancy, when comparing these statements of Christ with the words he uttered in the 25th verse, which are, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." Yet Christ does not contradict himself, and prayer, study and thought will, through the Holy Spirit, remove all difficulty in the matter.

All are willing to admit that the words "perish" and "perisheth" have a restricted sense, and an absolute sense also. When applied to the wicked, as in the text, "The wicked shall perish," we understand the word has its fullest or absolute sense. It is the punishment, or end of the wicked. But in the texts, "There is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness;" "The righteous perisheth and no man layeth it to heart;" we understand the words to be used in their restricted sense; because the righteous will not perish as the wicked: for Christ says plainly, "I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish."

So with the words "die," "death" and "dead." When applied to the righteous they are to be understood in their restricted, or accommodated sense. The case of Jairus' daughter illustrates this point. Christ said, "The maid is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead." See Luke 8: 53. Also, Luke 20: 37, 38,—"Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for they all LIVE unto him." Hence there is a wide difference between "the death of the righteous," and of "the soul that sinneth." One is temporal, the other eternal. Thus the first is used in the restricted sense, the other in its absolute.

The language in the text was addressed by Jesus to Martha, the sister of Lazarus. Lazarus believed that Jesus was "the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world," hence, according to the promise of Jesus, he should "not see death." There was another class, who would not believe, to whom Jesus said, "Ye shall die in your sins." John 8: 24, 51. When the sisters of Lazarus sent Jesus word concerning the sickness of their brother, Christ answered, "This sickness is not unto death, but that the Son of God may be glorified thereby." Jesus remained two days longer in that place, then went with his disciples into Judea, saying unto them, our friend Lazarus sleepeth. I go that I may awake him out of sleep." His disciples, weak in the faith. "thought that he had spoken of taking of rest in sleep." "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." Doubtless Christ used the word in its accommodated sense. At the grave, Jesus said, "Thy brother shall rise again. Martha said unto him, I know that he shall rise in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never DIE. Believest thou this? She saith unto him, yea, Lord; I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world."

By reading all of the eighth, ninth, tenth and eleventh chapters, we get the whole truth of the matter, as I have endeavored to explain. Hence the dead believer "is not dead" in the absolute sense of the term, "but sleepeth." And those who are living, and believers in Jesus, "shall never die;" "shall never see death," for though we fall asleep, yet "all live unto him." PASSING AWAY.

How often, while passing through this vale of tears, are we reminded that all things earthly must have an end. Here we have friends whom we love, and we feel that we would cherish them forever. But time rolls on, and we behold them laid on beds of sickness. Day by day we watch the flickering flame of life, sometimes brightening for awhile, as though death, sure of his prey, delighted to mock us with vain hopes. Soon the last hour comes. We gather around the bedside, and listen with bursting hearts to the voice we shall hear no more on earth; we watch the last struggle, and they are gone. We may weep, but death will not be moved with tears; and we are made to feel how slender are all earthly ties.

We look upon nature in her robe of green, and earth is beautiful. But the chilling winds of autumn sweep over the land; leaves fall and flowers wither—earth's beauty has fled. We visit the halls of mirth; youth and beauty are gathered there, and pleasure, with syren song, holds her mingled cup to their lips, and whispers them that life shall be one long dream of happiness. Again we tread those halls, but they are deserted now. Where are they who were wont to gather here with mirth, and song, and dance? Some have gone the way of all the earth; the forms which once moved so lightly to music's joyous measure, are mouldering in the dust. Others have drained the cup of pleasure, and turned with loathing from its days of bitterness. Where now is the happiness which she has promised her votaries? It has passed away forever!

We look upward. The spacious firmament, with its myriads of rolling planets, is above us; and shall not these remain unchanged? We search the volume of Inspiration for an answer; and He who stretched out the heavens like a curtain, has told us by the mouth of his prophet, that they shall be rolled together as a scroll, and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine.

In vain, then, do we look around us for some object which shall not pass away; we find none within the reach of mortal vision; and as we search, we are reminded of the words of the poet:

"From the stars of heaven, and the flowers of earth;
From the pageant of power and the voice of mirth,
From the mist of the morn on the mountain's brow;
From childhood's song and affection's vow;
From all, save eternity's endless day,
There breathes but one record—'passing away.'"

In view, then, of these things, would it be wisdom to place our affections upon the beautiful things of earth? Shall we be satisfied with the few restless, fitful gleams of pleasure which they can only give? Surely, we would wish for joys more enduring than these; and He who has warned us of the mutability of all these things, has also invited us to set our affections on things above, to look, with an eye of faith, at the things which are not seen; as pilgrims and strangers to abstain from fleshly lusts; then shall we ere long behold the earth clothed with immortal beauty. Then shall death alarm us no more, nor disappointment ever shade our perfect peace. Which will we choose? Earth, with its vanities, which must soon pass from our sight? O let us rather choose the things which are reserved in heaven for us, ready to be revealed in the last time. Let us strive to gain an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and which shall never fade away. LOUISA BARBER.

SPIRITUALISM.

DEAR READER:—I hope it will not be amiss for me, in this delusive day, to give you a word or two of caution through this interesting harbinger (the Crisis), to beware of those erroneous and soul-destroying people that call themselves Spiritualists, who are setting nets and stratagems to ensnare and destroy you. I have heard so much of those astonishing things that the Spiritualists can relate by conversing with disembodied spirits, that it has induced me to visit many of their meetings and table sittings for my own satisfaction, and I have found, by strict observance, they can do nothing or say anything to benefit mankind. But it is true they can do, like the Egyptians, many marvelous things, by art, magic and deception, which can neither profit the soul of man or give him any instruction. It appears that their chief aim is to destroy the efficacy of the Bible, and to build up a theory of their own to make it appear they can proclaim more truth concerning heavenly things by the influence of disembodied spirits with which they converse. As I have already said, they are trying to build up a theory of their own making, to gratify their sinful appetites. Dear reader, I could give you thousands of their delusive words and arguments to ensnare, if I had time and space.

I hate the tempter and his charms,
Detest his flattering breath,
The serpent takes a thousand forms
To cheat our souls to death.

Beware of their delusion! J. ELKINS.

A FEW WORDS ON THE TIME QUESTION.

I am interested on this question, and think all should be, for time is in the Bible, and Paul says "All Scripture . . . is profitable." I was not in the time movement of '43, but watched the signs of the times in those days with considerable interest, as I have neighbors who fully believed this dispensation would at that time close, and they be taken up to meet their Lord in the air. The '54 time table I was satisfied was erroneous, and so wrote to Joseph Turner, editor of the Watchman, at Hartford, Conn.; but the fever was so high at that time they did not like to publish anything against their theory; so I could not get a hearing. From that time until the present I have been watching for light on this matter.

Last August at our campmeeting at Amboy, Eld. Thurman delivered some discourses on time as revealed in the Bible. I bought his work on Daniel, and have given it as thorough an investigation as I am able, and have come to the conclusion that it gives some light, at any rate. His ideas concerning the jubilees I consider substantially correct. I think he gives the best solution of the 2300 days and seventy weeks of Daniel I have ever seen. The sixty-nine weeks, sixty-two weeks and one week covenant I think are correct. I am no astronomer, and of course cannot fathom that part of the work, so have watched for others who are able to do so and show his mistakes if he has made any in that department. So far I do not see as they have made much headway; how it will be in the future I cannot say.

On the other hand, there has been an evident effort on the part of some (and from a source least expected) to frown down the work because of past mistakes. Now I feel confident I speak the sentiments of my Advent brethren at the West, when I say that frowns unaccompanied by arguments, weigh very little with us here. We are pretty well accustomed to them from those who do not hold with us, and if they have any weight would have demolished the cause here long ago. But their insufficiency to convince is apparent; so we say to all, give us the reasons why and wherefore, for we consider it better, if need be, that some mistakes be made if so be we get right at last, than by neglect to have that day come upon us unawares. And I cordially endorse the remark made by Bro. Wellcome in the Crisis of April 11th, that "it is a fearful position to be ignorant of the time and seasons which God has revealed for the instruction and guidance of the church."

Having said thus much on the above points, I will now remark that I do not consider it wise to adopt any position or argument until it has been thoroughly weighed. I do not believe in plunging headlong into a theory and looking up the reasons for it after I get in. Not at all. Bro. Thurman lays no claims to infallibility, and I suppose is willing to have his work fairly criticised. I confess there are some things in it I think incorrect, to two of which I will now briefly refer. One does not affect his chronology, the other may. The first I consider a serious typical mistake.

On page 67 of his work he says, "During this jubilee only two tribes and the half tribe of Manasseh returned unto the land of their possession." Now this cannot be correct, for if the typical church did not get their possession, the anti-typical will not; for the antitype follows in harmony with the type. God promised them an inheritance in the land of Canaan, did he not? And Joshua says, (Josh. 23: 14), "Not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you." So they did obtain it, and it is well for us they did, as I will now show. It is evident from Numbers 32: 21, 29, that the inheritance of the two and half tribes was appointed them on the east side of Jordan, as a type of the inheritance of those who believed on Christ under the law, referred to in Heb. 11th. This being so, unless the sky kingdom doctrine is true, although it was appointed to them, they could not get it until the land on the other side of Jordan was all subdued sufficiently for the purpose of dividing into inheritances, which was done, and according to the record in the 22d of Joshua, they all went to their inheritance together. So Paul might truly say concerning the antitype, "they without us should not be made perfect."

Again, on page 123, he says, "The Turks, Chaldeans, Egyptians, etc., from the earliest times used the year of 365 days." I cannot find any evidence thus far that the Chaldeans or the Egyptians used just 365 days for a year, neither more nor less in hours or minutes, as they must have done to make the "seven times" of Moses and Daniel harmonize with the rest of his chronology. But on the other hand I find the historian Rollin, in his article on the arts and sciences of the Egyptians, says, that Diodorus Siculus correctly observes, "their year from the most remote antiquity was composed of 365 days and six hours." And if so with them, why not with the Assyrians and all other nations who use the solar year? The Babylonians, we are informed, were skilled in astronomy, and who knows, as they used the solar year, but what they used the six hours, and perhaps the eleven minutes, also necessary to make the full year? If so, 2555 days would not span the seven times or years of Nebuchadnezzer in Dan. 4th, by almost two days, which would make the same difference in years when applied prophetically.

THE PEARL OF PEARLS.

"Have you a heart of calm repose
Amid the world's loud roar;
A life that like a river flows
Along a peaceful shore?"

Reader, have you found this pearl of pearls? Have you, brother, sister? Do you enjoy God's smiles, his special grace? If not, there is a cause for it, a wherefore, evidently. Something, surely, is in the way on your part; There must be. God is always ready, always willing, always desirous to open heaven's windows, shower down the choicest blessings, life evermore, bestow angels food, fill you with joy unspeakable, and full of glory—a peace that passeth all understanding. Beloved, look about you, search, and see why it is that clouds and darkness are round about you, why it is that you are not on the mountain top of free grace, why it is that God's smiling countenance is witheld—his converting, purifying, sanctifying grace? God is lovely, infinitely! his mercy is superabounding. Happiness perfect, is his; and this same perfect happiness he confers on all who will let him.

He waits to do it. Jesus, the Lamb, has purchased the gift, full salvation, the inner life, the cleansing power. The fountain for sin and uncleanness is open wide: "Go wash and be clean." This entireness of the gospel is for us, for you, for whosoever will accept it on the terms of the gospel. Beloved, what is the matter? what hinders the blessing in your case, the overflowings of the Almighty, the assurance of faith, the entire cleansing' purifying process? Look and see; search and see; "delay not, delay not." Take the lighted candle of God's truth; go into the deep, secret recesses and windings of your inmost soul; see if no idol is there; see if you do not discover some little speck or dark spot of the selfish secreted. "My son, give me thy heart;"—the heart, yes, the whole heart; the sacrifice must be complete. The best lamb of the flock must be chosen, without spot or blemish—a pure burnt-offering.

"If ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil? offer it now to thy governor; will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the Lord of hosts." "Ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick, thus ye brought an offering: should I accept this at your hand? saith the Lord." Mal. 1: 8. "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you. And I will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters; saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6: 17.

"Come, Holy Spirit, breathe that peace
Which flows from pardoned sin;
Then shall thy soul her conflict cease,
And find a heaven within."

"ASK AND RECEIVE."

"Every secret fault confessing,
Deed unrighteous, thought of sin,
Seize, oh seize the proffered blessing,
Grace from God and peace within."

What shall we ask for? SALVATION. Do you feel that you are a poor sinner, exposed to the fearful punishment that awaits the enemies of righteousness? Do you tremble for fear of the fiery indignation that shall devour the adversaries? Then confess all your sins, and pray to GOD to take away all iniquity, and receive you graciously, for the Redeemer's sake.

Resolve solemnly to live as GOD requires. Give up all for Him who died for you. Lay all on the altar that sanctifieth the gift. Seek counsel of the most faithful christian friend you can find. Search the Scriptures, and pray for the HOLY SPIRIT to reveal the truth to you. Ask of Him who "giveth to all liberally, and upbraideth not." "Ask and receive" the gift of GOD, even life eternal.

PRUNING FRUIT TREES.

The custom very generally prevails of pruning large apple trees in the autumn or winter month, and it has received the sanction of Downing and some other distinguished horticulturalists. But whoever will make a careful experiment and test the question by a comparison of results, cannot fail to be satisfied that the spring or early summer is the best season for operations of this kind. In this climate, trees pruned from the middle of April to the middle of May, or even as late as the first of June, will almost invariably heal over very rapidly in consequence of an immediate deposit of sap over the wounded bark. In the fall or winter, when the sap has ceased to circulate, the cut edge of the bark dries and becomes partially decayed, the wood cracks, and as the healing process of nature can only commence below the line of decay, an ugly looking stump is the consequence, which requires another application of the saw to render the tree at all symmetrical.

To induce early fruitfulness in the pear, the limbs should be shortened in midsummer, by cutting back the new wood in proportion to the vigor of its growth, or by pinching off the terminal shoots of the most thrifty branches in the earlier stages of their developement.

If we desired to form a new head to a peach tree we should prune it severely in the early spring, cutting it down even below the first lateral branches if necessary, in order to secure the shape desired, and during the summer we should use the knife freely in heading down the new shoots.

The growth of suckers at the roots of the apple and pear is often induced by such neglect in transplanting as permits the roots at the base of the trunk to be exposed to the air and light. Frequent and close pruning is the only remedy that we are aware of, and the application of more soil where the deficiency is apparent.—Plowman.

LINES.

Dedicated to Bro. J. L. Rich.

Another pair of eyes have closed on earth,
Another mortal form has suffered dearth.
Another pair of feet, tired of wanderings,
Have faltered on the plains, where Death his sickle swings.
Another home is sad, life's chain is incomplete,
Another laborer sleeps sweetly at Jesus' feet.
That weary one will rest until the rising Sun
Shall to the world proclaim the resurrection morn;
When orphans shall rejoice, and friends their loved ones greet,
And widow's hearts sing praise, and all their Savior meet.

BUSINESS RULES.

Hall's Journal of Health speaks of two gentlemen, forming a firm in New York, who began business together, and so have amicably and pleasurably continued to the present hour, never having made even an approach to "failure," never having had occasion, in any of the commercial crises which have, like a ruthless tornado, swept thousands of our most active and wary merchants into hopeless bankruptcy, to ask even "an extension."

1. They began with the inflexible determination never to purchase what they could not conveniently pay for on the spot.
2. Never to ask or give credit for any article purchased.
3. Never to abate a penny on any article offered for sale.
4. Never to sell an article which was not in all respects what they claimed it to be.
5. Never to give short change or a kind inferior to the note offered.
6. Never to allow a clerk to remain an hour who should exhibit the slightest discourtesy or want of patience to any customer for any cause.

Here are six business rules which are worthy of being committed to memory by every youth in the nation who has an ambition to become a successful business man.

HEART-KINDNESS.

That quality which is called "heart-kindness" is the result, not of natural disposition, but of the uprooting of self, and planting therein the love of our neighbor; it is the spirit which wins its way in life, which tinctures all our actions with good will, and which makes the happiness of all around us. An unselfish spirit is essentially a loving one.

"How is it that you live so happily with your husband, who is so exacting?" was asked of a lady, whose smiling face and sunny temper made her widely beloved.

"Because I have never yet found anything worth contending for," she replied.

"And," said her friend, "do you always give up your will to your husband's?"

"Certainly not, where principle is concerned," said the lady; "but if it is on indifferent matters, what does it signify?"

A WORD TO THE LITTLE FOLKS ABOUT THE TOADS.

Well, my little friends, here we are again.

Last I told you about birds, but now I want to say something about the homely, clumsy looking toad.

Many children suppose that because the toad is so homely and clumsy that he is good for nothing, and I have seen children that would pester them, and even kill them, at the same time they loved handsome creatures on account of their beauty which are not half so useful.

Toads like birds are among the best friends of the farmer and gardener. They usually hide away in their nests during the day, but after sundown they creep out in search of food. They live on worms, grubs and other insects which destroy plants, and if you watch them you will find that they go about in pursuit of game as slily and cautiously as cats, and are, in their manner of catching insects, quite as spry.

When looking for worms the toad seldom hops, but creeps along as cautiously as a cat, moving on one foot at a time, and when he gets within a hop of a worm or bug he springs, darts out his long round tongue nearly or quite as long as your finger. His tongue is covered with gluten or slime, and when it strikes the worm or bug the gluten sticks to it and the toad draws it into his mouth.

Last spring worms destroyed plants in my garden every night. In the morning I replaced them with other plants, but the next night the worms would cut them down. I at last placed several toads among the plants, and gave them turfs and grass roots placed on stones, so that they could creep under for shelter and there was not another plant injured.

Now, children, when you find these industrious little fellows in your garden, give them something for a shelter and depend upon it, they will pay their house rent punctually, by destroying the worms while you are asleep. They go for protection, but all they ask is a shelter from the hot sun and the storm; give them this and they will work for nothing and find themselves, and thank you as well as toads know how to.

You should never despise anything because it is homely, for such are often the most useful. And so it often is with homely people.

Some despise people because they are not handsome though they are not near so good. I hope you will remember this lesson and never worry nor harm anything because you are not pleased with its looks, but prove it and see what good it is capable of doing, and then prize it according its real worth.

D. F. NEWTON.

HUGH MILLER, THE NEWSBOY.

One morning, last October, a little boy knocked at our door, and asked to see "the gentleman of the house." So he was ushered into our breakfast-room, where the family were at breakfast.

"Well, my little man," said my husband, "what do you want this morning? Do you want some breakfast?"

"I did not come for nothing for breakfast," answered the boy in a low, sad voice; though his hungry eyes looked wistfully at the bountifully-supplied table.

"Well, what is your name?" said I.

"Hugh Miller. ma'am, if you please;" and I did not come to beg; I came to borrow."

"To borrow!" I exclaimed; "and what can we lend you?"

"I want, very much, to borrow three dollars; because, you know, Jack Simpkins has run away, and I can have his place as newsboy, if I can hand out three dollars on the start; and I have not got but five cents."

"Well, that is a great idea,—this borrowing money? What made you think of coming here?" said my husband.

"Well, sir, it is strange," he answered; "but somehow it came into my head last night, as soon as I found I could have Jack Simpkins's chance, that I would begin at the upper end of this street, and go to every house in the block, and tell them what I wanted; and I thought somebody might help me; and this is the fourth house,—and I have not borrowed a cent yet."

We then inquired where he lived; and learned also, that his father and mother were both dead, that he had two sisters who sewed for the support of the family, and that he had run errands, and did what little things such a boy could, until, as he said, he had "Jack Simpkins's chance" at the newspaper office.

My husband handed him out three dollars, and told him he would not give it to him, he should only lend it; and he could pay it back as soon as he was able. Then we gave him a nice breakfast, which he seemed to enjoy very much, when he took his cap, and making a low bow, thanked us for our kindness, and left the house.

"That is a noble boy!" said my husband: "we shall hear from him again."

Three days after this, a little note was handed in, enclosing twenty-five cents, and written in a cramped hand, "Now I owe you $2.75."

Three days after, another twenty-five cents; then in a few days came fifty cents; and in three weeks the whole three dollars was paid up. My husband went to the news-office where he was employed, and told the man there about the three dollars. The man seemed very much pleased, and said, "He is an honest lad, and I would trust him with untold gold."

I went round to see his sisters, and found them very poor, and working very hard; but all was as neat and clean as possible. I gave them some shirts to make, and other sewing, and paid them liberally for the work.

By and by, it happened that our little newsboy "changed his beat," as he called it,—that is, he distributed his papers in another part of the city, and our street came within his "beat;" and he left our papers twice a day at the door.

We often called him in, and talked to him; and he seemed very much interested in the family. Cousin Lucy was visiting us, and she was very sad. Her only brother was at the war, and she could hear nothing from him. One day Hugh came to the door, and said, "Please, I want to see Miss Cousin Lucy. Miss Lucy, ma'am," he said, "see here,—your brother is alive and well; and he is coming home." And he handed her a paper, in which it said, that Capt. Lewis Curtis, of such a regiment, who had been very long missing, had been taken prisoner, but was now released, and on his way home!

"Why, ma'am," said Hugh, "I have read every paper since I heard about your brother; and see, now I have got it."

Cousin Lucy felt very grateful to our newsboy; and she told him to come again the next afternoon, when he was at leisure; she wanted to see him. So he came; and she took him to a tailor's shop, and had him measured for a nice suit of clothes, which he keeps for his best,—for Sunday wear,—as he always attends church and Sabbath School.

I think Hugh Miller will grow up to be a noble man. He will not want for friends. He is honest and faithful over the few things committed to his trust. He lives in the fear of God; and he has a warm, generous nature, which makes all trust him. He began right, and I think that is the only way to prosper.—Well Spring.

A WORD TO BOYS.

We find the following "word to boys" in one of our exchanges, and particularly recommend its perusal to our young readers. Get it by heart, lads: Who is respected? It is the boy who conducts himself well, who is honest, diligent, and obedient in all things. It is the boy who is making an effort continually to respect his father, and obey him in whatever he may direct to be done. It is the boy who is kind to other little boys, who respects age, and who never gets into difficulties and quarrels with his companions. It is the boy who leaves no effort untried to improve himself in knowledge and wisdom every day—who is busy and attentive in endeavoring to do good acts towards others. Show me a boy who obeys his parents, who is diligent, who has respect for age, who always has a friendly disposition, and who applies himself diligently to get wisdom, and to do good towards others, and if he is not respected and beloved by everybody, then there is no such thing as truth in this world. Remember this, little boys, and you will be respected by others, and will grow up and become useful men."

PRAYER.

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire."

Thou great God of love and of infinite mercy,
Who rulest in justice in heaven supreme,
Whose omnipotent wand is obeyed by each planet,
On whose crown the bright jewels of peace ever gleam;

We as creatures of clay would ourselves bow before thee—
We know we're unworthy, and wilt thou forgive?
With our hearts filled with sorrow and grief we implore thee
For a deep saving grace that will teach us to live.

We would thank thee, O God, for thy past benefactions,
That thou hast befriended a poor dying race,
In giving thy Son and the gospel exaction,
To lead man from death to the substance of grace.

Accept our deep thanks, O thou God of salvation,
For the blessing of health that has cheered our rough way;
O! grant us still further the great consolation,
Of life, health and peace, in the soon coming day.

We would not fear the trial of evil or sorrow,—
Upheld by thy hand we would dash it aside,
And looking forward to thine own blessed morrow,
O'er the "dark heaving billow" in triumph we ride.

Yes, O God, we believe, and the thought unbelieving
We would cast, with thy help, from our sorrowing hearts,
And then the rich peace of a triumph receiving,
Our souls warm with joy that thy knowledge imparts.

May thy kingdom soon come, and the splendor attending,
When the poor saint of God shall with wisdom be fed,
And shall enter the earth filled with glory unending,
With our Jesus as Captain, a Savior, a Head.

Through his name we have asked, thou hast given permission;
By his blood would we plead, and to thee would commend
Our every right cause; wilt thou hear our petition?
And thy name shall have glory and praise without end.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD.

I shall endeavor to prove the resurrection of the wicked. In doing so, I will adduce nothing except the most unequivocal testimony.

The following text proves conclusively the resurrection of two classes to opposite destinies. "And MANY that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."—Dan. 12: 2. Both classes awake. Nothing is gained by reference to the following version, viz.: "Multitudes of sleepers shall awake; these to everlasting life, and those to shame and everlasting contempt." To supply the ellipses, it would read thus: "These (that awake) to everlasting life," and "those (that awake) to shame and everlasting contempt." The same verb must be supplied for each noun when divided, which is used for both when united. The verb awake agrees with the noun multitudes. It must also agree with each division of these multitudes. There is no other verb with which to supply these ellipses. And if one is negated both must be. Thus: These shall NOT awake, etc., and those shall NOT awake, etc. But in as much as this yerb is not negated in its first occurrence, it is not admissible to negate it when repeated as the predicate of the same subject. And in as much as this adverb is not in the original, I protest against its use by uninspired men. It does not, as some affirm, follow because both classes shall awake, that, therefore, they shall both awake at one and the same time.

I will next introduce the testimony of our Savior. He teaches in the most explicit manner the resurrection of the good and the bad. See John 5: 28, 29. At the 25th verse he affirmed that the time was at hand "when the dead should hear the voice of the Son of God," and should live. This was literally fulfilled in the resurrection of Lazarus and others. The Jews marveled at this asseveration. Christ then said: "Marvel not at this, for the hour (Greek, hora, period or time) is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth: they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." Both classes hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth.

At the 25th verse Christ said that the hour was coming, and the hour then was at hand when the dead should "hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." Those of the dead who heard the voice of the Son of God, at the time of which he spake, lived. Those also who shall hear his voice at a future, or coming time, shall live also. According to our Savior's promise, all of the dead who hear his voice shall live. According to the 25th verse, all the good and all the bad shall hear the voice of the Son of God. Therefore, all the good, and all the bad in the graves shall live. Hence, both classes come forth to receive their reward, or to suffer their punishment. The fact that one class comes forth to life, and the other to condemnation, does not contradict the statement going before, that they that hear shall live. Had our Savior said that both classes should be raised to life, then there would be no contrast between the destiny of the good and the bad. But inasmuch as life is the reward of the obedient, and is not the punishment of the disobedient, our Savior must use a term in reference to the wicked, which will distinguish their punishment from the reward of the righteous. LIFE and CONDEMNATION are used in reference to the good and the bad in the present tense by our Savior. John 6: 47. John 3: 18. And yet it will not be affirmed that both classes did not possess life at the time this language was used. One was a subject of the promise of life (1 John 2: 25,) and the other under the sentence of condemnation. This being the position of these two classes, how appropriate to represent one as being raised to receive the life promised, and the other to suffer the infliction of the sentence of condemnation threatened.

It does not follow, because the time is approximating in which the good and the bad shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and shall live, that therefore, they shall both hear and live at the same period of time. A thousand years may intervene between the resurrection of these two classes, and yet the time in which both shall live be approximating. The literal resurrection of a part of the dead to whom our Savior referred at the 25th verse, is a sample and pledge that the classes referred to at the 29th verse, will be the subjects of a literal resurrection also. Otherwise there would be no analogy between the dead who should hear the voice of the Son of God and live at that time, and those who should hear his voice and live at a future time.

I would not overlook the objection urged by some against the wicked being raised to life, viz.: That all to whom the Son shall give life will receive his own life, which life was derived from the Father. Verse 26 is quoted to prove this point. It reads as follows: "For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." That the Savior in this verse refers to those whom the Father had raised from the dead, and those whom he had given the Son power to raise from the dead also, will appear from the 21st verse, which reads thus: "For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Were those quickened from the dead by the Father, or the Son, raised immortal? Certainly not. Christ was the first dead man raised immortal and incorruptible.

If it should be affirmed that Christ's life, at the time he quickened dead men to a mortal life, was mortal also, then I would beg to ask the following questions, viz.: 1st. Was not the Father immortal when he quickened the dead? If so, he must either have given them a mortal life as he gave to Adam, and through him to the millions of his posterity. If the latter, then the objection falls to the ground. Hence, 2d. The text quoted by the objector only proves that the power by which the Father had quickened the dead, was given to the Son, through which to quicken whom he will. 3d. Did not the apostles derive their power to raise the dead from Christ after his resurrection to immortality? If so, was the immortal life of Christ communicated to all whom the apostles raised from the dead? 4th. If the Father and the Son, both being immortal, have raised dead men to mortality in the past, why may they not in the future? The same principle would be involved in an immortal being giving a mortal life to one dead man, that would in giving a mortal life to millions more. Who believes that the immortality of the Father or the Son is transmissible?

In reference to the nature of the spirit birth, by which we become children of God, and the children of Christ in fact, I would refer the reader to article No. 3, in a late series of articles, in which it is demonstrated that regeneration is not simply a resurrection from the dead, but a change of the righteous living and dead from corruption to incorruption, and from mortality to immortality. All who have been or will be raised from the dead, therefore, have not been and will not be changed from mortality to immortality. The objection, therefore, is not valid.

I will next introduce the testimony of the apostle Paul, Acts 24: 12, 13.—"But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, (1) believing all things which are written in the Law and in the Prophets. And (1) have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." In reference to which testimony please observe,

1st. Paul positively declares that the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust was his hope; and that they (the Jews) allowed it. There is no way to avoid the force of this asseveration of the Apostle. There is no alternative left but to endorse this positive affirmation of the Apostle, or in the most pointed and palpable manner to contradict his statement. If it should be affirmed that the phrase "of the dead," is marked by good authority as doubtful, still the Apostle's unequivocal testimony remains unimpaired. It would then read, "I have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust." Omitting, therefore, all that can be claimed even as doubtful, still the hope of the Apostle embraces the resurrection of the unjust as well as the just. I have, therefore, as good authority from this testimony to deny the resurrection of the just, as any man on earth has to deny the resurrection of the unjust. It does not change Paul's hope in the least to change the statement to read thus: "They have hope which I allow." It matters not whether Paul endorsed their hope, or they his; the conclusion is the same.

2d. The original word rendered hope occurs just thirty times, and is rendered confidence eighteen times, and hope twelve. In every instance where it is rendered hope it may be rendered expectation, and express the complete sense of the inspired penman. The sense is true of the Greek word elpis. Now it does not follow because Paul expected the resurrection of the unjust, that, therefore, he desired it. We may have confidence to believe, or expect calamities to come upon ourselves or others, which we do not desire.

3d. It does not follow because Paul believed the Law and the Prophets, and believed also in the resurrection of the unjust, that, therefore, the Law or the Prophets expressly taught this doctrine. The resurrection of the just is not expressly taught in all the promises made to Abraham, and referred to in the burning bush to Moses; and yet, according to our Savior, the resurrection of the dead was taught. How? Ans. As an essential prerequisite to the fulfillment of the promises made to Abraham. Just so in the Law and in the Prophets, as has been shown; the resurrection of the wicked is necessary to the infliction of the penalty for personal transgression denounced for them. For positive evidence of the reliving of the wicked, I would refer the reader to my last article on Rev. 20th chapter.—Harbinger.

For the World's Crisis.

GOD'S KINGDOM NEAR.

All things around us proclaim the kingdom of God to be close at hand; and is there not a great work for us to perform, in order to obtain an inheritance in that kingdom? Are we prepared for the day to dawn, when that great event shall take place? Are we prepared to hail that day with joy and not with grief? These are important questions. We are making our preparations for eternity, let us make them sure.

In order to be prepared, we must be humble at the feet of Jesus and truly devoted to God and his cause. We must labor, not only for our own salvation, but for the salvation of the perishing around us; for we see the world lying in wickedness; we see those whom we love, and are bound to us by the dearest ties of nature, going down the broad road to destruction; and is this not enough to arouse us to action? Let us never be disheartened; let us ask ourselves the questions, have we done all that lies in our power to save them from impending danger? do we watch for every opportunity to do them good? do we improve the talent which God has given us, though it may be small,—yet we shall be called to give an account of the use we make of it. Do we embrace every opportunity of speaking a word for Christ? do we warn the ungodly around us, and entreat them to flee from the wrath to come?

Let us remember that time is short, and what is done must be done quickly. We must enter into the service of the Lord with all our might, mind and strength, for the Lord will accept of no half way devotion. Let us be diligent and work while time shall last. Let us gird on the whole armor and fight manfully the battle of the Lord, for we know we have a Captain who will be sure to lead us on to victory; the battle will be very severe, but it will be a short one. We see the prize just a little in the distance, and is it not a prize worth fighting for? It is a kingdom whose ruler will be the eternal God, whose dominion will be the entire globe. God grant that we may be found ready and waiting, when he shall make his appearance, to enter that heavenly kingdom, where pain and sorrow, sickness and death will be felt and feared no more. Let us be watchful, prayerful and faithful, that we may say, "Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us." Then we may hope to hear the words addressed to us,—"Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord." Hoping to meet you in God's kingdom, I am your brother in Christ,

For the World's Crisis.

PROPOSITIONS THAT CAN BE SUSTAINED.

I. "Soul" and "spirit" are not synonymous. Proof. Isa. 57: 16,—"The spirit shall fail before me, AND the souls which I have made." 1 Thess. 5: 23,—"I pray God your whole spirit, AND soul and body be preserved blameless unto the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." Heb. 4: 12,—"The word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit." In 1 Thess. 5: 23, it will be seen that the same distinction is made between "spirit and soul" that there is between "soul and body"; and by the following quotation it will be seen that "soul" and "spirit" can be divided, if they are one.

II. "If man is a compound being, he is composed of three entities instead of two." This is self-evident, from the fact that "soul" and "spirit" are not one—are not used interchangeably, either in the original or in translations. The word ruach, rendered spirit in the Old Testament, is found four hundred times in the Hebrew text, and is not once rendered soul. Pneuma, the corresponding Greek word, rendered "spirit" in the N. T., occurs three hundred and eighty-five times, and is never rendered soul. Nephesh, the word rendered "soul" in the O. T., is found seven hundred and fifty-two times in the Hebrew text, and is not once rendered spirit. The corresponding Greek word (psuche) is found one hundred and five times in the N. T., and is not once rendered spirit. Therefore, if it can be proved that the soul is an immortal entity, existing independent of the physical organism, it does not prove that the spirit is; and if the spirit can be proved to be such, it does not prove that the soul is; and if it can be proved that both are, it only proves that man is in possession of two immortal entities instead of one! Is this the position our modern D. D.'s wish to take? Surely, it is the conclusion their premises drive us to, and they cannot get out of the dilemma.

III. "The soul and spirit do not go to the same place at death." Proof. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Eccl. 12: 7. Mark, "the spirit returns unto God"; hence it has been there before. Was it an intelligent entity before it came from God? If not, will it be such when it returns to him? Poor school this to send immortal spirits to!! The word here rendered "spirit" is ruach; the same word occurs in Ps. 104: 29, and is a great help in explaining this. "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath (ruach), they die, and return to their dust."

But if the spirit was an immortal entity, as argued by orthodoxy, then "it returns to God." Now the question is, "What becomes of the soul?" No one can expect his soul to be in any better situation than that of the Son of God, surely; and by reading Ps. 16: 10, and Acts 2: 27, it will be seen that his soul slept in hell (sheol, Hebrew; hades, Greek; virtually, the state of the dead). Therefore, soul and spirit are divided asunder in death; and, taking the theological view of hell, and the theological view of soul and spirit, it brings us to strange conclusions, I must confess. One immortal entity (the spirit) goes to God, while the other (the soul) goes to hell!!

IV. "The soul is subject to death—has been killed by human agencies." Proof. Joshua 11: 10, 11,—"And Joshua at that time turned back, and took Hazor, and smote the king thereof with the sword: . . . . and they smote all the (immortal?) SOULS that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly DESTROYING them; there was none left to breathe: and he burned Hazor with fire." Ezek. 18: 4,—"Behold, all SOULS are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth IT shall DIE." James 5: 20,—"Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his ways shall save a SOUL from DEATH, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

V. "If there is no resurrection of the defunct body, there is no future life." Proof. 1 Cor. 15: 16, 18,—"If the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised. . . . Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." How can that be if they are singing doxologies in the presence of God? The Psalmist says, "In thy presence is fulness of joy." Strange way to perish indeed,—to enter the fulness of joy! Eccl. 9: 5,—"The living know that they shall die; but the DEAD know not any thing." Orthodoxy says, "The living know that they shall live forever, and the DEAD know ten times as much"! Solomon, then, must have been a Millerite! Eccl. 3: 19,—"For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; EVEN ONE THING BEFALLETH THEM; yea, they have all one breath (ruach spirit: do beasts have an immortal spirit?); so man (in death) hath no pre-eminence above a beast: . . . all go to one place." Do beasts go to heaven or hell torment? If not, then men do not; for "both go to one place." Ps. 146: 4,—"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; IN THAT VERY DAY his THOUGHTS PERISH." By this it will be seen that "thought is the result of organism"; and just as soon as the organism is dissolved, the "thoughts perish." This is also demonstrated by a "certain thump on the head," which will at once cause a "cessation of thought." Can it be possible that a little harder one would set the thoughts to running more actively than ever? "If a little thump will cause a man to lose all knowledge," will a harder one, which would knock out his brains, make him wiser than ever? Strange theology!

VI. "Immortality is only attained by patient continuance in well doing; is to be put on at the resurrection." Proof. Rom. 2: 7,—"To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." 1 Cor. 15: 51–53,—"Behold, I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound; and the dead (in Christ) shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

VII. "The saints do not get their reward until the resurrection." Proof. Luke 14: 13,—"When you make a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and you shall be blessed; for they cannot recompense you; for you shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Surely, if christians are recompensed for anything at death, it should be for deeds of charity. 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8,—"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 1 Pet. 5: 4,—"And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." This does not look much as though they get the crown at death. Rev. 11: 18,—"And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great."

VIII. "The wicked are not punished before they are judged, and they are not judged till the Lord comes." Proof. Job 21: 30,—"The wicked are reserved to the day of destruction; they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." 2 Pet. 2: 9,—"The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." Acts 17: 31,—"Because he hath appointed a day, in which he will judge the world." When is it? 2 Tim. 4: 1,—"I charge thee, therefore, before God, and our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick (living) and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." 1 Cor. 9: 5,—"Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the LORD COMES."

IX. "At the day of judgment the wicked are destroyed, or die the second death." Proof. Rev. 21: 8,—"But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death." Ps. 37: 38,—"But the transgressors shall be destroyed together." Verse 20,—"But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Ps. 104: 35,—"Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." Oba. 16,—"They shall be as though they had not been." Ps. 146: 20,—"The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy." Mal. 4: 1,—"For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts 3: 19–21.

LITERAL INTERPRETATION.

NUMBER TWO.

We have said that definite rules are given which we are to use in our interpretations; and we shall now present them in the language of some of the most eminent writers. We have already quoted Martin Luther's ideas upon the subject, and will now consult Bishop Jeremy Taylor. He says:

"In all the interpretations of Scripture, the literal sense is to be presumed and chosen, unless there be evident cause to the contrary. The reasons are plain; because the literal sense is natural, and it is first, and it is most agreeable to some things in their whole kind; not indeed to prophecies, nor to the teachings of the learned, nor those cryptic ways of institution by which the ancients did hide a light, and keep it in a dark lantern from the temeration of ruder handlings, and popular preachers; but the literal sense is agreeable to laws, to the publication of commands, to the revelation of the Divine will, to the concerns of the vulgar, in which the idiot is as much concerned as the greatest clerks."

Says Prof. J. A. Ernesti: "There is in fact but one and the same method of interpretation common to all books, whatever be their subject. And the same grammatical principles and precepts ought to be the common guide in the interpretation of all. * * Theologians are right, therefore, when they affirm the literal sense, or that which is derived from the knowledge of words, to be the only true one; for that mystical sense, which indeed is incorrectly called a sense, belongs altogether to the thing, and not to the words."—Voice of the Church.

Says the learned Vitringa: "We must never depart from the literal meaning of the subject mentioned in its own appropriate name, if all or its principal attributes square with the subject of the prophecy—an unfailing canon, and of great use."—Voice of the Church, page 17.

And Hooker: "I hold it as a most infallible rule in expositions of Sacred Scripture, that when a literal construction will stand, the furthest from the letter is commonly the worst."—Eccl. Polity.

Finally, Alford says with emphasis:—"A canon of interpretation which should be constantly borne in mind is, that a figurative sense of words is never admissible EXCEPT WHEN REQUIRED BY THE CONTEXT." Quoted in "Christ our Life."

Dr. John Pye Smith defines the literal sense as "the common rule of all rational interpretation, viz: the sense afforded by a cautious and critical examination of the terms of the passage, and an impartial construction of the whole sentence, according to the known usage of the language and the writer."

To what has been said, we might also add the testimony of Wetstein and Dr. Clarke.

Wetstein says: "Words and phrases which are obscure and hard to be understood, of which many have either perplexed and confused notions or none at all, are to be explained by such as are clear, simple, and easy to be understood."

Dr. Adam Clarke says, when speaking of Matt. 5: 26, "Let it be remembered that, by general consent of all (except the basely interested) no metaphor is ever to be produced in proof of a doctrine."

It may also be well to bear in mind the well-known principles of philosophical discussion laid down by Newton:—First, That we should admit no more causes than are sufficient to explain appearances; and, second, That to similar effects we should, as far as possible, assign similar causes.

In the language of these writers, we have presented to us correct principles of interpretation. They tell us that "the literal sense is to be presumed and chosen, unless there be evident cause to the contrary"; that any other method is "dangerous and delusive"; that this method is "common to all books, whatever be their subject." By these principles we profess to be governed in our investigations of truth. We love them because they bring the truth to us. And although we may be called "Literalists" for endorsing them, yet we certainly find ourselves in no mean company. The greatest writers the church has produced have maintained them; so that it is almost an adage that the literal sense of words is presumptively their true sense.

Still there are many who are acquainted with these principles who seem utterly regardless of them when their theories are at stake. Thus our Universalist friends would teach us that those passages which speak of a future judgment refer to the destruction of Jerusalem. So those of our brethren who believe in the eternal torment of the finally impenitent would have us believe that where death is spoken of as the portion of the wicked, it means rather eternal life in misery. To this John Locke replies: "They who will put so strange and contrary a signification upon a word in a hundred places, where, if it had not its true and literal sense, one would wonder it should be so often used, and that in opposition to life, which in these places is used literally, ought to have good proofs for giving it a sense in those places of Scripture directly contrary to what it ordinarily has in other parts of Scripture, and every where else."

But while we would enforce the literal principle of interpretation, we would not have it understood that we believe there are no figures used in the Scriptures. There are figures used there; and the Bible is perhaps THE MOST FIGURATIVE BOOK IN EXISTENCE. All kinds of figures are used in the Scriptures. Many of its most glowing descriptions are heightened in beauty by the use of figures. Many passages owe their entire force to one or more figures of speech contained in them. We could illustrate this by many passages, but it does not come within the compass of our present design. (Perhaps at some future time we may call attention more particularly to these figures.)

Figures abound in the Bible. But are they used without any laws to control them? No, they are not. They have fixed laws by which they are governed. An easy way which many have of disposing of passages which do not agree with their views is, to call them figurative; and this is thought sufficient to end the controversy. And often they are allowed to end it thus by their opponents. But I should not be willing to let them off so easily. I should want to know wherein the figure consisted, what was its name, and why the passage was figurative. The fact in the case is this: no passage is figurative unless there is a figure of some kind in it. And if there is a figure in it, we may know what kind of a figure it is. No one has a right to assert that a passage is figurative unless he can prove it. At least we have no right to say that plain, positive declarations are figurative, in order to get rid of their force against our views.

We have no fellowship with that system of spiritualizing which makes the garden of Eden a figure, and all connected with it figurative; which makes the flood to be an inundation of evil and impiety; the ark to represent the church; the coming of Christ to mean the Roman army; the judgment day retribution to the Jews; the kingdom of God to signify the church, or Christ's reign in our hearts; or, finally, the resurrection the return of the Jews, or their MORAL RESURRECTION.

With such a system (if it be a system) of spiritualizing, we can make of the Bible what we please. There is no theory so absurd, or system so false, but may be sustained (?) by such a method. Hence we find "it has come to pass that men make just what they please of the Scriptures, until some accommodate the word of God to the most extravagant absurdities; and, as Jerome complains of his own times, they extract a sense from Scripture repugnant to its meaning."—Luther. "There is nothing more dangerous than this licentious and deluding art, which changes the meaning as alchemy doth or would do the substance of metals, making of anything what it pleases, and bringing in the end all truth to nothing."—Hooker.

Reader, wonder no more at the great number of theories in the world at the present day, all professing to come from the word of God. Here you have the key to it. At least, we have presented to you one very fruitful source of this diversity, viz: spiritual interpretations. To the shame of those who thus trifle with the word of God, we give the following sharp rebuke from the speech of an Indian chief, addressed to a missionary:—"Brother, continue to listen. You say you have come to instruct us how we may worship the Great Spirit agreeable to his mind; and if we do not take hold of the religion you white people teach, we shall be unhappy hereafter. You say that you are right, and we are lost. How do you know this to be true? We understand that your religion is written in a book. If there is but one religion, why do you white people differ so much about it? Why not agree, as you can all read the book? Brother, we do not understand these things."

CHILDHOOD INNOCENCE.

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

These are the words of our blessed Savior. And how truly do we find them corresponding with the days of our childhood. Who can but remember those innocent amusements we had when we sported upon the verdant plain or fertile lawn, where the fragrant flowers sent forth their refreshing odors to cheer the youthful breast? Who can but remember when they visited the prolific forest, where stood those sturdy oaks spreading forth their rude branches, covered with foliage as a canopy to shelter us from the rays of the scorching sun; where we regaled ourselves, and listened to those songsters that poured forth their joyful notes in praise to Him who gave them life. O, how delightful were the days of our childhood. And how adapted do we find those words of our blessed Master to give us innate instruction; that we must become as little children in order to be heirs of his kingdom. But how soon those happy days of our childhood have passed away. Not that nature has ceased to perform her part; but by transgressing the laws of our blessed Savior and breaking the laws of nature, we have fallen far below the enjoyment that was designed for the children of obedience.

Now as we are all desirous of happiness, both here and hereafter, the question arises, how shall we regain that innocence of regenerated happiness that pertains to our final good? There is but one way to attain it; that is, to put our trust in the merits of our divine Lord and Savior,—deny ourselves of sin, and walk in his commands, and then we shall be fitted to enjoy that kingdom whose innocence and happiness shall pervade every breast. Therefore let us put our trust in God, and obey his commands, and all fear will be banished from our minds. No dark forebodings of the future will be crowding upon us,—no gloomy thoughts, nor repining at the reverse of fortune—no horror at the thought of death; but we shall be entirely given up to God, and resigned to his will. How important then it is that we put our trust and confidence in his word, that we may be led to a life of moral virtue and christian integrity.

Every Biblical student assuredly must confess according to prophetic history concerning the signs of the times, that our Divine Savior is soon coming to judge the earth. And now is the time if ever to wake out of sleep; to be on our watch-tower, and strive to be ready to meet our Judge in peace. Dear reader, let us make no delay in securing our salvation,—let us exhort one another daily, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. God will bless the sacrifice.

GETHSEMANE.

O Gethsemane! thou standest unrivalled because of the character and capacity of thy Sufferer! Thy very name sends a thrill of amazement to every believer's heart. Gethsemane! What anguish didst thou witness!

In thee was the cost of redemption fully weighed, and in purpose fully paid. In thee went up the thrice-repeated prayer of prayers for help, and in thee was the help given. O Gethsemane, what a problem of love art thou!

How the soul draws near. With what confidence is it inspired. This is my Savior! He bore all this for me! Here the heart breaks to be made whole again. Here temptations lose their power. Here it is that fiery trials sink into insignificance.

This is what brings salvation. Nothing short of this display of love could have met the terrible emergency. The story of the cross is all that leads to the crown.

Wouldst thou make great sacrifices? Think on Gethsemane. Wouldst thou win souls? Preach Gethsemane. Wouldst thou make straight paths for thy feet? Follow the Sufferer of Gethsemane. Wouldst thou endure unto the end? Keep Gethsemane's scenes full in thy view. Nothing so nerves the soul for suffering. Nothing so deadens it to all earthly influences. Nothing so dispels the illusion that ease is to be enjoyed here. Nothing so arms the soul with power to meet the enemy. Nothing so makes her invincible.

With Gethsemane full in view she can fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life. With Gethsemane full in view she can bear disappointments and wait for her crown. With Gethsemane full in view she can sum up all her trials and say, "These light afflictions are but for a moment!" She can endure as seeing Him who is invisible, until her change come, when Gethsemane's groans will be forgotten in the songs of Mount Sion. "Amen. Even so, Come, Lord Jesus."

IS HE A CHRISTIAN?—Then he is benevolent. He feeds the hungry, clothes the naked, ministers to the sick. Human distresses touch his heart and open his hand. The spiritual maladies of mankind excite commiseration, and to relieve and remove them, his influence and property will be cheerfully contributed. "Freely ye have received, freely give."—"Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

THE TIME MOVEMENT.

There seems to be quite a stir among the brethren in relation to the time of our Lord's coming. Some are in favor of definite time. Some seem to be much opposed to it. Bro. Thurman's book has caused some stir. Some are in favor of it, while others reject its teachings. Now as for me, I am not an astronomer, neither am I a chronologist. I have not had the privilege of a "saw mill" education, having been brought up in the backwoods, therefore I must confess I have gained light from Bro. T.'s work. Now we do not expect one man to have all the light, therefore we should not be surprised if some errors were advanced. But this is no reason why we should condemn the man or his book. Let us thank God for the light he has given us, and like Paul take courage, knowing God will give us light as we need it. We ought not to resent it because Bro. T. has pulled up some of the old stakes, and set new ones that neither we nor our theologians can uproot. How unwilling men generally are to own they are in error. Well said the poet—

"Man convinced against his will,
Is of the same opinion still."

I have frequently heard men say when speaking of the sleep of the dead, it is strange our learned men never found it out. Is it not curious that men should say that Artaxerxes let go the captives and built the city, when God said Cyrus should do the work? Is it strange men should say we know nothing about the time, when the Almighty, who has declared the end from the beginning, says we shall know? Is it not also strange that men who are preaching the Lord's soon coming seem to be afraid of the time movement, and will brace back and say, We are not to know the time, seemingly because some have erred in the past? Are they afraid of the persecution attending the "express" train, and choose rather to take the hand car, and by so doing steer clear of the scoffer? Well, I think it best to use caution, and not be hasty in getting on board of either one too soon; but when we do understand, as God says the wise shall, and the word is given, "All aboard!" I intend to jump on. Thank the Lord, we are going to have more light yet, so that he may run that readeth it.

Some seem to be a little afraid of '68, because they were disappointed in '43 and '54. Truly they had to endure the scoffs and frowns of many from whom they ought to have had sympathy. Come, ye veterans of the cross, do not be discouraged, but up, gird on your armor, and never lay it down again until the Master appears. But with all be sure that every wheel has the right chink before getting on board the train. Be sure and do not linger too long, or the cars may leave you. Then it will be forever too late.

Before closing, I wish to ask one favor of those who are opposed to definite time. Give us the proof from God's word why we should not believe as we now do. For one, I will change my views immediately; but if you cannot find anything to sustain you, do not say, Oh! they set the time in '43 and '54, and were mistaken. Ezek. 12: 21–26 might possibly apply to your condition.

Dear reader, we do know the kingdom is near, and that very soon we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. Then seeing we look for such things, what manner of persons ought we to be! Christ expects us to be made ready. John saw the bride when made ready. Let us do all that God requires of us, and when He who is our life shall appear, we shall be found with our garments spotless, and gathered as wheat into his garner.

MAINE ADVENT TRACT CAUSE.

It may be well to report this cause, that some who do not know what can be done may be encouraged to try and see what they can do. We organized and began last January. Since then I have sent out $116,47 worth to scatter among those who will read. How much good they will do the Lord knows; by his blessing much good will result. I have received from subscriptions over $86. One of our ministers has had, to circulate, over $56 worth, for which he has raised already $18, and will raise the balance. Another minister has received $19 worth, and already sent in $10, as only a beginning. Should there be a general interest in scattering books and tracts, what an amount of good might be done. Many do not realize that every book or tract put into the hands of persons calls their attention to some important reflections, and many of them make impressions which lead to the best results. The tract cause cannot be too highly estimated.

Come, brethren and sisters, let us put our hand to this work in earnest. You can preach much with little money. Whoever wishes to donate ten dollars, or one dollar, can have the tracts to that amount to scatter themselves if they wish them. Those who have no money and want tracts to scatter, send in your orders. Let the work be done in all departments, to lead sinners to Christ, and saints to the truth.

ARE WE READY?

Are we ready for the coming of the just and holy One? This is a question of great importance, and ought to be one that we should ponder well. I often ask myself the question, Am I ready to meet my Lord, should he appear to-day to gather all his chosen ones home? Are we living as lights in the world? I try to be a true disciple of Jesus, and yet I find daily, as I look into my heart, that I am not just what I should be. Do we indulge in light and trifling talk? Do we appear to others what we are not? Do we say anything and mean contrary to it? O let us think upon these things ere it is too late, and we be left in hopeless despair.

Dear brethren and sisters, are we ready to meet the Judge of all the earth? Consider upon these things ere the day of mercy is o'er. I mean, by help divine, to live where the Lord will own me daily. It is our privilege and duty. How can we warn others to flee from the wrath to come, if we live in sin and folly? We need to be very watchful in these times of peril and distress. Let us adorn our profession with a well ordered life and a godly conversation in our every-day lives. Let us be good. Let us get ready, and keep our lights shining. The Lord is coming!

OUR VISIT TO PHILADELPHIA.

Our late visit to the city of "Brotherly Love" has been one of special interest and profit to our own soul. We look back upon it with much pleasure. Every thing seemed to conspire together for our good. We formed many happy acquaintances, for which we feel grateful to our Heavenly Father.

We hardly need to inform our readers that Philadelphia is a beautiful city, the admiration of all who visit it, and become acquainted with its delightful scenery, especially at this season of the year. The city contains some seven hundred thousand inhabitants, and during our stay of nine days, though we traveled much in different parts, we do not recollect of seeing a single intoxicated person, or of hearing a profane oath. There seemed to be a better moral atmosphere than we have ever observed in any other large city. There is more of the kind, neighborly, brotherly feeling, than we often see exhibited elsewhere. There seems to be less of the covetous, selfish spirit than we see in other places. There is something that makes one feel quite at home, with a very short acquaintance. The people take pleasure in giving a stranger any instruction he may desire, when seeking his way through the city. They do not act as though they could not speak a kind and obliging word, unless you pay them well for every expression in your favor. The deep-toned selfishness of these last days has not taken so strong hold of them as of the majority of people elsewhere. They use hospitality without grudging.

Philadelphia is noted for its neatness and the regularity with which it is laid out. The streets cut each other at right angles, dividing the city into squares, like ancient Babylon. It is well supplied with beautiful parks and fountains, and has a large number of elegant buildings. It has the best arrangement for city travel we have ever seen. The horse railroads intersect each other in such a way that one can go to almost any part of the city, by simply making one change at the corner of a street.

The buildings have a very neat appearance, on account of their white window-shutters, white marble foundations and steps; all of which are kept very clean.

Whoever visits Philadelphia should not fail to visit Girard College, and take a walk upon its massive stone roof. The main building is one hundred and sixty feet long and one hundred ten wide. The pillars in front are fifty-five feet high, and six feet in diameter. The whole structure is marble, built in the most substantial manner. Stephen Girard gave two millions of dollars for the endowment of the college. It will accommodate about three hundred students. Only orphans are admitted.

Another place of much interest is the Academy of Natural Science. In this there are seven stories filled with a great variety of curiosities from the earth, air, and sea. After looking over this vast collection of natural curiosities, one might conclude he had seen specimens of every mineral, shell, fish, serpent, bird and beast that the world affords. We were informed there were 30,000 birds, stuffed and preserved so as to look perfectly natural. There were a thousand human skulls representing the various nations of the world. There are representations of the sea animals from the smallest up to the whale; of birds from the humming bird to the condor and ostrich; shells from the size of a mustard seed to those that might hold a gallon; including thousands of varieties. There are also the mummies of Epypt, in their embalmed state, and a great amount of petrified animals, besides the massive bones of several huge animals that are now unknown among the living upon earth. It is an excellent spot to study the wisdom of our Creator as displayed in adapting the different animals to their particular sphere of action.

Another place of much interest to the visitor of Philadelphia, is the Fairmount Water Works, by which the city is supplied with water from the Schuylkill river. In connection with the powerful machinery employed for forcing the water into the reservoirs, are very pleasant parks, containing in all two hundred and seven acres; ornamented with beautiful shrubs, trees, flowers, walks, and a carriage way some seven miles in extent, for the benefit of those who wish to ride for pleasure, or for the benefit of the sick.

Having given the reader a brief description of the city, we will say a word about our meetings. We held them in seven different places, and they continued to grow better from the first to the last, until many were very much comforted and quickened. A dozen or more requested prayers, and one was converted, and obtained a bright evidence of acceptance by the Lord. The Spirit of the Lord was with us, and very happy results followed. We were invited to preach to two other churches, and accepted the invitation.

During our visit in Philadelphia, we became acquainted with some very devoted christians of other denominations, who are strong in the belief that Jesus will come between now and 1868. We learn this belief is rapidly gaining ground on both continents, among the most devoted children of the Lord. Many in other churches are more engaged in the subject than those who have been identified with the great time movement. We fear our readers are not generally awake on this subject, but are grieving the Spirit of the Lord by their indifference. The signs of the times are speaking in thunder tones that "the end of all things is at hand." We see no room for doubt in this matter. Evidences are accumulating on every side. Let us arouse, and help to arouse others.

INCIDENTS BY THE WAY.

Our trip to Philadelphia was made specially pleasant by delightful scenery and agreeable incidents on the way. All nature was dressed in her most lovely spring costume, adorned with beautiful flowers, while the happy birds were singing their cheerful serenade songs. Such things always lead us to think of the christian's happy home in Paradise, which is now just at hand. In our outward trip, we had an agreeable ride through beautiful scenery, on the cars from Boston to Stonington, thence by the noble steamer "Commonwealth" to New York, arriving April 29th, about 6 A. M., in that great and wicked city. We called at 15 Laight St., and received a nice vegetarian breakfast, in the noted Water Cure establishment, formerly kept by Dr. Trall, but now by Drs. Miller and Wood, who appear to be very successful in their noble work.

From New York to Philadelphia, we passed through a very rich country, peculiarly adapted to gardening and the production of choice fruits. Here we saw acres of strawberry vines in blossom, acres of fine peach orchards, and an abundance of choice apple trees. It is a very desirable place to live.

On our return to New York, we had a very interesting meeting, May 10th, where Bro. Samuel Curry preaches in 24 St. This is a Methodist congregation. Persons came to the meeting from five to fifty miles. We had a refreshing season in the Lord. There we met Bro. J. K. Bellows, who brings a favorable report from his field of labor. We also met Sr. Anna E. Smith, who is engaged in a good missionary work in the city. Would that there were more such laborers.

May 10th, we visited again the celebrated Water Cure, at 15 Laight St., under the direction of Dr. Miller and Dr. Wood, and through their kindness, received a "Turkish Bath," which afforded us the most delightful experience we ever enjoyed from a bath in our lifetime. We would recommend all to try it, especially the sick. These baths are very valuable for those out of health, and powerful opponents against disease. They were lately introduced into this noted hygienic institution, and are a very important addition, and will afford very extra advantages for the recovery of the health of the sick; and at the same time give the man of health an opportunity to enjoy the most cleansing and pleasing bath ever administered.

Thursday, May 11th, we left New York for New Haven, where we had a very pleasant visit with Bro. Arden Hotchkiss, an ardent lover of the "blessed hope," strong in the faith of soon seeing Jesus. There is a goodly number in New Haven and vicinity, who are endeavoring to be ready to meet the Savior, whom we had the pleasure of greeting at our meeting in the evening. We find encouraging symptoms in all places, showing that christians are beginning to see and feel the importance of entire consecration to the Lord, in order to be ready to go to the marriage of the Lamb." We expect to see more of these encouraging signs, as the perils increase. There appears to be a general impression upon the minds of christians in all countries that Jesus will come very soon. Let us praise the Lord for the increasing light and interest.

Friday evening, May 12th, we had an interesting meeting in Springfield, Mass., and a very pleasant interview with Bro. Ladd, and other dear Brn. and Srs. The church in Springfield is prospering in divine things.

Lord's day, May 14th, we spent in Worcester, where we also found the church in a healthy state. Our meetings were held in the City Hall, and the audiences were large and attentive. The truth is spreading. Two were baptized.

DEATH OF AUGUSTUS CÆSAR.

As Christ was baptized "in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar," and was at that time "about thirty years of age," it is a point of considerable interest, in the examination of this subject, to ascertain in what year Tiberius began his reign. All historians claim, so far as we know, that Tiberius was associated with Augustus Cæsar some two or three years before the death of the latter.

Dr. Lardner says:—Tiberius was made partner with Augustus . . . two years before Augustus died."—Cred. vol. i. p. 385.

It has been generally believed by chronological writers, that Augustus Cæsar died Aug. 19th, A. D. 14. The question now to be settled is, did Luke reckon the reign of Tiberius from his joint reign with Augustus, or from the death of the latter? We know it is usual to give a king or emperor the honor, or title, of his office from the time he shares equal authority with another king or emperor.

We will first suppose that Luke means "the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius," reckoning from the death of Augustus; which we will suppose was in A. D. 14, Aug. 19th. Before we come to the fifteenth year, there must be fourteen solid years, which, with a part of the fifteenth, when added to Aug. 19th, A. D. 14, must certainly bring us very near to A. D. 29, for the time when Christ was baptized. But we will condense all we can, and suppose the time of baptism was in the latter part of A. D. 28. As Christ was born four years, four months and seventeen days before A. D., we must add this amount to get his true age in A. D. 28, at his baptism. Adding the four years and four months to the latter part of A. D. 28, would make him over thirty-two years of age at his baptism; whereas Luke says, he "began to be about thirty years of age." We think it must be a clear case that Luke did not reckon the reign of Tiberius from the death of Augustus, if he died as late as A. D. 14; but from the time when the two reigned jointly.

When did the associate reign begin? Some say A. D. 12, others A. D. 11. We think it is not disputed that Tiberius was associated with Augustus about two years,—not less than that. After a very critical examination of the points relating to the death of Augustus Cæsar, Dr. Samuel Jarvis remarks as follows: "We trust we have shown to the satisfaction of the reader that Augustus died on the 19th of August, Julian Period 4726," which would be "A. D. 13."—Dr. Jarvis' Chronology, p. 247.

"Mercator computes that in the year when Augustus died" during "the consulship of the two Sexti, the sun was eclipsed in the year of Nabonassar 760, the sun being in 6° 15 minutes of Taurus. This was in the year of Christ 13."—Dr. Jarvis' Chron., p. 246, quoted from Petavius.

The Julian period for B. C. 1 is 4713; take this from 4726, the year for the death of Augustus, and we have A. D. 13 as the result. The Nabonassarian era began Feb. 26th, B. C. 747, hence the 760th year of that era would be A. D. 13, as stated above. According to the calculation of Mercator, as just shown, the sun was eclipsed in the year of Nabonassar 760," when the "two Sexti" were consuls, which was A. D. 13, and Augustus died the same year.

Dion Cassius,* the noted Roman historian, says:—Augustus "died at Nole, under the consulship of Sextus Apuleius, and Sextus Pompeius. His death had been presaged by several very extraordinary prodigies, and very easy to understand; for there was a great eclipse of the sun, part of the firmament appeared all on fire, there fell down flames to the earth, and there were comets of the color of blood."—Dion Cassius, translated by Xiphilin, vol. 1, pp. 194, 195.

Let it be remembered that according to Mercator's computation, the two Sexti were consuls in the year when Augustus died, which was in the 760th year of Nabonassar, which was A. D. 13. In harmony with this, we find Dion Cassius stating that Augustus "died at Nole, under the consulship of Sextus Apuleius, and Sextus Pompeius." These facts show very clearly that Augustus died after "a great eclipse of the sun," in A. D. 13. According to M. Pingre's noted list of eclipses, published in Paris, and approved by the "Royal Academy of Science," and pronounced by their commissioners as "most worthy of the approval of the Academy," there was an annular eclipse of the sun, Apr. 28th, A. D. 13, in the western and northwestern part of Europe. An annular eclipse is "a great" one, and seldom happens.

Petavius says Eusebius states in his Chronicon that in "the first of the 198th Olympiad," [A. D. 13], there happened an eclipse of the sun, when Augustus died." Dr. Jarvis gives the following translation of Eusebius, from the Arminian version:—"An eclipse of the sun takes place, and Augustus dies."

It appears very evident that there was "a great eclipse of the sun" before the death of Augustus, and also an eclipse of the moon in the same year after his death; but no eclipse of the sun is found in A. D. 14, that will answer the description of the historian, and the eclipse of the moon in that year, on the 27th of Sept., is thought to be too near the death of Augustus to give time for the events to transpire which happened between his death and the lunar eclipse mentioned in history; but the eclipse of the moon in A. D. 13, Oct. 7th, gives sufficient time from the death of Augustus to accomplish all the recorded events. The eclipse of the moon Sept. 27th, A. D. 14, was about 5 o'clock in the morning; and the one Oct. 7th, of A. D. 13, was at 7.45 in the evening. The eclipse of the moon in A. D. 14 was total, and in A. D. 13 partial. The question is, which of these eclipses is meant by the historian? When speaking of the events that happened, Dr. Jarvis remarks,—"All these circumstances are perfectly reconcilable with the partial eclipse in the evening; but, to me, do not appear to be so with the total eclipse in the morning."—Jarvis' Chron., p. 253.

It appears that the chief reason for putting the death of Augustus in A. D. 14, instead of A. D. 13, was on account of the total eclipse of the moon in the year 14, while the eclipse of the sun, mentioned by Eusebius and Dion Cassius, has been overlooked, or been passed without being mentioned; but both eclipses must be found, we think, in the year of the death of Augustus; and if we take A. D. 13 for the year of these events, there appears to be a good harmony of parts; which we will now proceed to show.

1. According to Bro. Thurman's Chronology, Tiberius was associated with Augustus in A. D. 11.

2. Dr. Lardner says:—"Tiberius was made partner with Augustus . . . two years before Augustus died."—Cred. vol. i., p. 385. That would locate the death of Augustus in A. D. 13.

3. Christ was baptized "in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar," according to Luke's gospel. See Luke 3: 1, 21–23.

4. We have before shown that the baptism could not have been in the fifteenth year of the sole reign of Tiberius, as that would make our Lord about thirty-two years of age at his baptism, which would contradict Luke's account.

5. If we begin to reckon from the joint reign, A. D. 11, "the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar would be about twenty-five years and a half in A. D.; to which, if we add four years four months and seventeen days,—the time that had elapsed from the birth of the Savior, to the time when our A. D. began, we shall have twenty-nine years and about ten months for the age of our Savior at his baptism; which corresponds with Epiphanius; who says Jesus "was twenty-nine years and ten months old when he came to baptism."—Epiphanius, chap. 16.

This arrangement seems to harmonize with all established facts, and afford us a solid foundation upon which we can securely rest. But if we move the death of Augustus Cæsar to A. D. 19, in order to take in the eclipse of the sun in that year, instead of the one in A. D. 13, and then have the joint reign of Tiberius begin two years earlier, in A. D. 17, in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, the Savior would have been about thirty-six years of age at his baptism, which is about six years more than the Bible record allows.

From a careful survey of all the evidence, we feel satisfied that the death of Augustus could not have been later than A. D. 14, nor earlier than A. D. 13; and that we have altogether the best harmony of events and dates, if we place his death in A. D. 13, Aug. 19th.

* Dion Cassius was governor of Pergamos and Smyrna in the reign of Macrinus, and afterwards of Egypt and Pannonia. He employed ten years in collecting materials for his history, and twelve more in arranging them. He is considered the best historic authority for the events in the lives of the early Roman emperors.

"A TEST TIME."

The time has evidently arrived when men are to be tested and developed, that they may be "known and read of all men." Hypocrites and true men will be more fully manifested. The restraint is so far removed from men, that they are acting what is in them as we have never before seen it exhibited. Infidelity and wickedness are growing bolder every week. Their progress is truly alarming; and the current has become so strong, that but few have courage to attempt to resist it.

In H. W. Beecher's "Lecture Talks, No. 8," he makes some truthful remarks relative to the present state of things. He says:—

"Well, there are a great many reasons now that tend to drive us from a near, ever conscious communion with the Savior. In the first place, there is a great deal of unsettled, distressing feeling about the state of public affairs. . . It seems as though sometimes we were sucked dry by excitability. . . . Then, besides, there is the peculiar feverishness of worldly affairs. I do not know that I have, in a great many years, seen the public mind so excited, and so scattered, and so drifting from the very grounds of moral consciousness, as it has been of late. I heard of a man that is a professor of religion, and a member of the church, and that is good enough as the world goes, who said, one day, "There is no use; money is the only thing in this world that will make a man happy, and I am determined that I will have it." He said it; ten thousand feel it. He was no worse, if he was a member of the church, than hundreds and hundreds of others. It is intoxication that affects him and them. . . .

There is now another element coming up—the conflict of parties. That is to be of a provoking, an irritating, and an intensely worldly nature. Then there is the fear of the timid, and the despondency of those that are apt to despond. All these things, meeting together, tend to brush out of the mind its distinctive religious feelings, and its strong moral purposes. And just for this reason it is that we need, more than we have needed it at any previous time, the simple, child-like faith of the Lord Jesus Christ. . . . And never so much as now did we need to hold fast to our principles and integrity. This is a test time. We are to be proved; and those that are without God will fail, while those that have the root of the matter in them will stand."

Truly, only "those that have the root of the matter in them will stand." Does the reader belong to that class? We must expect to be tested before we are delivered. None can reasonably expect to stand the trial unless clothed with "the whole armor of God." Our warfare will be earnest against the combined powers of darkness; but victory is sure and speedy, if we trust in the Captain of our salvation, and obey his commandments. No compromise can be made with sin in any form, without imperiling our all. Our success will depend upon our being "unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." We must be determined to do right, if all the world is opposed. The right always comes out ahead of the wrong. Truth will prevail at last, and error must be crushed into oblivion. One unpopular truth is of more value than all the popular errors in the world. Let us be valiant for the truth and the right, and we shall be supported by the strong arm of the Lord.

WALLINGFORD COMMUNITY.

In Wallingford, Ct., is a "Community," called "The Oneida and Wallingford Community," which formerly published a paper in Oneida, N. Y., that is now published in Wallingford. In the number for Jan. 23d, 1865, an article is copied from the Banner of Light, written by Warren Chase, in which he says, when speaking of this "Community:"—

"They annul and abrogate the marriage covenant, and yet do not separate the sexes, but all work, eat and associate together as one family. But by what rules they regulate the relation and intercourse of the sexes I do not know, for I would not ask; but I know it is such as does not do violence to the health and happiness of females which is so common in ordinary society, nor does it crucify a part of the nature as the Shakers do."

Mr. Chase goes on to say:—

"That the only friends they have in our country who are able and willing to defend them in their efforts to carry out their system, both socially and religiously, are the Spiritualists, and that they can and will, in spite of their prejudice, defend and sustain them to the last, and with the millions of them now in our country, we have the power to do it, and not because we agree with them, but because we want every conscientious and laudable effort to better the condition of the race to have a fair trial; and I know theirs is one."

It seems that Mr. Chase has misapprehended the true position of those who manage this "Community," for a writer in the same number of the paper comments on the remarks of Mr. Chase as follows:—

"We think that, with a little fair explanation, we could convince Mr. Chase that we have no such 'prejudice' against Spiritualism as he imagines. Our record will show that we were among the very first, and side by side with, if not in advance of, such men as Robert Dale Owen, in recognizing the reality of the facts affirmed by the Spiritualists . . . Instead of rejecting or ignoring the fundamental principles of Spiritualism, we claim to be mediums ourselves of some of the highest spirits extant."

The foregoing shows very clearly that "the marriage covenant" is to be abrogated when the Spiritualists have the power to make the laws of our country. This is one of the items in the so called "SOCIAL REFORM."

AFFAIRS IN ITALY.

It is very evident that the Papal power at Rome must soon come to a perpetual end; but when that takes place, we may expect to see Jesus immediately. Any one who has carefully considered the condition of the "woman" on the "seven hills," must be convinced that mystical Babylon will soon fall to rise no more. Soon the saints will be called from their graves to rejoice over her burning. O, what a thrilling time is the one in which we are living. The christian at the present time occupies a sublime stand-point,—almost home.

"O hail happy day."

The following is from an editorial of a popular New York daily paper, of May 12th, '65: "Papal Rome has fulfilled its mission in Europe and must pass away... And as republican Rome fulfilled its time and passed away, as imperial Rome accomplished what there was for it to do in the world and went out of existence, so must Papal Rome, now that its mission—which was its vitality—is gone. As the Goths and Vandals finished imperial Rome, so another race of Goths and Vandals—those assailed by the encyclical—will finish Papal Rome. Republican Rome succumbed to internal dissension, imperial Rome to external foes, and Papal Rome must go down before that fully developed spirit of the age that is heard in the call for Italian unity."

From an Aged Baptist Bro. in N. S.

I received your letter calling for payment. This is to inform you that to pay with me is impossible. I am a frail old man in my seventy-eighth year, and am truly not worth a cent. I hoped my sons would see the truth and love it enough to pay for it and continue the paper; but, alas, in this I was disappointed.

I have professed religion sixty and three years (am a Baptist), and most of that time have objected to the immortal-soul doctrine, no one finding fault with me. But of late it seems to be an unpardonable sin. So, as you may suppose, I am turned over by the church to Satan. They have not charged me with any immoral act, but brought a false witness against me, who said I charged the minister with preaching "false doctrine,"—words which I never used, though I might have done so with propriety. But the truth is, my sentiments for some time before I was excluded, had become a cause of much uneasiness, and my exclusion was expected, yet the charge was unaccountable.

The Crisis has been a source of great comfort to me, and the most instructive religious paper of any I ever had. But for me to obtain means to pay for it is out of my power. This is from one who believes that he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry much longer. Yours waiting,

ROBERT ——.

☞ As the above letter was not intended for publication, we omit the name.

"He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth to the Lord."

Enclosed are two dollars to send the paper to some poor, lone pilgrim. The suggestion that each church pay for her own poor is very well, but let those who are all alone tell their wants, so that they too may be provided for. My heart yearns over the poor. May God's best blessing be upon them. But let no one follow for the loaves and fishes, nor the rich stop "their ears at the cry of the poor, lest he also cry himself and shall not be heard."

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. P. Lamprey.

DEAR SRS. IN CHRIST:—I see by the Crisis that Sr. Anna E. Smith has called upon the sisters to meet in Convention at Poultney, Vt., the 7th of June next, to give all those females who feel that they have been called upon to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, an opportunity to do so; that it will be a missionary move. Who can count the blessing that will follow in the train of such a glorious move? Angels will tune their harps anew, as thousands of new born souls will be gathered into the fold of Christ, as the result of your labors. Yes, sisters, go to the Convention, if it is in your power to do so. If God has called upon you, and is about to set you apart to labor in the gospel, he will provide means and open the way for you to go. He never has any impossibilities with his children. I feel for one that your labors will be duly appreciated by the world at large, and that you will be the means, under God, of doing untold good to men, women and children, who are daily perishing for the want of the bread of life.

Our once happy America, drenched with blood, has yet to pass through a terrible ordeal before she will come forth purified from her sins, as a nation. I believe that you are to be set apart by God to sound the alarm that Jesus is soon coming to gather his own elect to himself, and also to take vengeance on those that know not God, and obey not his gospel. Dear sisters, as you go forth to administer the word of life to a perishing world, I beg of you not to forget nor pass by the children and youth. They have souls as precious as yours or mine. Do we not want our children converted to God, to be a blessing while they are permitted to stay here on earth, and fit them for eternal life in the kingdom of God?

Would it not be proper and for the glory of God, for those sisters that are calculated for the work, to go from place to place and preach to the children and youth of the Sabbath schools of our land, irrespective of color or denomination. You will be received if you are sent of God, for the fields are ready for the harvest in that department, but the reapers are few. Tell the children and youth that Jesus is soon coming, and they will believe you, if you tell them in the right way. Persuade them to give their hearts to Jesus, for "he is the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." How can I see the dear children crowding their way down to eternal death, without any one's lifting a warning voice! It seems to me if I could preach, I should select this class for my hearers, for their minds are tender and susceptible of impressions, whether religious or otherwise. They are not yet hardened in crimes. I feel deeply for the youth of our generation, as there is abroad everything to lead them astray from things of a religious character; and my poor heart almost sinks within me when I reflect upon the thousands of youth in our land exposed to the contaminating influences of vices in our land and country, almost unheeded by the masses. True, the young are provided with places for worship and Sabbath schools, and Sabbath school books in great abundance, which are very beneficial to them, as far as they go, but they have not sufficient of the root and matter of the gospel in them to but very rarely produce a revival of religion in their midst.

We want our children taught that Jesus is soon coming, and unless they are prepared to meet him they will be forever lost. And if they die in their sins they will never reign with him in the kingdom of God. My sisters, I feel interested in this matter, for my whole life has been spent in the society of children and youth; and if I could preach as some of you can, how gladly would I repair to our cities, call around me a group of bright-eyed, sunny-haired youth, from the purse-proud millionaire, the cottage, the alms-house, the cellar, the garret, and gently, yet pointedly tell them that Jesus is soon coming. But as I cannot preach myself, I must leave the work with you, and be content to pray that you may be successful in your arduous labors in trying to save souls.

In order to do good to the youth, there ought to be reading matter suitable for them to interest and instruct them in the things that belong to their peace. I would suggest that at your Convention you form a society of sisters, and that you publish a monthly periodical written and edited by the sisters of your Convention, the size and number of pages similar to that edited by Mrs. Palmer (Guide to Holiness), but the reading matter suitable for this day and generation. That such a publication is needed with us as an Advent body, I think no one will pretend to deny, and if gotten up and properly managed will be self-sustaining. Your sister, in hope of eternal life,

MARY P. LAMPREY.

BRO. GRANT:—Still I live to praise the Lord and declare his truth, to reprove, rebuke, and exhort, to comfort and instruct, and find enough of this kind of work to do. Since writing before I have visited Hollis and Windham, and some other neighborhoods in their vicinity, and found brethren firm in the path, rooted, grounded and settled in the truth, and I was received with all the kindness and hospitality I could desire. They desire and need some one to feed them with the bread of life, the gospel. I see there is a lack of men, to preach the gospel of the kingdom to come, in all this region. The harvest is plenteous, but laborers are comparatively few. Doors are open almost everywhere. New fields are being opened, explored and improved. The truth is prevailing. Converts are being multiplied, and sectarianism is losing ground. The signs are so plainly seen, many are learning to believe the kingdom and coming of Jesus is near. Yet the great mass are crying "Peace and safety," but a destruction is coming, which they cannot escape.

I visit as much as I am able, and have always found that to be the best way to get people out to hear. One colored man told me he did not go to meeting, and gave as a reason that the minister did not visit his family. He often rode by his house, but never called. It was a colored family, and beneath his dignity. I could visit that family, sit down at their humble table, partake of their fare, and pray with them; and Jack came a long way to my lectures, and brought others with him. This visiting and getting acquainted with persons prepares the preacher to aim his arrow aright, and he does not need

HE IS COMING AGAIN.

AIR.—"Marching along"

We mourn here in sorrow o'er hopes that have fled,
For the loved ones we've cherished that sleep with the dead;
But they'll all be gathered wherever they're lain,
For death's conq'ring Hero is coming again.

CHORUS.

Coming again, he is coming again;
Glory to Jesus! he's coming again;
Tho' long we've been waiting, 'twill not be in vain,
Oh, shout hallelujah! he's coming again.

We're tried, and we're tempted; we fear lest we fall;
But Jesus will help us whenever we call;
He sees all our trials, he knows every pain;
Oh, thank him forever! he's coming again.

Cheer up, then, ye weak one, ye poor little lamb,
Who fear lest ye stray from the Good Shepherd's hand;
Who tremble with fright at the wolves on the plain,—
Oh, fly to the Shepherd! he's coming again.

Oh yes! he is coming, the day's drawing near,
In heavenly beauty he soon will appear;
Ten thousand of thousands are swelling his train,
And shouting Hosannah! he's coming again.

The sunbeams of glory will glitter on high,
And gorgeous splendor roll over the sky;
And oh, such sweet music! we'll catch every strain,
And shout Hallelujah! he's coming again!

THE SABBATH.

BRO. GRANT:—Of late I have seen several articles in your paper on the Sabbath question, which I read with interest. And I would here like to ask a question or two.

Where in his word has God ever given any one license to declare that all which is said against the law has no reference to the ten commandments? Was it on the part of God, or by the people moving afar off, that the command was not given to them to make an altar of earth, and to burn offerings? But Paul plainly declares there are two covenants. "The one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem, which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all."—Gal. 4: 24–27.

We believe no man can be a christian without keeping all the commandments that are found in the New Covenant. Paul and Christ tell us plainly what they are, but no mention is made of the Sabbath; and when Jesus tells the young man to keep the commandments, he asks, Which? Did Jesus say, All? Most assuredly not; and should we accuse Christ of withholding an important truth from us?

Great stress is placed on Matt. 5: 18,—"For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." And in the last of the seventeenth verse he says he came to fulfill.

Now if I understand plain language, the law was not to pass till it was fulfilled, and when it was fulfilled it was to pass; and to say it has not passed is accusing Christ of not filling his mission. But we are taught that he blotted "out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross; and having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath."—Col. 2: 14–17. This agrees with Rom. 14: 5, 6,—"One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks." It seems that Paul thought that the man that eateth not gave God the same thanks as the man that eateth.

But in chap. 13: 9, he tells us what the commandments are. "For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." It seems that Paul with a prophet's eye looked down to these last days and saw them laying other burdens on the people; therefore to save any doubt on the subject he says: "If there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "Love is the fulfilling of the law." Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.—Rom. 5: 28. And we are taught in chap. 4: 13, 14, that Abraham's promise of being heir of the world was not "through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect." But we are taught that "the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made."—Gal. 3: 17–19. "Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster."

I think that to any mind that has not become as the granite hills, with a conscience seared with an hot iron, it is plain to be seen that Paul's entire epistle to the Galatians was to convince them that they were not under the law; for the first word he says (after finishing his salutation) is, "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel, which is not another, but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."

I find no evidence that Paul ever preached that man should keep the Sabbath, but in this very epistle he accuses them of observing days, and tells them he is afraid of them, lest he had bestowed upon them labor in vain. Why are such writings found in the New Covenant if we are bound to keep the Jewish Sabbath? and how can men deny its being done away when it says so plainly in 2 Cor. 3: 7–12,—"But if the ministration of death, written and engraved in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance, which glory was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth. For if that which was done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious." If there are any that dare say Paul did not teach that those commandments on stone were done away, I would refer them to Rev. 22: 18, 19, where God tells them what he will do with those that add or take from his word. How plainly he shows us in Romans that we can not be under two covenants at once, and clearly shows us that the law is dead, or we are not under Christ. In the seventh chapter and third verse he says, "So then if while her husband liveth she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law, so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man." Now if we are married to him who is raised from the dead, as Paul declares we are, how can we be under the law?

It would take pages to quote all that is written in the New Testament on this subject. But enough has already been said to show that we are not under the Jewish law. I care not how often they can find the law respected in the Old Testament, if it is done away in the New. The Spirit of the living God has not written in the fleshly tables of the heart that I must keep the seventh day. But to those who think they are under the law Paul says, "I know and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing unclean of itself, but to him that esteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean." And again, "For meat destroy not the work of God." "All things indeed are pure; but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence; and whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Now if any one conscientiously believes they must keep the seventh day, I say nothing against it, but I think they have no right to lay such burdens upon me.

THE POWER OF GOD.

"Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?"

Reader, here is a question asked. Can you answer it? I shall not be surprised if you say no, for I apprehend there are thousands of people in the world who having never beheld the wonderful operation on the wheels are entirely ignorant in regard to the power which the potter has over the clay. This very curious and ancient art is often referred to by the writers of the Bible. See Ps. 11: 9; Lam. 4: 2; Rev. 11: 27; Jer. 19: 10, 11. These passages serve to illustrate to a certain extent the power of God as manifested over nations, individuals, and especially in the resurrection of the dead.

For instance, the prophet Jeremiah compares the destruction of a nation to the breaking of a potter's bottle, which can never be made whole again. Now, then, the potter's bottle, which is formed of clay, is first dried and then burned in a furnace, or what is properly called a kiln, which makes it sufficiently hard to be of service; therefore no chemist has ever invented a cement which will make whole the burned bottle that has been broken. So it is with nations. They must be punished for their national sins while they exist as nations, and nations that become so corrupt in the sight of God as to be destroyed by him can never be made whole again.

Again, the apostle compares individuals to clay in the hands of the potter. The bottle which is formed of clay is first a vessel of honor. So man who was formed of the dust of the ground came from his Maker's hand a vessel of honor. Now before the bottle is burned, the potter is able to mar it in his hands, and make of the same lump a vessel of dishonor. So man (being a free moral agent, and superior to the clay), by rejecting eternal life and choosing evil, becomes marred by sin, and is raised in the morning of the resurrection a vessel of dishonor.

We look around and behold men upon every hand that suffer even in this life because of the sins which they have committed. Thus the power of God is manifested over individuals, and the passage of Scripture at the head of our article, instead of doing away with free moral agency, as many have supposed, sustains the doctrine, and proves to us very explicitly the power of God as manifested in the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust.

That Paul wrote and preached a great deal about the resurrection cannot be denied, and as proof that he was now referring to this subject, mark his language: "Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" The potter is able to take a lump of clay and make a vessel, then mar it in his hands, so that it is the same lump. So man, who is of the earth earthy, being marred by sin, returns to dust again; but as the potter has power to reconstruct another vessel of the same lump, so God has power in the resurrection morn to reconstruct or raise to life the same dust that was entombed years ago.

But Paul continues this subject by saying in the verse following the passage under consideration—"What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction?" That is, God endures with much long suffering the vessels of wrath; or, sinful men who reject the offers of mercy persist in evil doing, which makes them vessels of wrath fitted to destruction; therefore when the dead are raised they will be judged according to the deeds done in the body; those that have served God faithfully during probation will be raised vessels of honor, while others that have served the evil one will be raised vessels of dishonor. It is true to the wicked this doctrine is not pleasing, but to the righteous it is glad tidings.

If you are striving with the saints of the Most High to make your calling and election sure, may God help you; but if you are seeking for pleasure in this world of wo, and walking with the multitude in the road that leads to death, let me admonish you as a friend to seek the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near.

May the Lord guide us into all truth, and give us an abundant entrance into his kingdom, is the prayer of one who longs for Jesus to come.

"HAVE FAITH IN GOD."—Mark 11: 22.

God promised by the prophet Malachi that he would send Elijah the prophet before the great and dreadful day of the Lord should come, for the purpose of doing a special work. And when Christ came and his disciples began to investigate the Scriptures in order to "prove all things," they began to inquire for Elijah, and were told by Jesus "that if they would receive it" John was he, or that he should go before them in the spirit and power of Elijah to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. But the great and dreadful day of the Lord did not come then, but the ushering in of a new dispensation did, and John was the voice crying, Prepare the way, for there cometh one mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose. He seemed to have filled the picture only in type, for Jesus plainly told them that "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things," evidently a future work.

We pass over eighteen hundred years of Gentile time, and again we hear the voice saying, Prepare the way, for that same Jesus is coming again in like manner as he went away. The voice has gone north, south, east and west; but who has made ready? who has loved the sound," "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh"? The word will accomplish that for which it was sent. The spirit and power of Elijah will be found in it somewhere, for the type must have its antitype, and there was power in those disciples that then received it; so now "if ye will receive it" and not cast away your confidence, nor draw back unto perdition, and if the vision tarry, wait for it.

Dear brethren and sisters, are any of you shaken in mind concerning the Lord's soon coming, as Paul said to the Thessalonians? He cautioned them on this point, for it was necessary, that event being yet far in the future; but he has told us that He that was coming would come, and would not tarry; that is, beyond a certain time. Now shall any of us begin to say it is not best to be too positive about the doctrine that has distinguished us as a people? True, God is giving us an opportunity to return to Egypt if we want to, but for one I do not want to, for I know that the fig-tree has put forth its leaves, and that summer is near, if I do not know the day or the hour, and I know that He is faithful that has promised.

But when I look around, as did Christ's disciples, for the spirit and power of Elijah, oh how few that can with Paul say," "When I am weak then am I strong"! "because greater is He that is in them than he that is in the world." But there are a few who know if they abide in the vine and his words abide in them, and if they ask anything according to his will, they receive it; who know that faith has subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, and turned to flight the armies of the aliens. Yes, a few that do continue in prayer and watch unto the same with thanksgiving; watch for the answer, and when it comes, how the heart flows out in thanksgiving to God, even their God, that he should undertake for them in their distress. How this begets confidence to ask again, and this confidence begets love, and this perfect love casts out all fear. Like David they are ready to exclaim, "The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?" But sometimes we may ask for that which it would not be best for us to have, as Paul did, when he asked to have that thorn in the flesh removed; but He said unto him, "my grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." So then we find Paul glorying in that infirmity, for he had an equivalent in answer to his prayer, and he was quite as well satisfied with it. Then, dear brethren and sisters, let us rest in God and wait patiently for him. Yours, in hope of soon seeing my Lord.

MOSES ON SINAI.

BY R. THAYER.

When Moses on the top of Sinai stood,
That he might listen to the voice of God,—
He took no deadly weapons in his hand,
To slay the "rebels" who below did stand.
'Twas not his purpose midst those thunders shrill,
To execute a wicked people's will;
But to make known what God of them required,
Was the sole purpose which his lesson fired.
Hence, when as leader of the Jewish race,
He bore the "Tables" to the mountain's base,
And saw the people, like too many now,
Each ready to a "golden calf" to bow,—
Indignant there he threw the "Tables" down,—
So for our sins the Lord will us disown.

CHRISTIAN UNION.
"Sectarianism a Waste of Moral Power."

NUMBER SEVEN.

"Trust no party, church or faction,
Trust no 'leaders' in the fight:
But in every word and action,
Trust in God, and do the right."

Great as is the waste of visible means and intellectual labor, resulting from sectarianism, there is a waste yet more ruinous to the cause of christian progress, to which we have scarcely adverted,—we mean, the loss of moral and spiritual influence. Wealth and talent are only valuable to christianity, as they aid in deepening and widening her spiritual influence. When her power is untrammeled by error or fostered sin, and her soul is left to speak freely through appropriate forms, even though she be poor, she is mighty in regenerating influences. The morning of christian history illustrates most strikingly her majestic power. She was restricted to outward instrumentalities of little account in worldly eyes. If a few poor fishermen and Judean artisans could convulse the greatest empire of earth, and plant the standard of the cross in many lands, by their simple but sublime devotion to its principles, and because of their unvarying and unflinching consistency, what mighty results might be achieved under the same spirit, wielding the same principles, with the aid of a world's wealth and learning. But a spirit has crept into the church, which overbalances the power of her wealth and learning, and leaves her scarcely able to sustain her own weight, and with little power to make aggressions upon the dominions of darkness.

The sects are reduced to a struggle for existence. In this struggle, each must vie with all the others, in courting popular influences. These influences, from the days of Constantine, down to the last General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, have always been corrupting. Christianity is love. The church is an organization, instituted for the express and only purpose of so cultivating and illustrating the great law of love, as to bring all hearts under its control. The first commandment of our Savior,—that new commandment which he came to lay on all our hearts,—is, that ye "love one another." The church is the light of the world, designed to illuminate it, by showing the beauty and power of this commandment in associated action. All her forms should have this aim. All her doctrines must aid in this result, or they are mere sounding brass. It is love in action, governing and inspiring Christ's followers, which is to convert the race to goodness. Every practice, then, which weakens the power of love, or violates its plain requirements, obscures the light of christianity, and puts far away the world's conversion.

The spirit and practice of sectarianism is antagonistic to the law of love. To seek union with the object loved, is an impulse and a law of all beings in the universe, from the lowest to the highest. Voluntary separation, or schism, is everywhere the language of antipathy. The fact that christians are disunited, proves to the comprehension of all, that they do not love each other. Universal human consciousness decides that partyism, whether in social, political, or religious life, is selfish. It does not require great power of logic to bring us to this conviction. It only requires a mere surface examination of the workings of human passion. You can no more make sensible men believe that two conflicting sects love each other, than you can make them believe that two opposing political parties love each other. If the various political parties should make high professions of love for each other, the world would regard such professions as the sheerest hypocrisy. The same will ever be true of opposing sects; while they profess love for each other as churches. That some of the christians in these opposing sects love each other, in spite of the corrupting influences of their parties, we do not doubt. But this fact does not invalidate our argument; because, if a few men escape from the influence of a false position, it does not disprove the general corrupting tendencies of such a position. It will not do for us to infer, that because a few moderate drinkers never become drunkards, therefore, moderate drinking does not generally lead to drunkenness.

Ages of sectarian education have utterly failed to reconcile even sectaries themselves to the spirit of sectism. Deeply immersed in its spirit as are the sects,—and especially the clergy, one can scarcely find even a clergyman, who does not condemn sectarianism in the abstract. Each condemns every form of wrong, except the peculiar form of it practised by his own sect. They all acknowledge its sinfulness, when practised by others, thus condemning themselves. The acknowledgment, that drunkenness is wrong, on the part of him who gets drunk, does not diminish his guilt, but shows that he is constantly trampling upon an enlightened conscience. His case may well be regarded as all the more hopeless for his admissions, while he continues to commit the sin he condemns. A church which admits slavery to be a crime, but continues to hold slaves, sinks all the lower in our estimation, because of its admission; so a sect, which acknowledges the evil and wrong of sectarianism, and yet continues its practices only proves, by its admission, that its conscience is hardened, and that it is in the habit of trampling upon its own convictions. All men of thought must ever hold christians to their own convictions of right and wrong, and demand of them, as the price of their confidence, to cease from what they admit to be wrong.

Intelligent ministers of the gospel are so well aware of the antagonism between the spirit of the gospel and sectarianism, that, whenever they decide to make a special effort to promote religion, they begin by preaching against sectarianism. The revival preacher has no hope of general success, unless party lines can be temporarily obliterated. He urges all christians to come together to work for God and souls. He tells them to forget that they belong to different churches, and to pray and exhort as if they were all of one family. The revival keeps even pace with the progress of this unity. As the Spirit of God takes possession of the community, those questions of "principle" and "duty," which compelled them to separate, are forgotten. They are absorbed in saving their neighbors, rather than in building up their party. They say they know no difference between the christians of different sects. They love them all alike. Just in proportion as they impress the idea of this union upon the world, the revival is successful. This state of facts has been many times repeated, and is significant in its teachings. This temporary union, with all its good results, must either be wrong, or else it is a great sin to break it up. If an outpouring of God's Spirit accompanies this temporary union, would it not ever attend a permanent union? If christians grow in grace, during such seasons, while the union continues, would not the church be edified, if the union was never broken? If it is right for christians to love each other, enough to work together a few weeks in the winter, ought they not to labor together the whole year? If souls are converted more frequently during the union, would they not be converted much more rapidly, if these christians never turned back to their party haunts and practices? If ministers are doing right to preach union during a revival, is it not a wrong, tinged with hypocrisy, to preach and practise partyism, as soon as the converts begin to multiply? If the doctrinal differences can be laid aside for a short time to save souls, can these doctrines be of importance enough to divide the church? If souls are saved by ignoring them for the time, had they not better be dropped altogether, until the souls are all gathered in? A multitude of such questions will always arise in the minds of thinking persons. They can not be put aside; and the influence is irresistible, that these spasmodic unions are wrong, or else, the after divisions back into the old sects are doubly criminal. The revival declines by the reversal of the law of its growth. The first appearance of the party spirit, is the signal for its decline. Whenever that spirit appears, love grows cold, and selfishness seeks proselytes to different factions. The very men who preached union on the start, put on the party uniform, and lead off into sectarian skirmishing. The duty to repent, and the danger of delay,—the worth of the soul and the claims of God, are no longer the burden of the preaching. The duty to use a certain amount of water in baptism, or the danger of joining the opposite party, and the wrath of the creed, and the claims of the sect leader, now form the staple of the sermons.

Ministers who knelt together in prayer over the converts, when the spirit of party revives, will often be found striving to circumvent each other by all the small tricks of proselytism. It is almost incredible what a change the revival of this spirit produces. The converts look on in astonishment at first, but finally join in the indiscriminate warfare, and divide into the different factions. The community is, by this time, in a general state of excitement. Men who were grave and thoughtful on the question, during the union of the sects, now become cynical, and sneer at the whole subject of religion, as a farce. One such revival, with its sectarian after-piece, does more to harden the minds of thoughtful men against religion, than could be accomplished by scores of infidel books. The baser passions of our nature find full scope in such party quarrels, and the reaction consequent upon such scenes rolls back the cause of religious progress to a point far beyond where the revival commenced. Sectarianism is a reproach to christendom in its mildest, most peaceful guise; but, when aroused by party leaders, it is like a demon unbound.

We might fill a volume with extracts from sectarian writers themselves, to prove our views on this question. The Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Rhode Island said, on a recent occasion:

"The world is not to be converted by flying detachments, going out from the army of Christ, each marching where it pleases, and doing what it pleases, and never remaining long enough anywhere to hold the territory it has subdued. And comparatively little will be done in exterior conquest, while so much of our strength is wasted in internecine warfare. Five-sixths of all our theological intellect is expended in mutual controversy and recrimination. While the world is perishing for lack of knowledge and multitudes, even in christian lands, have never heard of Jesus, except when his sacred name is used to point a jest or adorn a blasphemy, we are discussing and rediscussing questions, of which the very terms are, possibly, indefinable; and the same terms are used, and the same rejoinders made, for the thousandth time, leaving all parties where they were at the beginning."

GOD IS NOT PARTIAL.

It has been asserted by some who never "tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come," that "God, in rejecting some, and saving others, is partial." That such is an untruthful assertion, I will, by the help of the Lord, endeavor to show. Suppose, for an illustration, that a city is suffering from famine, and that all their money, houses, furniture, lands, and everything but their garments they have on, have been sold for bread, and now they are ready to perish with hunger. Unless food is obtained from some source, they must die. Soon, a person of immense wealth hears of their condition, and immediately purchases enough provisions to feed that people for three months, and establishes a depot for the free distribution of these bounties, in the heart of that city. He causes a proclamation to be made to all the inhabitants, inviting and entreating them to ask for and receive the food provided for them, without money and without price. He simply requires of them to "come to the depot, ask and receive." Some of the inhabitants comply with the conditions, while the others refuse. Could any one justly accuse that great benefactor of partiality, who refused to ask for the food, because he had supplied those who had asked? We at once should say, they were an ungrateful class, who, though they knew they must perish if they not did accept the offered bounties, still refused to ask, and accused the giver of unfairness or partiality. "Justice" would say at once, let those grumblers die.

Thus it is in "spiritual things." Every one is a sinner. The wages of sin is death. Every sinner is exposed to death. A great Benefactor comes to earth, and purchases salvation for all sinners at the cost of his own precious blood. He is the Savior of all men, because he died for all. Jesus having purchased salvation for all, invites all to come unto him without money and without price. He says, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." "Ask, and ye shall receive." The invitation is not to a few, but to all. Though all the gold of Ophir cannot purchase salvation, we may have it by complying with the terms. Some have accepted, and are the daily recipients of the bread of heaven. Salvation has been brought to this perishing world, the principal depot being Mount Calvary. The great Life-giver was lifted up there, and all men were drawn unto him. He invites the perishing to come to Mount Calvary and eat that bread which will give eternal life.

Dear sinner, God loves you, as much as he loves me. Salvation is for you, and me, and everybody. I have asked, and have received. You have refused to ask, therefore have not received. No one is to blame but yourself. God will not save you against your will. He has thrown wide open the doors of the kingdom of heaven, purchased eternal life and glory, and then says, "Ask, and ye shall receive." Sinner, are you higher than God, that you can refuse to do that? Let me entreat of you to repent of your sins, and be reconciled to God, that you may, through Jesus Christ, live forever. "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?"

EXTRACTS FROM STILLING.

BRO. GRANT:—As I am in possesion of a German work, written by that great and pious man, called "Young Stilling," some sixty years ago, in which he among others speaks considerably on the last times, I propose to send you now and then some extracts, that may be of some interest to your readers.

Vol. 8, page 572, Young Stilling says: "O, ye poor Laodiceans, how soon ye will have to regret your lukewarm condition, but then it will be much too late. There is no doubt (everything indicates it) that the present age goes rapidly towards its end; things cannot remain in this state much longer. But there are yet other proofs of this fact. Satan is old; he gained a great deal of experience in fighting with our Savior for nearly six thousand years. Concerning the supremacy over the earth and its inhabitants he has learned much during all this time; out of one head there have come seven now; but he is neither omniscient or almighty, therefore he is disappointed many a time, and soon all his attempts will fail him and he will find himself disappointed altogether. That at the present time the man of sin is at the door, we may with safety conclude from these very attempts of Satan; he has found out that he cannot gain his object by mere cruelty and tyranny, because this arouses mankind so, that they loosen themselves before they are caught in his snares. Neither has he succeeded by a man, who has tried all in his power (Napoleon I.) to become universal monarch, who is showing his design too openly, and who is determined to gain his object by war and bloodshed; because this at last awakens the other rulers, and the Lord uses them to bring the plans of Satan to nought. Meanwhile this leads many to repentance, who afterwards become true followers of Christ. There is therefore, no other means left for Satan in order to gain his object than bottomless subtlety.

"Soon after this there will therefore rise a man very silent (unexpected); he will pretend religion and holiness, distinguish himself from all other men by many and great acts of seeming benevolence, and thereby attract the attention of all Christendom, and this is the very thing he desires; he will even work seeming miracles, and hereby deceive the world, and even those who are not entirely firm in their religion. In all this he will be mightily supported by the false prophet. By-and-by he will, through all kinds of intrigues and mysterious politics, unite with himself different powers, and become their head, in consequence of which he will receive great worldly power; then he will gradually commence to announce a universal reformation. By arguments, which shall to the most seem very reasonable, he will show that the christian religion is not sufficient to make man truly happy; on the contrary, that it is rather a hinderance, and that God therefore has sent him as the true Messiah in order to make all mankind happy indeed. This, then, the false prophet will warmly and with great earnestness recommend to the people, and with deceiving arguments confirm and show that such an one deserved divine honor and to be worshiped as such. Now there will not be any deficiency in regard to pictures, portraits, busts and statues, which will represent the wonderful man, before which they bow down and worship.

"At this time the true worshipers of the Lord will be persecuted; perhaps also the Jews; then it will be most necessary to heed the terrible warning and to keep it constantly before our eyes, which is found in Rev. 14: 9–11. This now is the great trying hour, which shall come over all Christendom, that will cleanse the true church of Christ from all false worshipers, and a total and perfect separation between these and the true disciples of Christ will be the final result. Now the man of sin will throw off his mask, because his power has reached its highest point; the false prophet also will sound his dragon-voice; the son of perdition makes use of his great power, and tries to sweep the christian religion from the face of the earth. Now appears the mark of the beast and his number. But at this time the Lord will send a deliverer, who will gather the little flock, and bring them into a place of safety. At the same time will also probably take place the return of the Jews into Palestine, if not sooner. And now will commence those awful judgments of the seven vials, whose outpouring is chiefly directed upon apostolic Christendom. Now the man of sin makes his last attempt; the Lord appears, and he throws him and all his worshipers into the lake of fire and brimstone. Perhaps the man of sin may be the last Pope; he will, through hypocrisy, deceive the church-leaders, go through all the different degrees and at last be placed upon the throne."

This even predicts a Catholic priest, Pater Lambert, in Paris, in a very important work: "Explanation of the prophecies, given to the church." This important work made its appearance a few years ago in the French language and is now translated into the German.

HOW IT LOOKS.

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul," (or creature.)—Gen. 2: 7.

It is claimed on the part of many, that this breath of life is a part of the Deity, consequently we possess an immortal principle, or soul, which cannot die, but must exist as long as God exists. The Bible nowhere teaches such a doctrine. But suppose such to be true, and that our souls are a part of the Deity. Let us see what this theory comes to.

First, if the soul is the essence of Deity, then God is not one and indivisible, but a multitude.

Second, on that theory, either there is no such thing as sin, or a part of God sins; if a part of God sins, then some parts of him are opposed to other parts of him, and thus God is divided against himself.

Third, as the soul is some times unhappy, it follows, on that theory, that part of God is sometimes unhappy; and if the endless misery doctrine be true, then many parts of God will be endlessly miserable. That is not all, as those in endless torments are represented, by the immortal-soul theorists, as eternally cursing God and blaspheming his name; then many parts of the essence of Deity will be eternally cursing the other parts of the essence of Deity; unless those theorists can make out, some how, that these immortal souls get so wicked that they cease to be a part of the Deity. But if so, then a part of the Deity is annihilated, or, which is the same thing, a part of the essence of Deity is converted into that which is not a part of himself. Men act now-a-days as if they were gods, possessed of the Devil.

ORTHODOXY.

A certain minister said, in a discourse on a funeral occasion, at his church, his text being—"It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power," that the text had no reference to the dead body in that connection, but applied to the living; and then declared that the deceased was shouting triumph over death, in the presence of God. He then quoted verses 51, 52–56, proving the shouting to be after the trump shall sound. Some of his members thought it a masterly effort. So did I, but an effort to wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction. One declared she did not care what the Bible said, she had heard people shout victory over death when they passed away from earth. May God save us from such monstrous doctrines.

For the World's Crisis

NOTE TO BRO. MUNGER.

Your note in the Crisis, respecting the need of an appropriate work upon our nearness to the Savior's coming, has been noticed. I acquiesce in your opinion that such a work is needed—yes, several of them; and while I do not object to preparing one (and intend to do so), I hope that Brn. Thurman and Himes will not hold back; and let the one you propose to "block out" be forthcoming also. We have a great work to do in a little while, and the more others fight, the harder we must work. God demands it at our hands. No matter if we are told it is enough to "be ready," without meddling with the time,—just a reiteration of the cry of the churches,—"no matter whether Christ is near or not, it is enough to be ready for death." All the powers of darkness combined cannot blot out the past Advent movement. It is recognized in the Bible, and pious scoffs and sanctimonious jeers can never destroy the fact the church was to make such a movement; and it now stands as a fulfillment of prophecy, instead of a great bugbear in the way of our understanding time. Instead of looking to the '43 failure, as a caution against meddling with time again, it is to me one of the conspicuous monuments that the church was to pass before the time was to be understood; and seeing we are past it, and in the last watch, I am encouraged to look for light, instead of saying, "We can't know."

No matter if we are told we can love Christ's appearing a great way off just as well as near by,—the further off, the better some love it, I fear. No matter if some do take one of the Savior's statements out of its latitude,—"Ye know not when the time is," and locate it where Christ never applied it; time is in the Bible, and scoffs and jeers can never change the fact. No matter if we are told that the event itself will reveal the time. No; the event will confirm the time previously revealed. Did the event of the first coming of Messiah reveal the time? No; it was previously revealed, and the event proved the time right. Did the event of the crucifixion reveal the time? No, it only confirmed a previous revelation. Time is given in the Bible, and events accord therewith. No matter if we are told that the "signs" are enough; if God had thought so, he would have given nothing but signs; but there is time in the Bible too, and we can't get it out of the Bible. It is there, not to be treated as though Satan was its author, but to benefit the church. If we have not the right time, let the right time be shown us; but every attempt to make it appear that time cannot be understood will be like blowing against the wind. We can't be coaxed or driven back on to that old platform. Let cold-hearted haters of this glorious event stand there, but Adventists never. What God has put into the Bible to be understood in the "time of the end," we have a special right to. It is our property. I have fully counted the cost, and am launching out, under God's blessing, ready to share in the reproach which this step will bring. God's frowns would rest upon me should I try to smother up the light. It does not alarm me in the least to think that Satan will raise a great stir to hinder the work; it is another proof that the work is of God. What if he shall succeed in converting some of the formerly faithful ones into instruments to aid his cause, and thereby blind the eyes of some of the children,—it is no new trick.

W. SHELDON.

ORIGEN.

Neander, the distinguished church historian, when speaking of Origen, who lived in the third century, and was so noted for changing the doctrine of christianity into a mystical character, says:—

"In what high consideration he stood with the churches of these countries [Palestine, Arabia, Phœnicia, and Achaia] is evident from the fact that on every important ecclesiastical question on which it was difficult to come to a decision the opinion of Origen was asked even by synods of Bishops. A case of this sort, in which Beryllus, the bishop of Bostra in Arabia, submitted to be taught by him, was noticed on a former occasion. We may here mention another instance: a controversy had been excited by a party among the Arabian christians asserting that the human soul died with the body, and that, together with the body, it was not to be revived till the resurrection,—an ancient Jewish notion. Perhaps, too, among these tribes, who by their situation were brought into frequent contact with Jews, it was no new doctrine, but one which had prevailed there from ancient times; and perhaps (if indeed the general voice was thus early pronounced against them) it was the influence of Origen,—in whose system the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, which is akin to God, held an important place,—that first gained a general reception for the latter doctrine, and caused the small party who still adhered to the old opinion to be regarded as heretical. This explains how the convention of a great synod came to be thought necessary for the purpose of settling these disputes. As they could not come to any agreement, Origen was sent for; and by his arguments the opponents of the soul's natural immortality were brought to confess and to renounce their error." To his parenthetic observation above,—"if indeed the general voice was thus early pronounced against them"—Neander attaches the following note: "Eusebius (l. VI. c. 37) may perhaps judge concerning the controversies of these times too much according to his own subjective views and orthodoxy of his age, when he represents the defenders of this opinion of men generally acknowledged to be teachers of error and propagators of a new doctrine."—Neander's Church History, Vol. II, pp. 480, 1.—Exchange.

BE WISE.

Let us be among the wise, for the wise shall understand. What are the wise to understand? It is very evident that it is time. How can any unprejudiced mind think otherwise? I think it is very plain to every mind that wishes to understand, what the prophet Daniel meant by "the wise shall understand;" for the time is what he is talking about. I do not see any reason why the time is in the Bible if it is not for us to understand. I believe we can know something about the time of the Lord's coming.

I mean by the grace of God to be among the wise.

QUERY.—Why does the prophetic element preponderate in the Jewish Scriptures?

ANS. Because Judaism was a religion of the future. "And the New Testament (says Lange, commentary on Matthew, p. 14), is throughout a prophecy of the second coming of Christ." Even so, Lord, come quickly! Amen.

DANIEL 8: 4.

"BRO. GRANT:— . . . I would like to have you give in the Crisis all the light you have on Dan. 8: 4; especially on the term 'beasts,' for the benefit of the household of faith."

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

The text reads as follows: "I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great."

In the first place we will give the full definition (omitting the words in Hebrew type) of the word ghahy, rendered "beasts" in the text, as found in the Hebrew lexicon of Gesenius, who is a standard author. In order that the reader, who may not have a Bible at hand, may fully understand the application and use of the word under consideration, we will quote the passages referred to by Gesenius, and put them in brackets, immediately following the chapter and verse mentioned in the definition. Let the reader observe that the words in italics are as they are found in Gesenius; while the words in SMALL CAPITALS, included in the brackets, represent the words in our Bible which are translated from the Hebrew word ghahy, which is rendered beasts in Dan. 8: 4.

A) Adj. "1. Alive, living, Gen. 43: 7, is your father yet alive? v. 27, 28. 45: 3, 26. 46: 30. 2. Life, Ezra 6: 10. Dan. 7: 12." [Ez. 6: 10,—"Pray FOR THE LIFE OF the king." Dan. 7: 2,—"Yet their LIVES were prolonged."]

The foregoing is the full definition of the word ghahy, rendered "beasts" in Dan. 8: 4. The word occurs 509 times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and is rendered "living," "life," "alive," etc., in harmony with the foregoing definition, 412 times; and might be thus rendered in all other places, and be in harmony with the context. It is not once used to represent a government, unless it is in the text under consideration; and if thus used there, it is contrary to the meaning of the word. We know of but one correct way to settle the meaning of a word, and that is, to examine all the passages where the word occurs; and after doing this, as in this case, and finding it never used symbolically to represent a political power, our own mind is fully settled that it is not used to denote governments in Dan. 8: 4, but people, properly represented by the word LIVING, as in Isa. 38: 19, where the same word occurs as follows:—"The LIVING, the LIVING, he shall praise thee, as I do this day."

Any one can see at a glance that it would make strange sense to put beast in the place of "life," "living," etc., in the definitions of ghahy, as given by Gesenius.

The fact that in the Septuagint the word ghahy in the Hebrew of Dan. 8: 4, is translated by the Greek word theerion, the same word that is used in the Greek to denote a wild beast, only shows that the translators understood that the word was used in that sense; but had they carefully examined the word in all passages where it occurs, we think they would not have rendered it "beasts" in Dan. 8: 4, compelling the reader to use it there in a symbolical sense, and contrary to all other uses of the word. The meaning of the word cannot be settled by some particular translation of it in a single passage; but by an examination of all its uses. Taking the latter method, we see no room for doubt in the case, that it is not used in a symbolical sense in Dan. 8: 4, nor any where else, to denote political powers.

We understand the simple meaning of the passage to be, as before expressed, that the "pushing" of the ram, or Media and Persia, was against Daniel's people, the Jews, in the twelfth year of Artaxerxes, when he issued a decree, at the instigation of Haman and his family, represented by the "ribs" in the mouth of the "bear," or Media and Persia, "to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish ALL JEWS, both young and old, little children and women, in one day," in "all the king's provinces," which were 127.—Esther 3: 13. After the issue of this terrible decree, which is without a parallel in the history of the world, as the power of the king was absolute, he saw reason to change his mind, and issue another decree, directly opposite to this, giving the Jews the privilege of defending themselves against all who should attempt to kill them. Thus, "he did according to his will," and the people of the Lord were saved from destruction.

As this is the first event in the vision, and a most important one, we see no reason why we should not date the beginning of the vision, and the 2300 days and seventy weeks, at this point, which may be clearly shown to be at B. C. 426.

ON DATES.

The following occurs in the correspondence department of "The Rainbow," an Advent Monthly of London:—

"I fear you are committing a great error in joining with those who discourage calculation of dates in the study of prophecy, as history foretold."

1st. "As to the seventy weeks;—Daniel set his heart upon the investigation, and sought the knowledge by prayer; and the dates were revealed. (See Dan. 9: 1–27.) As to the sealing;—'The wise' were to 'understand.' (Dan. 12: 10.)

2nd. Though the full revelation of the dates of events, to the end of time, was in a measure sealed, as stated in Dan. 12: 9, 10, yet our Lord, after his ascension, brake the seven seals, and communicated the full revelation by John, with all remaining data, by which the 'wise' can understand the 'times and seasons.' Our Lord before his ascension said (it is true), 'It is not for you to know,' etc.; but he added, 'but ye shall receive power after,' etc. (Acts 7: 8.)

With these views, fully supported, as I think, by Scripture, I fear you are committing a great error in joining with those who discourage calculation of dates in the study of prophecy as history foretold."

"THE COMING MAN."

There is much talk among Spiritualists, about "the coming man;"—some one who is to take the lead in the great movement, got up by the spirits and those whom they have "deceived." We have met those who affirm that they have seen him, but will not tell who he is; but say he is about to begin his important work of reconstructing the distracted elements of society.

A writer in the Circular, of Jan. 30th, 1865, says:—"We understand on good authority that there are about three hundred individuals scattered through the world, each of whom claims to be the coming man."

"NAPOLEON'S 'JULIUS CÆSAR.'"

Napoleon III., in his history of Julius Cæsar, says: "My object is to prove that when Providence raises up such men as Cæsar, Charlemagne and Napoleon" ('and of course Napoleon III.'), "it is to trace out for the people the course they ought to pursue, and to set the seal of their genius upon a new era, and so accomplish the labor of several ages in a few years. Happy the nations who understand and follow them." Rainbow, April 1, 1865, p. 190.

John Mason, Ponteland, Newcastle-on-Tyne, March 14, 1865, writes in the April number of the Rainbow, as follows: "We are now looking for the covenant being made for seven years between Napoleon and the Jews. And last week, a friend drew my attention to the following in the Methodist Recorder, a London newspaper: 'The house of Rothschild has summoned all its agents abroad to a conference to take place at Paris.' It is evident from chronological prophecies, and from the signs of the times, that the second advent of our Lord draweth nigh."

"1867."

"The great writers on prophecy, with the Bible in one hand and history in the other, almost unanimously conclude that this dispensation will close, and the promised rest commence, about or soon after 1867." "The first theologians of their age . . . concur in the interpretations of the prophet's epochs, and bring us by their calculations to A. D. 5992, and the greatest chronologist living, or perhaps dead, brings us to A. D. 5992."—Rainbow, April, 1865, p. 155. By J. M. N.

In a "Pastoral Address," by E. H. Tucker, pastor of the Priory church, Exeter, [Eng.] He says: "The cry is now being uttered throughout all Christendom, 'Behold, the Bridegroom cometh,' and in this fact we read one of the especial signs that he will not much longer tarry."—Rainbow, April, 1865, p. 158.

"666."

"Prof. E. R. Hodges, of Bath St., Bristol, [Eng.] a Rabbinical and Hebrew scholar for twenty-five years, and formerly Episcopal missionary of the Jews' Society, has carefully considered Mr. Govett's assertions,* and state that they are unwarrantable, and that those words may fairly and legitimately be so spelt in Hebrew as to agree with this view."—Rainbow, for April 1865, p. 186. Signed "Audi Alteram Partem."

* Mr. Govett's assertion was, that the name "Louis Napoleon Bonaparte does not contain 666, as the total value of its letters in Hebrew."

"THE MISSION OF SUFFERING."

The above heading is the title of a very interesting tract, by Sr. A. P. Jolliffe, of Philadelphia. It is from the pen of one of the most intelligent and devoted christians we ever met. None but one who has had a deep experience could write such a tract. It is addressed "TO A PASTOR IN TRYING CIRCUMSTANCES." Price five cents. "LAID ON THE TABLE."

At the late National Unitarian Convention, held in New York the forepart of last April, it is said "an overture was made toward the union of the Unitarian and Universalist bodies." During the Convention, one of its members, thinking that some of the leading men were departing too far from the Bible standard, "presented some doctrinal points which he thought the Convention ought to adopt as a bond of unity. These were belief in the holy Scriptures as a revelation from God—in one God the Father—in one Jesus Christ—gifted with supernatural power, approved by God, by miracles, signs and wonders, and by Divine authority commanding the devout and reverential faith of all who claimed the christian name—in the Holy Ghost the Comforter—in the forgiveness of sins—the resurrection of the dead and life everlasting. The adoption of these articles to constitute a member of the Unitarian faith. A vote was taken on the resolutions and they were at once laid on the table."

We find no account of the resolutions being taken from the table; hence it is understood that the majority were opposed, and unwilling to adopt them. Therefore it appears they can be "a member of the Unitarian faith" without believing the foregoing "doctrinal points." We shall leave the reader to come to his own conclusions in the matter.

HOW CHANGED.

How rapidly the customs of the people are changing; especially in relation to moral and sacred things. Anything bordering on religious restraint seems to be trampled upon with delight, on the part of a large portion of community. They seem unwilling to show any respect for christian observances. Any thing that fetters their fullest liberty to do as they please, they are anxious to have demolished.

The following from an exchange paper, professedly religious, will illustrate the point:—

"On Sunday, the 18th of this month, a large crowd witnessed the launch of a gunboat in the Monongahela, opposite the city; the stage of water was quite favorable, and the operation proved satisfactory to all. The grace and ease with which the new vessel glided into the river, reflected the greatest credit on those who controlled her movements, and all agreed in regarding her as a splendid specimen of naval architecture. It was evident, however, that neither the enterprising contractors nor the delighted spectators had the fear of Sabbatarians before their eyes, so some sanctimonius individual takes occasion through the columns of a city paper to denounce what he regards as a desecration of the Sabbath.

Are we forever to be annoyed with this canting prattle about the Sabbath, or shall narrow-minded bigots be allowed, whenever so disposed, to ventilate through the public press their crude notions on christian obligations, and inflict their ill-timed and stupid homilies on a patient and long suffering public?"

Those who lived thirty years since little thought that the morals of our country would be at this time as they are, and that scarcely any one would venture to sound an alarm. How truly are the prophetic scriptures fulfilling all that relate to "the last days." "Perilous times" have come.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

With the first of July next, the Young Pilgrim will commence its third year. Its present financial condition will, at that time, demand some change in its publication; in regard to which your advice and co-operation is desired. Your attention, therefore, is urgently invited to the following facts and suggestions:

Such was the prosperity of its first year, while a monthly at 25 cents, and such the impulse given to its circulation at its beginning, running it up before the year's close to 7000, and its receipts meeting expenses, that the prospect of its continued increase to ten or twelve thousand during another year was thought encouraging and almost certain; hence, in compliance with the earnest solicitation of its friends, it was decided to make it a semi-monthly at the beginning of its second year, and put it at the low price of 30 cents.

But, instead of the expected increase, its circulation fell at once, on the commencement of its second year, to 4000, to which number additions have since been made, till now, at near its close the circulation is about 5400.

With so small a circulation, it is impossible, under current expenses, for any paper of its kind to sustain itself on 30 cents a year. Hence, for some months, the Pilgrim has been running behind; and, at the close of its second year in July next, its receipts will be some five or six hundred dollars less than its expenses.

Some change will therefore need to be made at that time in its publication,—either by issuing it but once a month at its present price, or by continuing it semi-monthly at an advanced price of forty or fifty cents. Which it shall be, will be left to the friends to decide, between now and July next. They are doubtless as public-spirited, and, according to their means, as just and liberal as the people of any other denomination; and as they have had the paper the past year for less than cost, and at a much lower price than almost any paper of the kind in the country, they will surely be willing, the coming year, to pay at least as much as do the subscribers to other denominational papers. As some may not be aware of the difference between our prices and theirs, the following comparison will give them some idea of what the price of the Pilgrim should have been the past year, and what it must be the coming year, to make it self-sustaining.

While the Young Pilgrim goes to its subscribers semi-monthly for 30 cents a year, the Myrtle (Boston), with nearly triple its circulation, charges 50 cents, and the S. S Advocate, S. S. Star, etc., semi-monthlies, of immensely larger circulation (some of them of smaller size and less matter),—40 cents.

The Youth's Millennial Banner goes to its subscribers once a month for 40 cents a year; the Young Pilgrim twice a month for only 30 cents a year. The Youth's Instructor (though nominally published monthly for 25 cents a year) calls for and receives from its subscribers 50 cents. The S. S. Gazette, S. S. Messenger, etc., and the Child at Home (with a circulation of 150,000), are issued monthly for 30 cents a year; while the semi-monthly Pilgrim (with only 5400 subscribers) sends out to each subscriber twice as many papers in the year for the same money.

There are some few papers that are published at a smaller price; but these are issued, at a loss, by large funded societies, which, publishing also Sunday School books, etc., make use of their Sunday School papers as a convenient and profitable advertising medium for the sale of the same. While such societies can afford to throw away with one hand what it is certain to bring back into the other, the Christian Publication Society, having no such books to advertise, and no funds to throw away, cannot do this; and hence its friends will not make the prices of such papers a criterion for the Pilgrim.

Had the fall in its subscription list been foreseen, the Society would probably not have decided to publish it semi-monthly; or, if they had, they would doubtless have fixed its price at least as high as other semi-monthlies, that is, at 40 or 50 cents, as it should have been, to enable it to meet expenses.

Such being the condition of things, the Business Agent has no alternative but to carry out the wishes of the Society, as expressed by vote at one of its meetings, and make such arrangement as may be necessary to render the Young Pilgrim "self-sustaining,"—either by advancing its price, or putting it back to a monthly; unless some other plan shall be suggested. As the action which he shall take in the matter will be influenced by the wishes of the Young Pilgrim's friends and subscribers he hopes to receive a general and immediate response from all such, and from all who are interested in the moral and religious instruction of our young.

Shall it continue as a semi-monthly, at 40 or 50 cents a year, or, shall it visit you but once a month, for 30 cents a year? Let us hear from you at once.

☞ As many who have received the Young Pilgrim, the past year, for less than it has cost, will be glad to do what they can, by sending 10, 15 or 20 cents, or more, to help make up the deficiency, we open again the Sunday School Fund, and would suggest to superintendents and teachers, members of clubs, and others who may feel disposed, the need of contributions for this object.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—Owing to the beautiful spring time, in which the agricultural people are occupied from day dawn till late in the evening, we have preached but eighteen times during the past month, mostly upon sanctification of heart, tongue, and communion with God, and on the necessity of being the salt of the earth, and a light, not only to Italy, but to all the surrounding nations; that only by a mighty effort can they overcome the snares of Satan, and the effects of the long, cruel oppression of his distinguished agent, the bloody Papacy. But we are rejoiced to live in this happy generation, in which God in his mercy protects his people, so that they can serve him and even preach the entire destruction of the "man of sin" without personal danger, near his tottering throne. We are satisfied that the church of "wise virgins" especially in Italy, must be "clothed with the sun," Rev. 12: 1, and have in their foreheads the pure doctrines preached by the twelve apostles of Christ. For as the moon reflects the rays of the sun, so that without the aid of artificial light we can walk in the night and not stumble, so the light of the Holy Spirit shining on the Bible, enlightens its sacred pages and enables the church to walk in faith and righteousness without the aid of the corrupted forms and doctrines of men.

A church of such, and only such, enlightened, sanctified members, we are striving with the help of God to build in Piedmont, and believe, that he will bless and prosper such a pure and holy work. As we have written in our past reports, it is very painful to our hearts that the ministers of the national church are against us. But the people say to their preachers: "You speak always the same things, that the American missionary preaches erroneous doctrines, and that he and those that follow him, are wrong, but you do not prove him wrong in a single point, while he, with the Bible in one hand and history in the other, proves you wrong in every respect, and you cannot deny it."

We thank God for such testimony, and we pray him earnestly to bless the efforts we put forth in weakness, and keep us continually in the right spirit, so that if we do good, we may feel that it is not we, but Jesus Christ who works in us who accomplishes the work, and be very grateful for the privilege of being his humble instrumenst. But in order to prosecute this great work vigorously and efficiently, as I wrote you in my last report, we must have a press.

Dear brethren and sisters, we thank you, from the depths of our hearts, for your noble assistance in the establishment of this mission, in which we have labored conscientiously, with all the ability God has given us. But as the warm season has commenced, in which the people labor very early in the morning and late at night, resting themselves under the shadow of their trees, during the heat of the day, there is no opportunity to preach to them accept Sundays, and as they have but little reading besides the Bible, they would prize much some religious tracts to read as they rest from their labors at midday. I can improve this season in writing and translating tracts for the press, and when published would let my dear brethren evangelists, and our Catholic converts, and colporteurs go over the Alpine mountains and through these lovely vales to distribute them to the people—and especially to send to those to whom we have not access to speak, as to His Majesty the King, to princes, lords, cardinals, bishops and priests, etc., Rev. 10: 2, that all may be solemnly advertised that Jesus is soon coming and be without excuse when he comes. And not only in French and Italian, but in all the Slavonian dialects, etc., as kind Heaven may give us ability to do. To further this great work, we say again and again, dear brethren and sisters, help us at once to have a press.

We rejoice in the glorious news that we received from the United States last week, that victory has turned on the right side; that the cause of freedom has triumphed! And our faith is increased that now is the time to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom with a loud voice, not only to those who have been in spiritual bondage in Italy, but to the freedmen of the South. Now let the rebels weep for the loss of their negroes, and the Pope his temporal power forever, the Turks cleanse and enlarge the streets of the old "Agar," the city of Jerusalem, the Empress of France collect money from the Catholic princes for a new and magnificent temple and palace "in the glorious, holy mountain," Dan. 11: 45, and we, brethren and sisters, let us watch and pray, and joyfully sacrifice our time, our talents and our money to spread all abroad the news of His speedy coming and kingdom, and we shall receive our reward when he comes. Your faithful brother in Christ,

M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

We wish to talk a little with our friends and readers about money matters. The Young Pilgrim has been published during the year past and sent to subscribers at a price less than the cost. The Society has thus paid out some $500 or $600 more than all they have received for the paper. This cannot long continue. What shall we do?

1. Shall we send out the Pilgrim once a month, and yet charge about the same price we do now?

2. Shall we send it twice a month, and charge 40 or 50 cents a year for it?

3. Shall we send it as we do now, and depend on every boy, and girl, and man, and woman, to get us several new subscribers, so that we can print three or four times as many papers as we now do, and then ask our friends that have money to take hold and help pay up the deficiency?

We wish to hear from our friends at once about this matter. It is important that it be attended to directly. Who is willing to write and pay something to aid in the good work? Next month many of the subscriptions must be renewed. Who will get up a club and send in the money for 50 or 100 subscribers? Be ready when your time expires, as we only send to those who pay in advance.

We wish that brethren who are able to assist would write at once and say what they think of this matter; and if a number of persons have ten or twenty or fifty or an hundred dollars each to help make up past deficiencies, and start the paper on a good basis for the future, we will be able to go on as we are now going and furnish the children with the paper. Let us hear from you at once. Direct all letters to the Young Pilgrim, Boston, Mass.

HEBREW CONCORDANCES.

Several persons have inquired for these valuable books. I know of none for sale in the country. If ten copies are wanted, I will send for them, and get them bound at $18 per copy in gold, if the money is sent with the order. Those who wish them can send me in their names, and when ten names are received, I will notify them, and they can send on the money. Each one can then see from the papers the price of gold, and remit me gold, or paper money enough to amount to $18 in gold, and then the books can be bought. This price is cheaper than the wholesale price of old times, when duties were not half what they are now. This will answer all queries upon this subject, as it is the best that I can promise to do, and probably no other man in the country can afford to sell them as cheaply as this.

"KNOW THYSELF."

A book on physiology and health, for children great and small, old and young. This is a book about the size of Webster's old spelling book, containing 64 pages, with sixty or seventy engravings. It treats on the human body in all its parts; shows how to live, eat, sleep, breathe, etc., and gives instructions which, if followed, will help to keep away diseases, doctors, and doctors' bills.

The book is interesting, instructive, and valuable. Price, post paid, is only 5 cents single; or $1.50 per dozen. By express, not prepaid, $1.00 per dozen; $6.50 per hundred. Address orders to H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass. For sale at this office.

BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

Another volume is now being added to those already issued, making the SIXTH volume of the series. It is "FABLES OF INFIDELITY," by Robert Patterson. Many of my friends are acquainted with this book, as I have already circulated more than SIX HUNDRED copies of it. It is the best exposition of the follies of infidelity, for the popular mind, that I have ever seen. This volume, for the present, will only be furnished in cloth binding, in the same elegant style in which the other five volumes have been bound. The price will be $1.00 per copy, post paid; 5 copies for $4; 12 for $9. Address orders to H. L. Hastings, BOSTON, Mass. For sale also at this office.

THE WORK OF GOD IN N. Y.

The labors of Sr. Anna Smith and her fellow laborer, Sr. Boyd, among the colored people, I regard as most remarkable. The number of those obedient to the faith is large. It is evidently a work of the Holy Spirit. These sisters have been into the streets and lanes of the city, into the garrets and basements, where these oppressed and down-trodden ones lived. They have read to them the word of God, prayed with them, and exhorted them to turn to God and believe in Jesus. They read to them not only of Jesus the despised, rejected, and crucified, but also of Jesus the Redeemer, the King, coming in the "glory of his Father, and the holy angels with him." "They preach through Jesus the resurrection from the dead."

As I have been into their meetings, and heard these colored brethren and sisters tell of what the Lord has done for them, how they love Jesus and his glorious appearing; and have enjoyed the melody of their singing, and the power of their shouting, I could but contrast it with the music made in the fine meeting houses with organs and fiddles, and by opera singers, hired singers, etc., etc. How great the contrast. The former is akin to the "new song" (Rev. 5: 9, 10), and the latter, no doubt intending to be spiritual, but I fear almost wholly animal.

The brethren and sisters of Cooper Institute and 24th St., and others, have entered into the work with commendable zeal, and are doing all in their power to help forward the good work. Bro. Wilkins has preached and labored much among them. Bro. J. K. Bellows preached to the colored people of Hackensack, N. J., last Lord's day, where a church of forty members has been gathered from the world by these sisters.

CORRECTION.—In my recent article, "Time hard to understand," I am made to speak of an eclipse as occurring twelve years before the battle of Actium. It should be twelve days. For "Herod's 34th years reign," read 34 years reign. The last paragraph should read "It can never be proved near till after the rise of these predicted kingdoms, and their rise cannot be proved in the past, except by history, etc.

For the World's Crisis

NOTE TO BRO. MUNGER.

Your note in the Crisis, respecting the need of an appropriate work upon our nearness to the Savior's coming, has been noticed. I acquiesce in your opinion that such a work is needed—yes, several of them; and while I do not object to preparing one (and intend to do so), I hope that Brn. Thurman and Himes will not hold back; and let the one you propose to "block out" be forthcoming also. We have a great work to do in a little while, and the more others fight, the harder we must work. God demands it at our hands. No matter if we are told it is enough to "be ready," without meddling with the time,—just a reiteration of the cry of the churches,—"no matter whether Christ is near or not, it is enough to be ready for death." All the powers of darkness combined cannot blot out the past Advent movement. It is recognized in the Bible, and pious scoffs and sanctimonious jeers can never destroy the fact the church was to make such a movement; and it now stands as a fulfillment of prophecy, instead of a great bugbear in the way of our understanding time. Instead of looking to the '43 failure, as a caution against meddling with time again, it is to me one of the conspicuous monuments that the church was to pass before the time was to be understood; and seeing we are past it, and in the last watch, I am encouraged to look for light, instead of saying, "We can't know."

No matter if we are told we can love Christ's appearing a great way off just as well as near by,—the further off, the better some love it, I fear. No matter if some do take one of the Savior's statements out of its latitude,—"Ye know not when the time is," and locate it where Christ never applied it; time is in the Bible, and scoffs and jeers can never change the fact. No matter if we are told that the event itself will reveal the time. No; the event will confirm the time previously revealed. Did the event of the first coming of Messiah reveal the time? No; it was previously revealed, and the event proved the time right. Did the event of the crucifixion reveal the time? No, it only confirmed a previous revelation. Time is given in the Bible, and events accord therewith. No matter if we are told that the "signs" are enough; if God had thought so, he would have given nothing but signs; but there is time in the Bible too, and we can't get it out of the Bible. It is there, not to be treated as though Satan was its author, but to benefit the church. If we have not the right time, let the right time be shown us; but every attempt to make it appear that time cannot be understood will be like blowing against the wind. We can't be coaxed or driven back on to that old platform. Let cold-hearted haters of this glorious event stand there, but Adventists never. What God has put into the Bible to be understood in the "time of the end," we have a special right to. It is our property. I have fully counted the cost, and am launching out, under God's blessing, ready to share in the reproach which this step will bring. God's frowns would rest upon me should I try to smother up the light. It does not alarm me in the least to think that Satan will raise a great stir to hinder the work; it is another proof that the work is of God. What if he shall succeed in converting some of the formerly faithful ones into instruments to aid his cause, and thereby blind the eyes of some of the children,—it is no new trick.

ORIGEN.

Neander, the distinguished church historian, when speaking of Origen, who lived in the third century, and was so noted for changing the doctrine of christianity into a mystical character, says:—

"In what high consideration he stood with the churches of these countries [Palestine, Arabia, Phœnicia, and Achaia] is evident from the fact that on every important ecclesiastical question on which it was difficult to come to a decision the opinion of Origen was asked even by synods of Bishops. A case of this sort, in which Beryllus, the bishop of Bostra in Arabia, submitted to be taught by him, was noticed on a former occasion. We may here mention another instance: a controversy had been excited by a party among the Arabian christians asserting that the human soul died with the body, and that, together with the body, it was not to be revived till the resurrection,—an ancient Jewish notion. Perhaps, too, among these tribes, who by their situation were brought into frequent contact with Jews, it was no new doctrine, but one which had prevailed there from ancient times; and perhaps (if indeed the general voice was thus early pronounced against them) it was the influence of Origen,—in whose system the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, which is akin to God, held an important place,—that first gained a general reception for the latter doctrine, and caused the small party who still adhered to the old opinion to be regarded as heretical. This explains how the convention of a great synod came to be thought necessary for the purpose of settling these disputes. As they could not come to any agreement, Origen was sent for; and by his arguments the opponents of the soul's natural immortality were brought to confess and to renounce their error." To his parenthetic observation above,—"if indeed the general voice was thus early pronounced against them"—Neander attaches the following note: "Eusebius (l. VI. c. 37) may perhaps judge concerning the controversies of these times too much according to his own subjective views and orthodoxy of his age, when he represents the defenders of this opinion of men generally acknowledged to be teachers of error and propagators of a new doctrine."—Neander's Church History, Vol. II. pp. 480, 1.—Exchange.

BE WISE.

Let us be among the wise, for the wise shall understand. What are the wise to understand? It is very evident that it is time. How can any unprejudiced mind think otherwise? I think it is very plain to every mind that wishes to understand, what the prophet Daniel meant by "the wise shall understand;" for the time is what he is talking about. I do not see any reason why the time is in the Bible if it is not for us to understand. I believe we can know something about the time of the Lord's coming.

I mean by the grace of God to be among the wise.

QUERY.—Why does the prophetic element preponderate in the Jewish Scriptures?

ANS. Because Judaism was a religion of the future. "And the New Testament (says 'Lange,' commentary on Matthew, p. 14), is throughout a prophecy of the second coming of Christ." Even so, Lord, come quickly! Amen.

"BRO. GRANT:— . . . I would like to have you give in the Crisis all the light you have on Dan. 8: 4; especially on the term 'beasts,' for the benefit of the household of faith."

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

The text reads as follows: "I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great."

In the first place we will give the full definition (omitting the words in Hebrew type) of the word ghahy, rendered "beasts" in the text, as found in the Hebrew lexicon of Gesenius, who is a standard author. In order that the reader, who may not have a Bible at hand, may fully understand the application and use of the word under consideration, we will quote the passages referred to by Gesenius, and put them in brackets, immediately following the chapter and verse mentioned in the definition. Let the reader observe that the words in italics are as they are found in Gesenius; while the words in SMALL CAPITALS, included in the brackets, represent the words in our Bible which are translated from the Hebrew word ghahy, which is rendered beasts in Dan. 8: 4.

2. Life, Ezra 6: 10. Dan. 7: 12." [Ez. 6: 10,—"Pray FOR THE LIFE OF the king." Dan. 7: 2,—"Yet their LIVES were prolonged."]

The foregoing is the full definition of the word ghahy, rendered "beasts" in Dan. 8: 4. The word occurs 509 times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and is rendered "living," "life," "alive," etc., in harmony with the foregoing definition, 412 times; and might be thus rendered in all other places, and be in harmony with the context. It is not once used to represent a government, unless it is in the text under consideration; and if thus used there, it is contrary to the meaning of the word. We know of but one correct way to settle the meaning of a word, and that is, to examine all the passages where the word occurs; and after doing this, as in this case, and finding it never used symbolically to represent a political power, our own mind is fully settled that it is not used to denote governments in Dan. 8: 4, but people, properly represented by the word LIVING, as in Isa. 38: 19, where the same word occurs as follows:—"The LIVING, the LIVING, he shall praise thee, as I do this day."

Any one can see at a glance that it would make strange sense to put beast in the place of "life," "living," etc., in the definitions of ghahy, as given by Gesenius.

The fact that in the Septuagint the word ghahy in the Hebrew of Dan. 8: 4, is translated by the Greek word theerion, the same word that is used in the Greek to denote a wild beast, only shows that the translators understood that the word was used in that sense; but had they carefully examined the word in all passages where it occurs, we think they would not have rendered it "beasts" in Dan. 8: 4, compelling the reader to use it there in a symbolical sense, and contrary to all other uses of the word. The meaning of the word cannot be settled by some particular translation of it in a single passage; but by an examination of all its uses. Taking the latter method, we see no room for doubt in the case, that it is not used in a symbolical sense in Dan. 8: 4, nor any where else, to denote political powers.

We understand the simple meaning of the passage to be, as before expressed, that the "pushing" of the ram, or Media and Persia, was against Daniel's people, the Jews, in the twelfth year of Artaxerxes, when he issued a decree, at the instigation of Haman and his family, represented by the "ribs" in the mouth of the "bear," or Media and Persia, "to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish ALL JEWS, both young and old, little children and women, in one day," in "all the king's provinces," which were 127.—Esther 3: 13. After the issue of this terrible decree, which is without a parallel in the history of the world, as the power of the king was absolute, he saw reason to change his mind, and issue another decree, directly opposite to this, giving the Jews the privilege of defending themselves against all who should attempt to kill them. Thus, "he did according to his will," and the people of the Lord were saved from destruction.

As this is the first event in the vision, and a most important one, we see no reason why we should not date the beginning of the vision, and the 2300 days and seventy weeks, at this point, which may be clearly shown to be at B. C. 426.

ON DATES.

The following occurs in the correspondence department of "The Rainbow," an Advent Monthly of London:—

"I fear you are committing a great error in joining with those who discourage calculation of dates in the study of prophecy, as history foretold."

1st. "As to the seventy weeks;—Daniel set his heart upon the investigation, and sought the knowledge by prayer, and the dates were revealed. (See Dan. 9: 1–27.) As to the sealing;—'The wise' were to 'understand.' (Dan. 12: 10.)

2nd. Though the full revelation of the dates of events, to the end of time, was in a measure sealed, as stated in Dan. 12: 9, 10, yet our Lord, after his ascension, brake the seven seals, and communicated the full revelation by John, with all remaining data, by which the 'wise' can understand the 'times and seasons.' Our Lord before his ascension said (it is true), 'It is not for you to know,' etc.; but he added, 'but ye shall receive power after,' etc. (Acts 7: 8.)

With these views, fully supported, as I think, by Scripture, I fear you are committing a great error in joining with those who discourage calculation of dates in the study of prophecy as history foretold."

"THE COMING MAN."

There is much talk among Spiritualists, about "the coming man;"—some one who is to take the lead in the great movement, got up by the spirits and those whom they have "deceived." We have met those who affirm that they have seen him, but will not tell who he is; but say he is about to begin his important work of reconstructing the distracted elements of society.

A writer in the Circular, of Jan. 30th, 1865, says:—"We understand on good authority that there are about three hundred individuals scattered through the world, each of whom claims to be the coming man.'"

"NAPOLEON'S 'JULIUS CÆSAR.'"

Napoleon III., in his history of Julius Cæsar, says: "My object is to prove that when Providence raises up such men as Cæsar, Charlemagne and Napoleon" ('and of course Napoleon III.'), "it is to trace out for the people the course they ought to pursue, and to set the seal of their genius upon a new era, and so accomplish the labor of several ages in a few years. Happy the nations who understand and follow them." Rainbow, April 1, 1865, p. 190.

John Mason, Ponteland, Newcastle-on-Tyne, March 14, 1865, writes in the April number of the Rainbow, as follows: "We are now looking for the covenant being made for seven years between Napoleon and the Jews. And last week, a friend drew my attention to the following in the Methodist Recorder, a London newspaper: 'The house of Rothschild has summoned all its agents abroad to a conference to take place at Paris.' It is evident from chronological prophecies, and from the signs of the times, that the second advent of our Lord draweth nigh."

"1867."

"The great writers on prophecy, with the Bible in one hand and history in the other, almost unanimously conclude that this dispensation will close, and the promised rest commence, about or soon after 1867." "The first theologians of their age . . . concur in the interpretations of the prophet's epochs, and bring us by their calculations to A. D. 5992, and the greatest chronologist living, or perhaps dead, brings us to A. D. 5992."—Rainbow, April, 1865, p. 155. By J. M. N.

In a "Pastoral Address," by E. H. Tucker, pastor of the Priory church, Exeter, [Eng.] He says: "The cry is now being uttered throughout all Christendom, 'Behold, the Bridegroom cometh,' and in this fact we read one of the especial signs that he will not much longer tarry."—Rainbow, April, 1865, p. 158.

"666."

"Prof. E. R. Hodges, of Bath St., Bristol, [Eng.] a Rabbinical and Hebrew scholar for twenty-five years, and formerly Episcopal missionary of the Jews' Society, has carefully considered Mr. Govett's assertions,* and state that they are unwarrantable, and that those words may fairly and legitimately be so spelt in Hebrew as to agree with this view."—Rainbow, for April 1865, p. 186. Signed "Audi Alteram Partem."

* Mr. Govett's assertion was, that the name "Louis Napoleon Bonaparte does not contain 666, as the total value of its letters in Hebrew."

"THE MISSION OF SUFFERING."

The above heading is the title of a very interesting tract, by Sr. A. P. Jolliffe, of Philadelphia. It is from the pen of one of the most intelligent and devoted christians we ever met. None but one who has had a deep experience could write such a tract. It is addressed "TO A PASTOR IN TRYING CIRCUMSTANCES." Price five cents. For sale at the Crisis office, and by Sr. Jolliffe, Box 1199, Philadelphia, Pa.

"LAID ON THE TABLE."

At the late National Unitarian Convention, held in New York the forepart of last April, it is said "an overture was made toward the union of the Unitarian and Universalist bodies." During the Convention, one of its members, thinking that some of the leading men were departing too far from the Bible standard, "presented some doctrinal points which he thought the Convention ought to adopt as a bond of unity. These were belief in the holy Scriptures as a revelation from God—in one God the Father—in one Jesus Christ—gifted with supernatural power, approved by God, by miracles, signs and wonders, and by Divine authority commanding the devout and reverential faith of all who claimed the christian name—in the Holy Ghost the Comforter—in the forgiveness of sins—the resurrection of the dead and life everlasting. The adoption of these articles to constitute a member of the Unitarian faith. A vote was taken on the resolutions and they were at once laid on the table."

We find no account of the resolutions being taken from the table; hence it is understood that the majority were opposed, and unwilling to adopt them. Therefore it appears they can be "a member of the Unitarian faith" without believing the foregoing "doctrinal points." We shall leave the reader to come to his own conclusions in the matter.

HOW CHANGED.

How rapidly the customs of the people are changing; especially in relation to moral and sacred things. Anything bordering on religious restraint seems to be trampled upon with delight, on the part of a large portion of community. They seem unwilling to show any respect for christian observances. Any thing that fetters their fullest liberty to do as they please, they are anxious to have demolished.

The following from an exchange paper, professedly religious, will illustrate the point:—

"On Sunday, the 18th of this month, a large crowd witnessed the launch of a gunboat in the Monongahela, opposite the city; the stage of water was quite favorable, and the operation proved satisfactory to all. The grace and ease with which the new vessel glided into the river, reflected the greatest credit on those who controlled her movements, and all agreed in regarding her as a splendid specimen of naval architecture. It was evident, however, that neither the enterprising contractors nor the delighted spectators had the fear of Sabbatarians before their eyes, so some sanctimonius individual takes occasion through the columns of a city paper to denounce what he regards as a desecration of the Sabbath.

Are we forever to be annoyed with this canting prattle about the Sabbath, or shall narrow-minded bigots be allowed, whenever so disposed, to ventilate through the public press their crude notions on christian obligations, and inflict their ill-timed and stupid homilies on a patient and long suffering public?"

Those who lived thirty years since little thought that the morals of our country would be at this time as they are, and that scarcely any one would venture to sound an alarm. How truly are the prophetic scriptures fulfilling all that relate to "the last days." "Perilous times" have come.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

With the first of July next, the Young Pilgrim will commence its third year. Its present financial condition will, at that time, demand some change in its publication; in regard to which your advice and co-operation is desired. Your attention, therefore, is urgently invited to the following facts and suggestions:

Such was the prosperity of its first year, while a monthly at 25 cents, and such the impulse given to its circulation at its beginning, running it up before the year's close to 7000, and its receipts meeting expenses, that the prospect of its continued increase to ten or twelve thousand during another year was thought encouraging and almost certain; hence, in compliance with the earnest solicitation of its friends, it was decided to make it a semi-monthly at the beginning of its second year, and put it at the low price of 30 cents.

But, instead of the expected increase, its circulation fell at once, on the commencement of its second year, to 4000, to which number additions have since been made, till now, at near its close the circulation is about 5400.

With so small a circulation, it is impossible, under current expenses, for any paper of its kind to sustain itself on 30 cents a year. Hence, for some months, the Pilgrim has been running behind; and, at the close of its second year in July next, its receipts will be some five or six hundred dollars less than its expenses.

Some change will therefore need to be made at that time in its publication,—either by issuing it but once a month at its present price, or by continuing it semi-monthly at an advanced price of forty or fifty cents. Which it shall be, will be left to the friends to decide, between now and July next. They are doubtless as public-spirited, and, according to their means, as just and liberal as the people of any other denomination; and as they have had the paper the past year for less than cost, and at a much lower price than almost any paper of the kind in the country, they will surely be willing, the coming year, to pay at least as much as do the subscribers to other denominational papers. As some may not be aware of the difference between our prices and theirs, the following comparison will give them some idea of what the price of the Pilgrim should have been the past year, and what it must be the coming year, to make it self-sustaining.

While the Young Pilgrim goes to its subscribers semi-monthly for 30 cents a year, the Myrtle (Boston), with nearly triple its circulation, charges 50 cents, and the S. S. Advocate, S. S. Star, etc., semi-monthlies, of immensely larger circulation (some of them of smaller size and less matter),—40 cents.

The Youth's Millennial Banner goes to its subscribers once a month for 40 cents a year; the Young Pilgrim twice a month for only 30 cents a year. The Youth's Instructor (though nominally published monthly for 25 cents a year) calls for and receives from its subscribers 50 cents. The S. S. Gazette, S. S. Messenger, etc., and the Child at Home (with a circulation of 150,000), are issued monthly for 30 cents a year; while the semi-monthly Pilgrim (with only 5400 subscribers) sends out to each subscriber twice as many papers in the year for the same money.

There are some few papers that are published at a smaller price; but these are issued, at a loss, by large funded societies, which, publishing also Sunday School books, etc., make use of their Sunday School papers as a convenient and profitable advertising medium for the sale of the same. While such societies can afford to throw away with one hand what it is certain to bring back into the other, the Christian Publication Society, having no such books to advertise, and no funds to throw away, cannot do this; and hence its friends will not make the prices of such papers a criterion for the Pilgrim.

Had the fall in its subscription list been foreseen, the Society would probably not have decided to publish it semi-monthly; or, if they had, they would doubtless have fixed its price at least as high as other semi-monthlies, that is, at 40 or 50 cents, as it should have been, to enable it to meet expenses.

Such being the condition of things, the Business Agent has no alternative but to carry out the wishes of the Society, as expressed by vote at one of its meetings, and make such arrangement as may be necessary to render the Young Pilgrim "self-sustaining,"—either by advancing its price, or putting it back to a monthly; unless some other plan shall be suggested. As the action which he shall take in the matter will be influenced by the wishes of the Young Pilgrim's friends and subscribers he hopes to receive a general and immediate response from all such, and from all who are interested in the moral and religious instruction of our young.

Shall it continue as a semi-monthly, at 40 or 50 cents a year, or, shall it visit you but once a month, for 30 cents a year? Let us hear from you at once.

☞ As many who have received the Young Pilgrim, the past year, for less than it has cost, will be glad to do what they can, by sending 10, 15 or 20 cents, or more, to help make up the deficiency, we open again the Sunday School Fund, and would suggest to superintendents and teachers, members of clubs, and others who may feel disposed, the need of contributions for this object.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—Owing to the beautiful spring time, in which the agricultural people are occupied from day dawn till late in the evening, we have preached but eighteen times during the past month, mostly upon sanctification of heart, tongue, and communion with God, and on the necessity of being the salt of the earth, and a light, not only to Italy, but to all the surrounding nations; that only by a mighty effort can they overcome the snares of Satan, and the effects of the long, cruel oppression of his distinguished agent, the bloody Papacy. But we are rejoiced to live in this happy generation, in which God in his mercy protects his people, so that they can serve him and even preach the entire destruction of the "man of sin" without personal danger, near his tottering throne. We are satisfied that the church of "wise virgins" especially in Italy, must be "clothed with the sun," Rev. 12: 1, and have in their foreheads the pure doctrines preached by the twelve apostles of Christ. For as the moon reflects the rays of the sun, so that without the aid of artificial light we can walk in the night and not stumble, so the light of the Holy Spirit shining on the Bible, enlightens its sacred pages and enables the church to walk in faith and righteousness without the aid of the corrupted forms and doctrines of men.

A church of such, and only such, enlightened, sanctified members, we are striving with the help of God to build in Piedmont, and believe, that he will bless and prosper such a pure and holy work. As we have written in our past reports, it is very painful to our hearts that the ministers of the national church are against us. But the people say to their preachers: "You speak always the same things, that the American missionary preaches erroneous doctrines, and that he and those that follow him, are wrong, but you do not prove him wrong in a single point, while he, with the Bible in one hand and history in the other, proves you wrong in every respect, and you cannot deny it."

We thank God for such testimony, and we pray him earnestly to bless the efforts we put forth in weakness, and keep us continually in the right spirit, so that if we do good, we may feel that it is not we, but Jesus Christ who works in us who accomplishes the work, and be very grateful for the privilege of being his humble instrumenst. But in order to prosecute this great work vigorously and efficiently, as I wrote you in my last report, we must have a press.

Dear brethren and sisters, we thank you, from the depths of our hearts, for your noble assistance in the establishment of this mission, in which we have labored conscientiously, with all the ability God has given us. But as the warm season has commenced, in which the people labor very early in the morning and late at night, resting themselves under the shadow of their trees, during the heat of the day, there is no opportunity to preach to them accept Sundays, and as they have but little reading besides the Bible, they would prize much some religious tracts to read as they rest from their labors at midday. I can improve this season in writing and translating tracts for the press, and when published would let my dear brethren evangelists, and our Catholic converts, and colporteurs go over the Alpine mountains and through these lovely vales to distribute them to the people—and especially to send to those to whom we have not access to speak, as to His Majesty the King, to princes, lords, cardinals, bishops and priests, etc., Rev. 10: 2, that all may be solemnly advertised that Jesus is soon coming and be without excuse when he comes. And not only in French and Italian, but in all the Slavonian dialects, etc., as kind Heaven may give us ability to do. To further this great work, we say again and again, dear brethren and sisters, help us at once to have a press.

We rejoice in the glorious news that we received from the United States last week, that victory has turned on the right side; that the cause of freedom has triumphed! And our faith is increased that now is the time to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom with a loud voice, not only to those who have been in spiritual bondage in Italy, but to the freedmen of the South. Now let the rebels weep for the loss of their negroes, and the Pope his temporal power forever, the Turks cleanse and enlarge the streets of the old "Agar," the city of Jerusalem, the Empress of France collect money from the Catholic princes for a new and magnificent temple and palace "in the glorious, holy mountain," Dan. 11: 45, and we, brethren and sisters, let us watch and pray, and joyfully sacrifice our time, our talents and our money to spread all abroad the news of His speedy coming and kingdom, and we shall receive our reward when he comes. Your faithful brother in Christ,

M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

We wish to talk a little with our friends and readers about money matters. The Young Pilgrim has been published during the year past and sent to subscribers at a price less than the cost. The Society has thus paid out some $500 or $600 more than all they have received for the paper. This cannot long continue. What shall we do?

1. Shall we send out the Pilgrim once a month, and yet charge about the same price we do now?

2. Shall we send it twice a month, and charge 40 or 50 cents a year for it?

3. Shall we send it as we do now, and depend on every boy, and girl, and man, and woman, to get us several new subscribers, so that we can print three or four times as many papers as we now do, and then ask our friends that have money to take hold and help pay up the deficiency?

We wish to hear from our friends at once about this matter. It is important that it be attended to directly. Who is willing to write and pay something to aid in the good work? Next month many of the subscriptions must be renewed. Who will get up a club and send in the money for 50 or 100 subscribers? Be ready when your time expires, as we only send to those who pay in advance.

We wish that brethren who are able to assist would write at once and say what they think of this matter; and if a number of persons have ten or twenty or fifty or an hundred dollars each to help make up past deficiencies, and start the paper on a good basis for the future, we will be able to go on as we are now going and furnish the children with the paper. Let us hear from you at once. Direct all letters to the Young Pilgrim, Boston, Mass.

HEBREW CONCORDANCES.

Several persons have inquired for these valuable books. I know of none for sale in the country. If ten copies are wanted, I will send for them, and get them bound at $18 per copy in gold, if the money is sent with the order. Those who wish them can send me in their names, and when ten names are received, I will notify them, and they can send on the money. Each one can then see from the papers the price of gold, and remit me gold, or paper money enough to amount to $18 in gold, and then the books can be bought. This price is cheaper than the wholesale price of old times, when duties were not half what they are now. This will answer all queries upon this subject, as it is the best that I can promise to do, and probably no other man in the country can afford to sell them as cheaply as this.

"KNOW THYSELF."

A book on physiology and health, for children great and small, old and young. This is a book about the size of Webster's old spelling book, containing 64 pages, with sixty or seventy engravings. It treats on the human body in all its parts; shows how to live, eat, sleep, breathe, etc., and gives instructions which, if followed, will help to keep away diseases, doctors, and doctors' bills.

The book is interesting, instructive, and valuable. Price, post paid, is only 5 cents single; or $1.50 per dozen. By express, not prepaid, $1.00 per dozen; $6.50 per hundred. Address orders to H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass. For sale at this office.

BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

Another volume is now being added to those already issued, making the SIXTH volume of the series. It is "FABLES OF INFIDELITY," by Robert Patterson. Many of my friends are acquainted with this book, as I have already circulated more than SIX HUNDRED copies of it. It is the best exposition of the follies of infidelity, for the popular mind, that I have ever seen. This volume, for the present, will only be furnished in cloth binding, in the same elegant style in which the other five volumes have been bound. The price will be $1.00 per copy, post paid; 5 copies for $4; 12 for $9. Address orders to H. L. Hastings, BOSTON, Mass. For sale also at this office.

For the World's Crisis.

THE WORK OF GOD IN N. Y.

The labors of Sr. Anna Smith and her fellow laborer, Sr. Boyd, among the colored people, I regard as most remarkable. The number of those obedient to the faith is large. It is evidently a work of the Holy Spirit. These sisters have been into the streets and lanes of the city, into the garrets and basements, where these oppressed and down-trodden ones lived. They have read to them the word of God, prayed with them, and exhorted them to turn to God and believe in Jesus. They read to them not only of Jesus the despised, rejected, and crucified, but also of Jesus the Redeemer, the King, coming in the "glory of his Father, and the holy angels with him." "They preach through Jesus the resurrection from the dead."

As I have been into their meetings, and heard these colored brethren and sisters tell of what the Lord has done for them, how they love Jesus and his glorious appearing; and have enjoyed the melody of their singing, and the power of their shouting, I could but contrast it with the music made in the fine meeting houses with organs and fiddles, and by opera singers, hired singers, etc., etc. How great the contrast. The former is akin to the "new song" (Rev. 5: 9, 10), and the latter, no doubt intending to be spiritual, but I fear almost wholly animal.

The brethren and sisters of Cooper Institute and 24th St., and others, have entered into the work with commendable zeal, and are doing all in their power to help forward the good work. Bro. Wilkins has preached and labored much among them. Bro. J. K. Bellows preached to the colored people of Hackensack, N. J., last Lord's day, where a church of forty members has been gathered from the world by these sisters.

SAM'L CURRY.

CORRECTION.—In my recent article, "Time hard to understand," I am made to speak of an eclipse as occurring twelve years before the battle of Actium. It should be twelve days. For "Herod's 34th years reign," read 34 years reign. The last paragraph should read "It can never be proved near till after the rise of these predicted kingdoms, and their rise cannot be proved in the past, except by history, etc.

For the World's Crisis.

LABOR AND BLESSING.

The Lord is not far off, but nigh at hand, and ever ready to bless his laborers. This is evident from all past experience, but never more clearly so than the past winter among us. Bro. Edwin Burnham came here in January, and spent the winter in this section, and a blessed work has been accomplished. In Dansville, the work of the Lord is still going on in bringing sinners to Christ. The church of which I am pastor seems to be baptized to the work, as it never was before. There was strong opposition by the orthodoxy during Bro. Burnham's stay, which threw a damper on him to some extent; but a gracious work broke out and is still going on. The church of Advent believers is being greatly strengthened.

In Honeoye, where Bro. B. spent four evenings only, a revival was started, and many came to Christ. The Advent believers have the use of the Congregationalist church for their meetings, and both churches have been much strengthened by the revival. Bro. B.'s visit at East Henrietta was productive of much good. Much more might be said of the work in these places, but lest it should seem like boasting in the flesh, I forbear.

We expect a good time at our conference at South Butler, in June. This place is four miles from Savannah on the New York Central Railroad, direct route from Rochester to Syracuse. A stage connects with the trains. Many brethren are isolated from those of like precious faith, and we want to see all such at that meeting. Come with warm hearts and willing hands to help in the work of the Lord. Come early in the week, and take the good of the whole meeting. I see Bro. Himes advertises to be there. I expect a good time in seeing brethren cheered, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners converted. F. BURR.

SISTER ANNA E. SMITH.

Several of the Advent brethren have inquired if we have any knowedge of Sister Smith. We would say that we have been acquainted with her for some time. She resided in Philadelphia many years, and lived in sympathy with the Adventists there. After losing her husband, she devoted what time she could spare from the care of her children to the poor and outcast, both white and colored, in Philadelphia, and did much good among them. More recently she removed to New York City and engaged in the same work. A wealthy Episcopalian in that city on learning her worth and service among the poor, has given her a weekly support; so that she is wholly devoted to the work of which we have given some account from her pen in the Voice. She is in earnest. And latterly, has felt that many of our sisters who have gifts and grace should be in the field of practical labor, doing something for those in the highways and hedges. This is her object in her call for meetings of consultation and conference. We hope good will come out of these gatnerings. If wisely conducted the result will be good. We have prayed that many might be stirred up and called to active labor by this effort.—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

AWAKE! AWAKE!

"What meanest thou, O sleeper? Arise! Call upon thy God," for it is high time that we awake out of sleep and slothfulness, and work for God. The time for us to work is short. Let us work while the day lasts. Everything is rushing onward. Let us look well to the rocks and shoals; for we are gliding swiftly along, and we must keep our eye steadily on Him who will guide our frail bark for us safely to the port of immortal glory. We must make straight paths for our feet. Let us not be satisfied unless we know of a surety that we are in the highway which is cast up for the ransomed of the Lord to walk in. The lions may roar, the serpents may raise their deceitful heads and show their forked tongues, but fear them not, they are not in the way; they are beside the way. Let them growl; let them spit out their biting venom; they cannot hurt us if we trust in God. He will keep us from that wicked One, that he destroy us not.

Awake! Awake! for the Lord is soon coming to take his weary children home, and to destroy the earth. O my God! wake up the sleeping professors; arouse them to a sense of their duty to God and to one another. Let us gird on the whole christian armor, and take the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, and if we wield it as we should, it cuts to the heart. God help us that we may not handle the word of God deceitfully, but whatever we do, do it in sincerity, in humility, and in the simplicity of the gospel, that our work may be well done; then when Jesus comes we may hope to be crowned with eternal life. THE SABBATH.

There was no command given to man to keep the Sabbath till we come to Ex. 16: 4, 5. God rained bread from heaven. God said they ware to gather twice as much on the sixth day, which proves that the day was to be kept as a sabbath, and a rest day, to remember their coming out of Egİpt. "And God said unto them by Moses, This is that which the Lord hath said, To-morrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord." "For the Lord hath given you the sabbath,"—not to Adam or his sons. The Lord said his sabbaths were to be a sign between him and the children of Israel, throughout their generations.—Ex. 31: 12-18. See Deut. 5: 3. "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us alive this day."

God sanctified the creation sabbath unto himself. See Gen. 2: 3. So the Lord commanded (Deut. 5: 12) the children of Israel to sanctify the seventh day, and to keep it in remembrance of the Lord bringing them out of Egypt. See Ex. 15: 5, 23, 29; 20: 8. This command was binding on all Jews down to the cross of Christ. There it ended; for the simple reason that nine of the ten commands are brought in to the new covenant, and the fourth God designed to be left out; and no one has a lawful right to add or command that the Gentile church observe the seventh day, or force it as a test question, without being liable to his disapprobation for adding to his word. Ninety-nine hundreths of the church, from the earliest days of christianity to the present time, have observed the first day of the week, as church history proves. WM. SWEET.

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. M. Shepherd.

BRO. GRANT:—It was the speedy coming of our Savior that first aroused me to a sense of my lost condition out of Christ, and led me to seek with all my heart the pearl of great price. And as the signs are thickening around our pathway that portend the soon coming of the King of kings, to break in pieces all earthly rule and establish his own peaceful kingdom, surely we ought to lift up our heads and rejoice as our redemption draws nigh; for here we mourn, and sigh, and weep over the ills of this mortal dying state, but in that world of joy and glory, sorrow will be forever ended, sin and all its effects will be forever destroyed.

I listened, a short time since, to a discourse by a Methodist minister on the resurrection. He spoke of the nearness of the Lord's coming, the reign of Christ and destruction of sin, and said to his congregation (mostly Methodists), "If you wish to call me a Millerite, you can. I have believed the doctrine for twenty years." He also remarked that "some say the Devil will be destroyed, too; of this I am not certain, but if true, "I will say amen." My heart said, "Praise the Lord," for thus much in favor of truth. How I wish those who profess to be ministers of the gospel might see the truth, and like honest men acknowledge and practice it, to the saving of themselves and those who hear them. Notwithstanding the great mass have heaped to themselves teachers having itching ears, turned their ears away from the truth, and turned unto fables, let us, around whom the truth shines so brightly and gloriously, seek to lead lives devoted and cross-bearing, separating ourselves from the world, as becometh followers of the meek and lowly Savior, ever possessing his Spirit, and letting our light shine to those around us, that when our Life-giver comes we may be glad with exceeding joy.

There are a goodly number of believers in this vicinity, who are shining witnesses for the truth, where a few years ago there were scarcely any. The cause is steadily advancing under the labors of Eld. N. A. Hitchcock. I highly prize the CRISIS. It comes week after week laden with "meat in due season" to feed the hungry soul longing after truth. May its worthy contributors be spared till the Savior comes to crown them with eternal life in his kingdom. Your sister in Christ,

Monroe, Wis. M. M. SHEPHERD.

From Bro. J. W. Elliott.

BRO. GRANT:—I have sent out two packages of tracts, also the CRISIS, which I consider invaluable. I bless God that it has been my happy lot to live to this day of light, and, like Saul, the scales have fallen from my eyes, and I can see that not all who say, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but those that do his will. May God bless the efforts of your press, and its correspondents, with power, and that quickening influence of his Holy Spirit, so that the world may know that the day-star has arisen and the day soon cometh, when our Savior will set up his kingdom on this earth, and rule, Lord of lords and King of kings.

I shall soon need more tracts. The leaven I have cast into several measures of meal, and it is doing its work. Quite a number have become leavened, and others are in progress. The spirit of Jesus is in our midst. I will not further chafe your mind with so small incidents, although we feel that God is in the work, and will continue to work until the whole lump is leavened. May God bless you. Your brother in christian bonds,

Preston, Minn. J. W. ELLIOTT.

From Bro. E. Bellows.

BRO. GRANT:—A great blessing has followed the conference in Abington. The church have been revived and come into working order. Several sinners have been converted, others are anxious and will probably take a decided stand ere long. Eight happy souls put on Christ by baptism yesterday, (May 14th). The house was crowded to hear the word of God. May the good work go on till many more shall find the pearl of great price.

Obituaries.

CHAPLIN. Died at the residence of Eld. S. A. Chaplin, near Princeton, Indiana, May 6, 1865, James Chaplin, aged eighty years and ten months.

Father made an open profession of christianity upwards of fifty years ago, and united with the Christian Connection. His mental organization was deeply emotional. With such touching pathos would he tell of the love of God's dying Son, as to melt all hearts to tears. Nor did his simple narratives produce less effect when he described the glories of the "better country." The grapes of Canaan, the great family of Abraham in the true land of promise, the blissful clime of the heavenly home, its perfect healthfulness, the ability of Jesus to bestow eternal life from the fact that no one ever died in his immediate presence, were themes on which he delighted to dwell. He was a cripple. Once he dreamed that Jesus personally gave him some errand to perform which his lameness disqualified him to execute; but a touch of the all-healing hand made him whole, and like the bounding roe he was off to do his Master's will. He looked for Jesus, and waited for the consolation of God's Israel. Farewell, dear father, till Jesus comes. I hope to meet you in the blood-washed throng.

"And though our band is broken now,
And grief o'ershadows every brow,
Sweet hope! that we one day may stand,
A ransomed and unbroken band,
Before the throne!"

ELD. S. A. CHAPLIN.

ELLISON. Died in Portsmouth, N. H., on the 13th of May, 1865, of consumption, Anna M., wife of Horace Ellison, aged twenty-three years, seven months.

Our sister found peace in believing on Jesus, a few days before her decease. She had been an affectionate daughter and a faithful companion, but not until she was near her end, did she seek an interest in the atoning blood of Jesus Christ. When she called on the name of the Lord, she was accepted, and sealed by the Holy Spirit. She lived three days, filled with a Savior's love, then gently fell asleep in Jesus.

KIMBALL. Died in Hampton, Conn., April 7th, of consumption, Sr. Sarah Kimball, aged twenty-three years.

In this death, the husband has lost a kind and an affectionate wife, and the father an only child, on whom his earthly comforts mainly centered, having buried his companion not more than a year since. When all earthly friends fail, Jesus will not. Our sister loved her Master, and was baptized by Bro. Grant. She died in the Lord, and sleeps in Jesus. E. BELLOWS.

BROWN. Died in Danielsonville, Conn., April 30th, Florence, only child of Dr. Rufus and Fanny Brown, in the fifth year of her age.

E. BELLOWS.

B. DE-WIT. Fell asleep in Portsmouth, N. H., May 15, 1865, Carston B. de-Wit, aged fifty-seven years, nine months.

Bro. de-Wit suffered greatly during his last illness, from dropsy; but bore all his sufferings with great patience. His heart was fixed, trusting in the Lord. A wife and several children are called to mourn his loss, but they sorrow not even as others that have no hope. He had been looking for the appearing of Jesus Christ many years, and died with the expectation of being raised up at the last day. The writer attended the funeral of Bro. de-Wit and Sr. Ellison. F. H. BURBANK.

ANGLE. Died in Burrillville, R. I., May 7, 1865, Mr. Enoch Angle, in the thirty-third year of his age.

Thus another has fallen by the hand of death. He leaves a wife and one child to mourn. He was a kind and loving companion, an indulgent parent, an honest and upright neighbor, beloved by all who knew him. May the blessing of the Lord rest upon the bereaved. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 20.

J. S. ELDRIDGE.

BABB. Died at Conesus, N. Y., April 29, 1865, Herbert S., only son of Nelson and Elisabeth Babb, aged four months and twenty-six days.

The parents deeply feel their loss, but hope to see their little one again in the morning of glory.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool May 5th, Queenstown 6th.

Resolutions of sympathy with America continue to pour in. Almost every public body and place in England must have given expression of its sympathy. Among the demonstrations was a great meeting of workingmen in London. In addition to resolutions of condolence they adopted one rejoicing at Federal successes and the destruction of slavery. The Liverpool Chamber of Commerce voted an address expressing a hope that the calamity might not retard a speedy peace.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Observer says: "The Czar of Russia has published an encyclical letter, and distributed it among the Russian priests, with orders to inculcate its principles upon the minds of the people. The Czar sets forth, in the name of Christ, his religious principles, extols his own infallibility and holiness, and condemns other creeds and calls them schismatic. Catholics and Protestants are, in his estimation, heretics and infidels, and he inculcates intense hatred against other nations. He says Catholics don't believe in Christ, but in the Pope, and he denounces their saints as liars and imposters. England, France and Austria are subjects of bitter invective. The encyclical inculcates the most vehement fanaticism, and concludes with the prayer that the Czar may have health and power, and overcome his enemies, and the faith of holy Russia prevail."

The Cologne Gazette asserts that an attempt against the life of the Emperor Napoleon was contemplated by some sixty conspirators at Lyons. The conspiracy was, however, discovered in time, and a large number arrested before the Emperor visited the city. The guilty are Italians and Poles, who intended to place themselves at the narrow entrance of the Rue Bourbon, where they meant to fall on the Imperial carriage.

The Empress of France presided at a State Council on the 6th and afterward receceived the American Ambassador. She has addressed a private letter of sympathy to Mrs. Lincoln.

The Emperor has issued a proclamation to the inhabitants of Algeria, urging them to become attached to the soil, and treat the Arabs as fellow countrymen. He says: "We must be masters because we are more civilized, and generous because we are stronger." The Emperor was received everywhere with enthusiasm. He has issued a proclamation to the Arabs calling on them to recognize the decrees of Providence, and says two millions of Arabs cannot resist forty millions of Frenchmen.

The Italia says Italy recognizes the Pope as the Chief of Catholicism and will always treat with him upon religious matters, but does not acknowledge his temporal sovereignty.

DOMESTIC.

New York, April 16. The Times' special Washington telegram states it has been positively decided to proceed at once to reduce the strength of the army to 150 or 150,000 men, and the arrangements, therefore, are proceeding with all possible dispatch.

New York, May 16. The Times' Nashville dispatch says Joe Brown, late rebel Governor of Georgia, was brought here last night as a prisoner, and left this evening for Louisville. Jeff. Davis is under strong guard and will arrive here (Nashville) Thursday evening.

Every body of regular rebel soldiers and guerilla organization in this State and Northern Alabama has given up, to come in under Gen. Thomas' late order. Thousands of rebel soldiers have arrived here and taken the oath, including the redoubtable Dick McCann. Nearly all the hospitals are cleared out, and thousands of government employes are being discharged.

New York, May 17. The Herald's Chester (S. C.) correspondence announces the arrest of rebel Gov. Vance, of North Carolina, and Gov. Magrath, of South Carolina, is being pursued by our cavalry.

New York, May 19. The Commercial's special Washington dispatch says:

Secretary Seward visited the State Department to-day, entering upon his official duties at once.

The order for the transportation of Jeff. Davis by water instead of by land will prevent a great deal of misplaced sympathy, and baffle plots for his rescue.

The letters found upon Booth will constitute the most thrilling portion of the testimony.

Washington, May 19. Secretary Seward, for the first time since his attempted assassination, went to the State Department to-day and gave an audience to one of the members of the French Legation.

The symptoms of Frederick W. Seward continue to improve.

The vessels of the Potomac flotilla which government have no further use for, numbering over twenty, are arriving at the navy yard, and their guns and stores are being removed, and their crews transferred to other vessels.

THE FUTURE OF THE JEWS AND JERUSALEM.—The following from the Revival, shows that there is a great movement on foot in reference to the Jewish people and the holy city.

A correspondent thus writes:—"In January last there was a notice in the Times to the effect that the Emperor of the French desired a conference of the leaders of the Jewish nation to be held in Paris, and the Prefect of Paris had issued notices accordingly; and I have very recently learned that the conference will be in the summer, and probably about the month of June. The Rothschild family are taking a very active part in this movement; and the object of the meeting is, the taking into consideration the immediate preparation of Jerusalem. Deeming this to be a very remarkable sign of the times, I thought you might wish to make use of such information for the benefit of the Lord's people in general."

ITEMS.

☞ We have now nine new Territories waiting to be made States. They are: Wyoming, Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Utah and Washington.

☞ Parties who have been through Georgia as far south as the Etowah River, represent that the destitution prevailing in that country is truly appalling. What few inhabitants remain there are almost starved to death, and for want of animals it is impossible for them to attempt to raise any crops.

☞ The French Emperor had taken his departure for Algeria. His reception at Marseilles was very enthusiastic, 200,000 people being said to be in the line through which he passed. He will be absent about a month.

☞ At Portland, Me., on Wednesday, the temperature stood as high as 92°; at Portsmouth, N. N., in the afternoon, it was at 90° in the shade and 110° in the sun.

☞ The people of North Georgia are very poor, and will scarcely be able to make a crop this year on account of the lack of seed and farm animals. They are generally rejoiced at the end of the war, and are moving to reinaugurate civil law.

☞ A few weeks previous to the occupation of Richmond by the United States forces, wood was held at $100 per cord, and scarce at that. It can now be readily purchased at $7.

☞ Some idea of the desolation among cattle by the drought in California, during last year, may be had from the fact that out of a herd of sixty thousand cattle, owned by the largest herdsman in the State, not more than ten thousand will be saved.

☞ Thirteen steamers and two rams, surrendered by Dick Taylor, have arrived at Mobile.

TROUBLE IN CUBA.—Jamaica papers give accounts of the conduct of slaves in different parts of Cuba, which causes great apprehension. Already had several estates been burnt by the torch of the incendiary, and so deep and silent was the plot which had been laid for carrying out these acts of incendiarism that no clue, to the perpetrators had as yet been discovered. On one of the estates fired an overseer had been murdered. The government is said to be very vigilant in suppressing all information about the evident disaffection of the slave population, but many careful observers have strong fears of the future. It is not stated what are the immediate causes of the present disorder, but it may readily be imagined that the progress of events in this country has been such as not to promote much content among the slaves in Cuba. The wave of emancipation may yet pass over that island.

Notice.

As I believe time is very short, and it behooves us to be up and doing, and as I have found many females that feel God has called them to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, but because of the prejudice of the church in its present cold and backslidden state, they are kept back from laboring as they feel God has called them to do; and as I believe that we are living in the day when God will pour out his spirit upon his handmaids, I therefore give this notice to all the women of America, independent of denomination or color, who feel that they have been called of God to preach, exhort, pray, or to write, on the subject of his speedy coming, and a preparation for that coming, to open a correspondence with me in reference to holding a convention of women, which will be held in the Poultney church, at Poultney, Vt., commencing Wednesday, June 7th, and continuing one week. All brethren are invited to meet with us. This convention shall be for the promulgation of all Bible truths; but no hobbies.

Now, sisters, let this be a missionary movement. Remember Jesus is at the door, and wickedness is abounding, and the love of many is waxing cold. Let us be up and doing, so that he may say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . Enter into the joy of thy Lord." Let all who feel interested in this great work, make it a subject of special prayer at the hour of twelve o'clock, every day, that God may bless the effort that we may put forth to his honor and glory.

All brethren who are favorable to this convention are invited to assist us by advice, by kind words of encouragement. Address,

MRS. ANNA E. SMITH,
No. 128 East 27th St., New York City.

LABOR AND BLESSING.

The Lord is not far off, but nigh at hand, and ever ready to bless his laborers. This is evident from all past experience, but never more clearly so than the past winter among us. Bro. Edwin Burnham came here in January, and spent the winter in this section, and a blessed work has been accomplished. In Dansville, the work of the Lord is still going on in bringing sinners to Christ. The church of which I am pastor seems to be baptized to the work, as it never was before. There was strong opposition by the orthodoxy during Bro. Burnham's stay, which threw a damper on him to some extent; but a gracious work broke out and is still going on. The church of Advent believers is being greatly strengthened.

In Honeoye, where Bro. B. spent four evenings only, a revival was started, and many came to Christ. The Advent believers have the use of the Congregationalist church for their meetings, and both churches have been much strengthened by the revival. Bro. B.'s visit at East Henrietta was productive of much good. Much more might be said of the work in these places, but lest it should seem like boasting in the flesh, I forbear.

We expect a good time at our conference at South Butler, in June. This place is four miles from Savannah on the New York Central Railroad, direct route from Rochester to Syracuse. A stage connects with the trains. Many brethren are isolated from those of like precious faith, and we want to see all such at that meeting. Come with warm hearts and willing hands to help in the work of the Lord. Come early in the week, and take the good of the whole meeting. I see Bro. Himes advertises to be there. I expect a good time in seeing brethren cheered, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners converted. F. Burr.

Dansville, N. Y.

SISTER ANNA E. SMITH.

Several of the Advent brethren have inquired if we have any knowedge of Sister Smith. We would say that we have been acquainted with her for some time. She resided in Philadelphia many years, and lived in sympathy with the Adventists there. After losing her husband, she devoted what time she could spare from the care of her children to the poor and outcast, both white and colored, in Philadelphia, and did much good among them. More recently she removed to New York City and engaged in the same work. A wealthy Episcopalian in that city on learning her worth and service among the poor, has given her a weekly support; so that she is wholly devoted to the work of which we have given some account from her pen in the Voice. She is in earnest. And latterly, has felt that many of our sisters who have gifts and grace should be in the field of practical labor, doing something for those in the highways and hedges. This is her object in her call for meetings of consultation and conference. We hope good will come out of these gatherings. If wisely conducted the result will be good. We have prayed that many might be stirred up and called to active labor by this effort.—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

AWAKE! AWAKE!

"What meanest thou, O sleeper? Arise! Call upon thy God;" for it is high time that we awake out of sleep and slothfulness, and work for God. The time for us to work is short. Let us work while the day lasts. Everything is rushing onward. Let us look well to the rocks and shoals; for we are gliding swiftly along, and we must keep our eye steadily on Him who will guide our frail bark for us safely to the port of immortal glory. We must make straight paths for our feet. Let us not be satisfied unless we know of a surety that we are in the highway which is cast up for the ransomed of the Lord to walk in. The lions may roar, the serpents may raise their deceitful heads and show their forked tongues, but fear them not; they are not in the way; they are beside the way. Let them growl; let them spit out their biting venom; they cannot hurt us if we trust in God. He will keep us from that wicked One, that he destroy us not.

Awake! Awake! for the Lord is soon coming to take his weary children home, and to destroy the earth. O my God! wake up the sleeping professors; arouse them to a sense of their duty to God and to one another. Let us gird on the whole christian armor, and take the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, and if we wield it as we should, it cuts to the heart. God help us that we may not handle the word of God deceitfully, but whatever we do, do it in sincerity, in humility, and in the simplicity of the gospel, that our work may be well done; then when Jesus comes we may hope to be crowned with eternal life. B. L. Clark.

For the World's Crisis.

THE SABBATH.

There was no command given to man to keep the Sabbath till we come to Ex. 16: 4, 5. God rained bread from heaven. God said they were to gather twice as much on the sixth day, which proves that the day was to be kept as a sabbath, and a rest day, to remember their coming out of Egypt. "And God said unto them by Moses, This is that which the Lord hath said, To-morrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord." "For the Lord hath given you the sabbath,"—not to Adam or his sons. The Lord said his sabbaths were to be a sign between him and the children of Israel, throughout their generations.—Ex. 31: 12–18. See Deut. 5: 3. "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us alive this day."

God sanctified the creation sabbath unto himself. See Gen. 2: 3. So the Lord commanded (Deut. 5: 12) the children of Israel to sanctify the seventh day, and to keep it in remembrance of the Lord bringing them out of Egypt. See Ex. 15: 5, 23, 29; 20: 8. This command was binding on all Jews down to the cross of Christ. There it ended; for the simple reason that nine of the ten commands are brought in to the new covenant, and the fourth God designed to be left out; and no one has a lawful right to add or command that the Gentile church observe the seventh day, or force it as a test question, without being liable to his disapprobation for adding to his word. Ninety-nine hundreths of the church, from the earliest days of christianity to the present time, have observed the first day of the week, as church history proves. Wm. Sweet.

From Sr. M. M. Shepherd.

Bro. Grant:—It was the speedy coming of our Savior that first aroused me to a sense of my lost condition out of Christ, and led me to seek with all my heart the pearl of great price. And as the signs are thickening around our pathway that portend the soon coming of the King of kings, to break in pieces all earthly rule and establish his own peaceful kingdom, surely we ought to lift up our heads and rejoice as our redemption draws nigh; for here we mourn, and sigh, and weep over the ills of this mortal dying state, but in that world of joy and glory, sorrow will be forever ended, sin and all its effects will be forever destroyed.

I listened, a short time since, to a discourse by a Methodist minister on the resurrection. He spoke of the nearness of the Lord's coming, the reign of Christ and destruction of sin, and said to his congregation (mostly Methodists), "If you wish to call me a Millerite, you can. I have believed the doctrine for twenty years." He also remarked that "some say the Devil will be destroyed, too; of this I am not certain, but if true, "I will say amen." My heart said, "Praise the Lord," for thus much in favor of truth. How I wish those who profess to be ministers of the gospel might see the truth, and like honest men acknowledge and practice it, to the saving of themselves and those who hear them. Notwithstanding the great mass have heaped to themselves teachers having itching ears, turned their ears away from the truth, and turned unto fables, let us, around whom the truth shines so brightly and gloriously, seek to lead lives devoted and cross-bearing, separating ourselves from the world, as becometh followers of the meek and lowly Savior, ever possessing his Spirit, and letting our light shine to those around us, that when our Life-giver comes we may be glad with exceeding joy.

There are a goodly number of believers in this vicinity, who are shining witnesses for the truth, where a few years ago there were scarcely any. The cause is steadily advancing under the labors of Eld. N. A. Hitchcock. I highly prize the Crisis. It comes week after week laden with "meat in due season" to feed the hungry soul longing after truth. May its worthy contributors be spared till the Savior comes to crown them with eternal life in his kingdom. Your sister in Christ,

Monroe, Wis. M. M. Shepherd.

From Bro. J. W. Elliott.

Bro. Grant:—I have sent out two packages of tracts, also the Crisis, which I consider invaluable. I bless God that it has been my happy lot to live to this day of light, and, like Saul, the scales have fallen from my eyes, and I can see that not all who say, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but those that do his will. May God bless the efforts of your press, and its correspondents, with power, and that quickening influence of his Holy Spirit, so that the world may know that the day-star has arisen and the day soon cometh, when our Savior will set up his kingdom on this earth, and rule, Lord of lords and King of kings.

I shall soon need more tracts. The leaven I have cast into several measures of meal, and it is doing its work. Quite a number have become leavened, and others are in progress. The spirit of Jesus is in our midst. I will not further chafe your mind with so small incidents, although we feel that God is in the work, and will continue to work until the whole lump is leavened. May God bless you. Your brother in christian bonds,

Preston, Minn. J. W. Elliott.

From Bro. E. Bellows.

Bro. Grant:—A great blessing has followed the conference in Abington. The church have been revived and come into working order. Several sinners have been converted; others are anxious and will probably take a decided stand ere long. Eight happy souls put on Christ by baptism yesterday, (May 14th). The house was crowded to hear the word of God. May the good work go on till many more shall find the pearl of great price.

Obituaries.

Chaplin. Died at the residence of Eld. S. A. Chaplin, near Princeton, Indiana, May 6, 1865, James Chaplin, aged eighty years and ten months.

Father made an open profession of christianity upwards of fifty years ago, and united with the Christian Connection. His mental organization was deeply emotional. With such touching pathos would he tell of the love of God's dying Son, as to melt all hearts to tears. Nor did his simple narratives produce less effect when he described the glories of the "better country." The grapes of Canaan, the great family of Abraham in the true land of promise, the blissful clime of the heavenly home, its perfect healthfulness, the ability of Jesus to bestow eternal life from the fact that no one ever died in his immediate presence, were themes on which he delighted to dwell. He was a cripple. Once he dreamed that Jesus personally gave him some errand to perform which his lameness disqualified him to execute; but a touch of the all-healing hand made him whole, and like the bounding roe he was off to do his Master's will. He looked for Jesus, and waited for the consolation of God's Israel. Farewell, dear father, till Jesus comes. I hope to meet you in the blood-washed throng.

> "And though our band is broken now,
> And grief o'ershadows every brow,
> Sweet hope! that we one day may stand,
> A ransomed and unbroken band,
> Before the throne!"

Eld. S. A. Chaplin.

Ellison. Died in Portsmouth, N. H., on the 13th of May, 1865, of consumption, Anna M., wife of Horace Ellison, aged twenty-three years, seven months.

Our sister found peace in believing on Jesus, a few days before her decease. She had been an affectionate daughter and a faithful companion, but not until she was near her end, did she seek an interest in the atoning blood of Jesus Christ. When she called on the name of the Lord, she was accepted, and sealed by the Holy Spirit. She lived three days, filled with a Savior's love, then gently fell asleep in Jesus.

Kimball. Died in Hampton, Conn., April 7th, of consumption, Sr. Sarah Kimball, aged twenty-three years.

In this death, the husband has lost a kind and an affectionate wife, and the father an only child, on whom his earthly comforts mainly centered, having buried his companion not more than a year since. When all earthly friends fail, Jesus will not. Our sister loved her Master, and was baptized by Bro. Grant. She died in the Lord, and sleeps in Jesus. E. Bellows.

Brown. Died in Danielsonville, Conn., April 30th, Florence, only child of Dr. Rufus and Fanny Brown, in the fifth year of her age.

E. Bellows.

B. de-Wit. Fell asleep in Portsmouth, N. H., May 15, 1865, Carston B. de-Wit, aged fifty-seven years, nine months.

Bro. de-Wit suffered greatly during his last illness, from dropsy; but bore all his sufferings with great patience. His heart was fixed, trusting in the Lord. A wife and several children are called to mourn his loss, but they sorrow not even as others that have no hope. He had been looking for the appearing of Jesus Christ many years, and died with the expectation of being raised up at the last day. The writer attended the funeral of Bro. de-Wit and Sr. Ellison. F. H. Burbank.

Angle. Died in Burrillville, R. I., May 7, 1865, Mr. Enoch Angle, in the thirty-third year of his age.

Thus another has fallen by the hand of death. He leaves a wife and one child to mourn. He was a kind and loving companion, an indulgent parent, an honest and upright neighbor, beloved by all who knew him. May the blessing of the Lord rest upon the bereaved. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 20.

J. S. Eldridge.

Babb. Died at Conesus, N. Y., April 29, 1865, Herbert S., only son of Nelson and Elisabeth Babb, aged four months and twenty-six days.

The parents deeply feel their loss, but hope to see their little one again in the morning of glory.

F. N. Burr.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool May 5th, Queenstown 6th.

Resolutions of sympathy with America continue to pour in. Almost every public body and place in England must have given expression of its sympathy. Among the demonstrations was a great meeting of workingmen in London. In addition to resolutions of condolence they adopted one rejoicing at Federal successes and the destruction of slavery. The Liverpool Chamber of Commerce voted an address expressing a hope that the calamity might not retard a speedy peace.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Observer says: "The Czar of Russia has published an encyclical letter, and distributed it among the Russian priests, with orders to inculcate its principles upon the minds of the people. The Czar sets forth, in the name of Christ, his religious principles, extols his own infallibility and holiness, and condemns other creeds and calls them schismatic. Catholics and Protestants are, in his estimation, heretics and infidels, and he inculcates intense hatred against other nations. He says Catholics don't believe in Christ, but in the Pope, and he denounces their saints as liars and imposters. England, France and Austria are subjects of bitter invective. The encyclical inculcates the most vehement fanaticism, and concludes with the prayer that the Czar may have health and power, and overcome his enemies, and the faith of holy Russia prevail."

The Cologue Gazette asserts that an attempt against the life of the Emperor Napoleon was contemplated by some sixty conspirators at Lyons. The conspiracy was, however, discovered in time, and a large number arrested before the Emperor visited the city. The guilty are Italians and Poles, who intended to place themselves at the narrow entrance of the Rue Bourbon, where they meant to fall on the Imperial carriage.

The Empress of France presided at a State Council on the 6th and afterward receceived the American Ambassador. She has addressed a private letter of sympathy to Mrs. Lincoln.

The Emperor has issued a proclamation to the inhabitants of Algeria, urging them to become attached to the soil, and treat the Arabs as fellow countrymen. He says: "We must be masters because we are more civilized, and generous because we are stronger." The Emperor was received everywhere with enthusiasm. He has issued a proclamation to the Arabs calling on them to recognize the decrees of Providence, and says two millions of Arabs cannot resist forty millions of Frenchmen.

The Italia says Italy recognizes the Pope as the Chief of Catholicism and will always treat with him upon religious matters, but does not acknowledge his temporal sovereignty.

DOMESTIC.

New York, April 16. The Times' special Washington telegram states it has been positively decided to proceed at once to reduce the strength of the army to 150 or 150,000 men, and the arrangements, therefore, are proceeding with all possible dispatch.

New York, May 16. The Times' Nashville dispatch says Joe Brown, late rebel Governor of Georgia, was brought here last night as a prisoner, and left this evening for Louisville. Jeff. Davis is under strong guard and will arrive here (Nashville) Thursday evening.

Every body of regular rebel soldiers and guerilla organization in this State and Northern Alabama has given up, to come in under Gen. Thomas' late order. Thousands of rebel soldiers have arrived here and taken the oath, including the redoubtable Dick McCann. Nearly all the hospitals are cleared out, and thousands of government employes are being discharged.

New York, May 17. The Herald's Chester (S. C.) correspondence announces the arrest of rebel Gov. Vance, of North Carolina, and Gov. Magrath, of South Carolina, is being pursued by our cavalry.

New York, May 19. The Commercial's special Washington dispatch says:

Secretary Seward visited the State Department to-day, entering upon his official duties at once.

The order for the transportation of Jeff. Davis by water instead of by land will prevent a great deal of misplaced sympathy, and baffle plots for his rescue.

The letters found upon Booth will constitute the most thrilling portion of the testimony.

Washington, May 19. Secretary Seward, for the first time since his attempted assassination, went to the State Department to-day and gave an audience to one of the members of the French Legation.

The symptoms of Frederick W. Seward continue to improve.

The vessels of the Potomac flotilla which government have no further use for, numbering over twenty, are arriving at the navy yard, and their guns and stores are being removed, and their crews transferred to other vessels.

The future of the Jews and Jerusalem.—The following from the Revival, shows that there is a great movement on foot in reference to the Jewish people and the holy city.

A correspondent thus writes:—"In January last there was a notice in the Times to the effect that the Emperor of the French desired a conference of the leaders of the Jewish nation to be held in Paris, and the Prefect of Paris had issued notices accordingly; and I have very recently learned that the conference will be in the summer, and probably about the month of June. The Rothschild family are taking a very active part in this movement; and the object of the meeting is, the taking into consideration the immediate preparation of Jerusalem. Deeming this to be a very remarkable sign of the times, I thought you might wish to make use of such information for the benefit of the Lord's people in general."

ITEMS.

☞ We have now nine new Territories waiting to be made States. They are: Wyoming, Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Utah and Washington.

☞ Parties who have been through Georgia as far south as the Etowah River, represent that the destitution prevailing in that country is truly appalling. What few inhabitants remain there are almost starved to death, and for want of animals it is impossible for them to attempt to raise any crops.

☞ The French Emperor had taken his departure for Algeria. His reception at Marseilles was very enthusiastic, 200,000 people being said to be in the line through which he passed. He will be absent about a month.

☞ At Portland, Me., on Wednesday, the temperature stood as high as 92°; at Portsmouth, N. H., in the afternoon, it was at 90° in the shade and 110° in the sun.

☞ The people of North Georgia are very poor, and will scarcely be able to make a crop this year on account of the lack of seed and farm animals. They are generally rejoiced at the end of the war, and are moving to reinaugurate civil law.

☞ A few weeks previous to the occupation of Richmond by the United States forces, wood was held at $100 per cord, and scarce at that. It can now be readily purchased at $7.

☞ Some idea of the desolation among cattle by the drought in California, during last year, may be had from the fact that out of a herd of sixty thousand cattle, owned by the largest herdsman in the State, not more than ten thousand will be saved.

☞ Thirteen steamers and two rams, surrendered by Dick Taylor, have arrived at Mobile.

Trouble in Cuba.—Jamaica papers give accounts of the conduct of slaves in different parts of Cuba which causes great apprehension. Already had several estates been burnt by the torch of the incendiary, and so deep and silent was the plot which had been laid for carrying out these acts of incendiarism that no clue to the perpetrators had as yet been discovered. On one of the estates fired an overseer had been murdered. The government is said to be very vigilant in suppressing all information about the evident disaffection of the slave population, but many careful observers have strong fears of the future. It is not stated what are the immediate causes of the present disorder, but it may readily be imagined that the progress of events in this country has been such as not to promote much content among the slaves in Cuba. The wave of emancipation may yet pass over that island.

Notice.

As I believe time is very short, and it behooves us to be up and doing, and as I have found many females that feel God has called them to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, but because of the prejudice of the church in its present cold and backslidden state, they are kept back from laboring as they feel God has called them to do; and as I believe that we are living in the day when God will pour out his spirit upon his handmaids, I therefore give this notice to all the women of America, independent of denomination or color, who feel that they have been called of God to preach, exhort, pray, or to write, on the subject of his speedy coming, and a preparation for that coming, to open a correspondence with me in reference to holding a convention of women, which will be held in the Poultney church, at Poultney, Vt., commencing Wednesday, June 7th, and continuing one week. All brethren are invited to meet with us. This convention shall be for the promulgation of all Bible truths; but no hobbies.

Now, sisters, let this be a missionary movement. Remember Jesus is at the door, and wickedness is abounding, and the love of many is waxing cold. Let us be up and doing, so that he may say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . Enter into the joy of thy Lord." Let all who feel interested in this great work, make it a subject of special prayer at the hour of twelve o'clock, every day, that God may bless the effort that we may put forth to his honor and glory.

All brethren who are favorable to this convention are invited to assist us by advice, by kind words of encouragement. Address,

Mrs. Anna E. Smith,
No. 128 East 27th St., New York City.

THE UNSEEN BATTLE FIELD.

There is an unseen battle field
In every human breast,
Where two opposing forces meet,
And where they seldom rest.

That field is veiled from mortal sight;
'Tis only seen by One,
Who knows alone where victory lies
When each day's fight is done.

Our army musters strong and fierce,
Their chief of demon form;
His brow is like the thunder cloud,
His voice the bursting storm.

His captains,—Pride, and Lust, and Hate;
Whole troops watch night and day,
Swift to detect the weakest point,
And thirsting for the fray.

Contending with this mighty force
Is but a little band;
Yet there, with an unquailing front,
Those warriors firmly stand.

Their leader is of God-like form,
Of countenance serene;
And glowing on his naked breast
A naked cross is seen.

His captains,—Faith, and Hope, and Love,
Point to that wondrous sign;
And gazing on it, all receive
Strength from a source divine.

They feel it speaks a glorious truth,
A truth as great as sure,—
That to be victors, they must learn
To love, confide, endure.

That faith sublime, in wildest strife,
Imparts a holy calm;
For every deadly blow a shield,
For every wound a balm.

And when they'll win the battle field,
Past toil will be forgot;
The plain where carnage once had reigned,
Will be a hallowed spot.

For the World's Crisis.

"MINISTRATION OF DEATH."
"Ministration of the Spirit."—No. 3.

WHY DID PAUL VISIT THE JEWISH SYNAGOGUE ON THEIR SABBATH?

The answer, in short, may be found in 1 Cor. 9: 20. But let us examine Paul's history in regard to this matter. First, however, we will listen to a few words from Neander, the distinguished church historian, as found in Vol. I. (by Torry), pp. 41, 42. He says:—"Let us recollect that the faith in Jesus as the promised Messiah was the fundamental doctrine on which the whole structure of the church arose. Accordingly, the first christian community was formed of very heterogeneous materials. It was composed of such as differed from other Jews only by the acknowledging of Jesus as the Messiah—of such as still continued bound to the same contracted Jewish notions which they had entertained before; and of such as, by coming to know Jesus more and more as the Messiah in the higher spiritual sense, by surrendering themselves with docility to the spirit of Christ, would, by the inworking of that spirit, be ever growing in their christian knowledge, and becoming more completely freed from their besetting errors."...."The sifting process of history must effect a separation between those who had really been brought into contact with the spirit of christianity and those who still belonged more truly to Judaism. To this necessary separation in the course of history, the words of Paul (1 Cor. 11: 19, and of 1 John 2: 13), properly apply. As Christ himself had faithfully observed the Mosaic law, so the faithful observance of it was adhered to at first by all believers."...."That which Christ intended, when he said that he was not come to destroy the law but to fulfill it, and when he called himself the Lord of the Sabbath; that which he meant by the worship of God, confined no longer to particular times or places, but in spirit and in truth, the essence of the new spiritual creation, which is grounded in the resurrection of Christ, was clearly conceived and expressed by the apostle Paul, and a self-subsisting christian church, wholly independent of Judaism, formed among the pagans. Already a schism threatened to break out between the two elements of which the christian church was composed,—the prevailing notion of christianity in Palestine, which was characterized by a decided leaning to the Old Testament, and which suffered the new spirit to remain enveloped in the old forms of Judaism; and the independent Pauline development of christianity among the pagans."

Coleman, in his "Ancient Christianity Exemplified," (pp. 34, 35), says, "In the synagogue worship the followers of Christ found a most congenial institution. It invited them to the reading of the Scriptures and to prayer. It gave them liberty of speech in exhortation and in worshiping and praising God. The rules and government of the synagogue, while they offered little, comparatively, to excite the pride of office and of power, commended themselves the more to the humble believer in Christ. The synagogue was endeared to the devout Jew by sacred associations and tender recollections. It was near at hand, and not, like the temple, afar off. He went but seldom up to Jerusalem, and only on great occasions joined in the rites of the temple service. But in the synagogue he paid his constant devotions to the God of his fathers. It met his eye in every place. It was constantly before him; and from infancy to hoary age, he was accustomed to repair to that hallowed place of worship, to listen to the reading of his sacred books, to pray, and sing praises unto the God of Israel."

In speaking of Jewish synagogues, Morer says (pp. 249–50), "There were in Jerusalem besides the temple, no less than 460, as Rabbi Phinehas reckons 'em, though others say 480 and 481." "Now the use they put their synagogues to, is partly discovered from the two apartments they give 'em. The one was the room for Canonicle Scriptures, where the Law and the Prophets were kept and read; the other, the room of Traditions, where the sayings of the Fathers were expounded and taught the people." (See Acts 15: 21.)

Now, in the light of the foregoing, and also of the Scriptures, we will examine Paul's history in regard to visiting the Jewish synagogues. Christ taught the Jews in their "synagogues and in the temple" (John 18: 20; but he taught the "multitudes" from the "mountain," the "ship," or in whatever place they were assembled. So with Paul; he taught the Jews in their synagogues. And what did he preach to them at DAMASCUS? "He preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God." What effect did it have on them? He "confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ." This was not preaching the seventh-day Sabbath; for "the Jews took counsel to kill him." "And they watched the gates day and night to kill him." (Acts 9: 20–24.) At ANTIOCH Paul goes into the synagogue on the Sabbath, and sat down. After reading the law and the prophets by the rulers of the synagogue, they invited the apostle to exhort the people; when he stood up and began his speech by going back in the history of the Jewish people, until the time their "fathers" "dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt." He then brings them down through their own history, replete with knowledge and understanding of their Scriptures, until he came to their own time, when he makes a personal application to them, and their notion of events relating to the crucifixion of Christ, in the following language:—

"Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent. For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. And though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain. And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre. But God raised him from the dead: And he was seen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people. And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David.... Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Beware therefore, lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the prophets; behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you."—Acts 13: 26–41.

The "Jews" were inclined to go "out of the synagogue," without inviting the apostle to attend another meeting with them: but the Gentiles invited Paul to preach to them the same words "the next Sabbath,"—or as the margin reads it (a critical Greek rendering)—"in the week between, or in the Sabbath between." What does this mean? "THE SABBATH BETWEEN." Between what? Why, between two Jewish Sabbaths. Hence, we have the proof of the first-day Christian Sabbath, as no other Sabbath, strictly so called, could come "between" two Jewish seventh-day Sabbaths. In proof of this position, we will here introduce a criticism on this text by the celebrated Thos. Morer, as found in his work, "On the Sabbath," published in London 1701. On p. 191 he says:—"However, that it was done with great caution and some concern, we find by the matter of the request; which was, that the apostles would preach to 'em some day between this and the next Sabbath, for that is the strict translation of the Greek, some time between the Sabbaths, suppose the next day, or the day after; all which days among the Jews were called Sabbath, as well as the day on which they worshiped. Which not only expounds the verse, but may be the sense of the forty-fourth, that almost the whole city the next Sabbath, i. e. the day following, came together to hear the word of God. And this might well cause so much envy in the Jews, in verse 45, not only because vast companies came to hear the apostles preach, but because it was on such days as brought some disrespect to their famous Sabbath, on which, and no other day of the week, they would have such meetings to be held."

In verse 43 it reads,—"Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas; who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God." And so, on "the next Sabbath day"—the next first day, if the above criticism is correct—came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God. How did the Jews feel in view of such a meeting as this? Why, when they "saw the multitudes, they were filled with ENVY, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming." If the Sabbatarian does not agree with Morer, in the above criticism, that the "Sabbath between" was the first-day of the week, but was really the next seventh-day; they must agree with us in this: that the apostle did not preach "seventh-day" doctrine to that vast multitude; for if he did, they would not have been guilty of "contradicting" Paul and "blaspheming" God as they did, we think. At ICONIUM they went "into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed." But what did the "unbelieving Jews" do? Why, they "stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected towards the brethren." And so "the multitude of the city was divided; and part held with the Jews, and part with the apostles." (Acts 14: 1–4.) What think you, reader; did Paul preach the "seventh-day" doctrine at Iconium? At Thessalonica, "where was a synagogue of the Jews; and, according to his CUSTOM, Paul went in to them, and on three sabbaths reasoned with them from the Scriptures, opening and setting forth that the Messiah ought to suffer and to rise from the dead, and that 'this is the Anointed Jesus whom I announce to you.'" (Emphatic Diaglott on Acts 17: 1–3.)

The "custom" here spoken of was not that his habit was to meet on the seventh-day sabbath particularly; but his "custom" was, when he did meet those old seventh-day JEWS, to reason with them from the Scriptures, and "announce" to them that "Jesus" was the "Messiah"—the ANOINTED of God. But what success did Paul meet with here? Some believed, of the "Greeks" and the "chief women." "But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city on an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people. And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, These that have turned the world upside down, are come hither also; whom Jason hath received: and these all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, saying, that there is another king, one Jesus."—Acts 17: 5–7.

At this "uproar," the "brethren" became so alarmed that they "immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea: who coming thither went into the synagogue of the Jews." But we are not informed on what particular day of the week this was, whether the first, seventh, or some other day of the week. But most likely it was not confined to the seventh day, simply to accommodate the Jews, as here in Berea they found a "more noble" class of hearers than at any other place, for "they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily whether these things were so." But when the Jews of Thessalonica heard that Paul was preaching at Berea, holding meetings "daily," and paying no regard to their sabbath, "they came thither also, and stirred up the people." And so the "brethren," becoming alarmed again, "immediately ... sent away Paul to go as it were to the sea." But those who "conducted Paul, brought him unto Athens." But "while Paul waited at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him"; and, "therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews," "and in the market daily." Holding his meetings, it appears, in the synagogue with the seventh-day Jews, but with others on the "first-day," or daily in the market, or wherever he could get the people together.

Next we find Paul at Corinth (Acts 18: 1–4), where "he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks." But so hard and blind were they, that "Paul was pressed in spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ." But how did these pharisaical seventh-day keepers receive this? Did Paul's reasoning and persuasion do them any good? Not at all. The result was—"they opposed themselves, and blasphemed." At this, Paul became discouraged; and "he shook his raiment and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I go to the Gentiles." Thus Paul was again compelled to leave the seventh-day Jewish synagogue, and hold his meetings in the private house of one "Justus, a worshiper of God, whose house was adjoining the synagogue." (Emphatic Diaglott.) Here "Crispus, the ruler of the synagogue, believed in the Lord, with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were immersed." And there, close by the seventh-day synagogue, Paul remained a "year and six months, teaching among them the WORD of GOD." Gallio having become Proconsul of Achaia, the Jews with one mind assaulted Paul, and brought him to the tribunal, saying, "This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law." When Gallio learned that the Jews had only "a question concerning doctrine, and names, and the law," which was among them, he said, "I will be no judge of such things." And in his wrath, as he could bear with them no longer, "he drove them from the tribunal." But those old seventh-day worshipers became so enraged at this, "they all took Sosthenes, the ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the tribunal." Not much christianity in this!

But Paul having had a vision, in which he was told—"Fear not, but speak, and be not silent," he "remained yet many days"; and then, bidding farewell to the brethren," he sailed for Syria, "in company with Priscilla and Aquilla; having shaved his head in Cenchrea, for he had a vow." Here, again, we find in the apostle a little more Judaism. But this is all explained in 1 Cor. 9: 20. Is it strange, therefore, that Paul should go into the seventh-day synagogues, occasionally, to reason with and try to persuade his former brethren among the Jews to become christians? If he could still practise the old Jewish rite of shaving the head, "circumcision," etc., in order that he "might gain the Jews," of course he would visit their synagogues on their sabbaths whenever he thought proper to do so.

Next we find Paul at Ephesus (Acts 18: 19–26), where he again "entered into the synagogue, and reasoned with the Jews. And when they requested him to remain a longer time, he did not consent, but bade them farewell, saying, I will return to you again, God willing." So, after some time, he returned, "and having entered the synagogue, he spake boldly for three months, reasoning and persuading about the kingdom of God." This was quite a lengthy meeting—three months. And here let us remember there were as many first-days, in these "three months," as there were seventh-days. And it is quite evident that the Jews, as such, did not have control of that particular synagogue at Ephesus; for when the apostle left them at his first visit, by their special invitation, he promised to return; which proves that they were his friends, or they would not have invited him to again visit them. But it is true that some became "hardened, and disbelieved, speaking evil of the way before the people." This led Paul to "depart from them," after having "separated the disciples, reasoning daily in the school of Tyrannus." So in the school-room of this Christian teacher, Paul could hold daily meetings,—a privilege, probably, not often enjoyed in the seventh-day synagogues; but in Tyrannus' school-room the apostle held a lengthy protracted meeting "for two years, so that all the inhabitants of Asia heard the word of the Lord."

THE NEW BIRTH.

BRO. FASSETT:—Your article on the "New Birth," in the Crisis of April 11th, was very gladly received by me, but there is one point upon which I wish you would give your views. In the Savior's reply to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water,"—does he mean baptism? I wish to understand the truth on this subject. Will you give us a short article in the Crisis on the subject?

South Albion, Me. JEREMIAH CARR.

In complying with the above request of Bro. Carr, I would remark:—

That some regard the Savior's language to Nicodemus,—"Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God,"—to refer both to natural birth and the resurrection. I think, however, the birth by water has no reference to natural birth. It is far-fetched and fanciful. Of course it is not expected that an unborn man into this world can "enter into the kingdom of God."

Baptism is required of every believer in the gospel (Mark 16: 16), following repentance and faith, when the promise of the Father is given—"Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38. And "if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. 8: 11.

Baptism in water is an emblem of the resurrection, as well as an expression of our faith in it. Rom. 6: 3–5. Also that we are "crucified with Christ" (Gal. 2: 20), and are dead, dead, dead,—"dead to the law" (Gal. 2: 19); "dead to sin," "affections and lusts" (Gal. 5: 24; Rom. 6: 10, 11); "dead to the world" (Gal. 6: 14; 1 John 2: 15–17), and risen again to "newness of life."—Rom. 6: 4. We are "buried with him in baptism, wherein ye also are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead."—Col. 2: 12.

Hence baptism is all essential as a christian ordinance, and it is required of all believers (to whom it is possible, and there are very few to whom it is not, unless on the cross as the thief) to be immersed, in testimony of their repentance and faith. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2: 38. You will observe, immersion in water and in the Holy Spirit are, in the above verse, as in John 3: 5, conjoined:—"Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit," etc.

How far the Lord will depart from his rule and law of saving men in his kingdom it is not for us to say, as we are not the judge. But it is evident that baptism is not so essential to salvation as faith; for often persons receive the gift of the Holy Ghost on repentance and faith, without and before baptism, although this is God's order. And Jesus is very careful to say, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Evidently implying faith is all essential; and one's faith will save him even to the neglect of baptism.

In conclusion, let me put this verse parallel with the one you wish me to explain in the Crisis.

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."—Matt. 16: 16.	"Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5.

As the gift of the Spirit is promised to the believer, the comparison is perfect. "Except a man be born of water (baptized) and of the Spirit (by which "you are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God"), he cannot enter into the kimdom of God."

This is my best light upon this passage. If I have not the true light, let others give it.

FRIENDSHIP.

How hard it is to find a friend
On whom we always can depend;
Sometimes we think this friend is got,
Till trials prove we have him not.

Many, to serve some selfish end,
Declare and vow they are your friend;
But soon as serving self is o'er,
Behold! they are your friends no more.

Others will act a part more base,
Always be friendly to your face;
But turn your back, and they your name
Expose to obloquy and shame.

Apparent friendship others show
To find out all that you may know;
Your secrets sure are pumped out,
And then are handed all about.

When friendship once is rooted fast,
It is a plant no storm can sever;
Transfixed it never heeds the blast,
But flourisheth and blooms forever.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER TEN.

TO BRO. C.:—Dear Brother,—I wish to say somewhat more to you respecting one point referred to in your letter. The position assumed by the brother is a very common one, and I think it may not be unprofitable to devote a little more argument for the refutation of this error.

There is a wide difference between growth in grace and the experience of "perfect love," "entire sanctification," or the "baptism of the Spirit," by whatever name we are pleased to call it. The one commences at justification, and may continue until the glorification; the other is subsequent to justification, and an instantaneous work. There is no such thing as a "gradation PURITY," but there is such a thing as "gradation MATURITY." Let the distinction be discriminated and kept in mind.

We might just as consistently talk of a gradual pardon, and gradual justification, as to talk of a gradual sanctification. There are preliminary steps to the point of justifying grace; but when pardon is granted, it is for all our transgressions, and an instantaneous work; so when all depravity is removed, when "all filthiness of the flesh and spirit" is cleansed away, it is an instantaneous work. Let me give you some excellent thoughts touching this point from the pen of Rev. F. G. Hibbard.

"It has long appeared to us that many who are seeking after entire holiness mistake the duty of a gradual growth in grace for a gradual growing out of sin. They seem to think that the two mutually involve each other, and that as they must always grow up into Christ in all things, so they must by degrees grow out of the bondage, guilt, and pollution of sin. Now to all such we would say one word of admonition. There is no gradual growing out of sin. All that partakes of the proper nature of sin in you must be forgiven and washed away through faith in the blood of the Lamb. When this is done, it is an instantaneous work.... Sin is not a thing to be grown out of, but a thing to be forgiven and cleansed away.... In this view of the perfection (the improvement and maturity of the graces of the Spirit), there are degrees and progressive stages; but in the work of simply cleansing from all sin, both of flesh and spirit inbred and overt sin, there are no degrees, no progressive stages, but the work is complete at the first, and instantaneous as to time, performed by the Holy Ghost just at the moment when the burdened soul has faith to be made every whit whole."

Mr. Wesley says:—"Inquiring how it was that in all these parts we had so few witnesses of free salvation, I constantly received one and the same answer: 'We see now we sought it by our works; we thought it was to come gradually; we never expected it to come in a moment, by simple faith, in the very same manner as we received justification.' What wonder is it, then, that you have been fighting all these years as one that beateth the air!"

On another occasion Mr. W. says: "As to manner, I believe this perfection is always wrought in the soul by a simple act of faith; consequently in an instant.... Look for it every day, every hour, every moment. Why not this hour, this moment? Certainly you may look for it now, if you believe it is by faith. And by this token you may surely know whether you seek it by faith or by works. If by works, you want something to be done first, before you are sanctified. You think, I must be or do this or thus. Then you are seeking it by works unto this day. If you seek it by faith, you expect it as you are, and if as you are, then expect it now. It is important to observe that there is an inseparable connection between these three points: expect it by faith—expect it as you are—and expect it now. To deny one is to deny them ALL."

Not those few witnesses whose testimony I have cited in a previous epistle, only, acted upon these rules, and proved their correctness, but a great multitude whom no man can number have demonstrated the same great fact.

It is true that, by a growth in grace, a greater and easier ascendancy will be attained over sin; but this is not the casting out of the strong man. The workings of unsanctified nature, or inherent sin, do greatly impede the christian's progress, hence the exhortation to lay aside every weight and easily besetting sin, in order to run the race successfully—to put off the old man with his deeds, not keep him in subjection; not have him dethroned and bound merely, but put off—crucified—the inward foes extirpated; so that the conflict may be wholly with foes without. This is not effected at conversion. What christian does not know this? Who has not felt the soreness of the conflict, when the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, so that they could not do the things that they would, because of this very opposition? But must this always be? Nay, verily.

There is another work to be wrought, of which justification was but the incipient stage. It is the being sanctified wholly; it is the being not only pardoned, but also cleansed from all unrighteousness; it is being endowed with power from on high. Then will the growth in grace be more rapid; the christian graces will ripen more and more; the soul will become more and more impregnable against the assaults of the adversary.

May the Lord help us to be pure in heart.

THE YEAR OF JUBILEE.

The following is from Yahn's Biblical Archæology, a work on the Antiquities of the Jews, Dec. 351.

"The Jubilee followed seven Sabbatic years, i. e., was on the fiftieth year. To this statement the Jews generally, the Rabbins and the Caraites agree, and say further, that the argument of those who maintain that it was on the forty-ninth year, for the reason that the omission to till the ground for two years in succession, viz., the forty-ninth and fiftieth, would produce a famine, is not to be attended to. It is not to be attended to, simply because those years of rest, being known long beforehand, the people would of course lay up provision for them. It may be remarked further in reference to this point, that certain trees produced their fruits spontaneously, particularly the fig and sycamore, which yield half the year round; and that those fruits could be preserved for some months; which explains at once how a considerable number of people might have obtained no inconsiderable portion of their support."

From Josephus' Antiquities, b. 3, c. 12, s. 3. "And thereby Moses gave them all these precepts, being such as were observed during his own life-time. But though he lived now in the wilderness, yet did he make provision how they might observe the same laws when they should have taken the land of Canaan. He gave them rest to the land from ploughing and planting every seventh year, as he had prescribed to them to rest from working every seventh day; and ordered that then what grew of its accord out of the earth should in common belong to all that pleased to use it; making no distinction in that respect between their own countrymen and foreigners; and he ordained that they should do the same after seven times seven years, which in all are fifty years: and that fiftieth year is called by the Hebrews the Jubilee, where debtors are freed from their debts, and slaves are set at liberty," etc.

WORK FOR THE ADVOCATES OF PTOLEMY.

It is well known that Ptolemy's Canon rests on Astronomy, as its foundation and chief corner stone. It has been claimed that the authority of "more than twenty eclipses" confirms the Ptolemaic record; and when its contradictions of history and Scripture have been pointed out, its advocates have said, It is is confirmed by astronomy, and "is not to be set aside for the authority of any writing whatsoever." Now it behooves those who defend the Ptolemaic system of Chronology to construct tables that will "make" all the eclipses of the Canon. There are no astronomical tables now in existence that will do it, although many have been constructed with special reference to the eclipses of this record, taking it for granted that they were correctly calculated. As Ptolemy's Canon claims to be an astronomical record, we challenge the astronomical proof of its correctness. Let us have the tables.

The tables of the great Astronomer, Ferguson, amended by Eld. Thurman, make those eclipses, the time of which has been observed in our day, to the very minute. No tables that will do this will make the eclipses of the Canon.—Voice of the West.

"UNCLE JOHNSON."

This was the familiar name given to a pious old slave of the family of President Harrison, who was made free at the age of one hundred years. He was early in life awakened under the preaching of William Tennent, and for nearly a century served the Lord with characteristic ardor and devotion. The New York Evangelist gives an account of him that shows a remarkable experience which many christians might covet:

His Fridays, for more than seventy years, had been rigidly observed as days of fasting and prayer—days in which, as he said, "I says to de body, "stand back, I'se going to feed de soul to-day." Those, he said, were days in which "I spreads de great things before the Lord and begs."

He accounted for his long life, in part, by saying that he did not work very hard; that for about sixty years his master used to let him out about six months of each year "to blow de gospel trumpet on de plantations round about, to make de slaves good an' 'ligious; an' I tells ye, massa, when I was in my prime—say about eighty, I could blow de old trumpet so dat dey could hear me for miles."

A christian friend of his for many years related the following anecdotes of Johnson.

Once I said to him, "Uncle Johnson, why don't you go to church once in a while?"

He answered, "Massa, I wants to be dere, but I can't 'have."

"You can't behave?"

"Well, massa, ye knows, late years, de flesh am weak; an' when dey 'gins to talk an' sing about Jesus, I 'gin to fill up, an' putty soon I has to holler, an' den dey say, 'Carry dat man to the door, he 'stub de meeting.'"

"But you should hold in until you get home."

"O, massa, I can't hold in—I bust ef I don't holler."

Once, after hearing him pray and sing at midnight, while a thunder storm was passing, in the morning I said, "Was that you shouting so last night?"

"Yes, massa, I s'pose."

"Well, I thought the thunder made noise enough without your hallooing."

"He looked up, and with astonishment said: "Massa, do ye tink I'se goin' to lie dere on my bed like a great pig when de Lord com'd along shakin' de earth an' de heavens? No, Massa, when I hears the thunder comin' I says, Ellen, Ellen, wake up here, we's goin' to hear from home ag'in."

Once, after he had been ill for a few days, I said, "Uncle Johnson, I thought your appointed time had about come."

"O, yes, massa, one day I thought I could see the dust of de chariot comin' ober de mountains; an' den something said 'Hold on, Johnson, a little longer; I'll come round directly." Yes, an' I will hold on, if de Lord will another hundred years, for I'm bound for Canaan." And then he broke out singing

"But this do I find; we too are so jined, He'll not go to glory and leave me behind."

One day Rev. Dr. M. called on him with me. After a conversation which surely the doctor will never forget, he said,

"Well, Uncle Johnson, I must go," and then taking him by the hand, said, "Good-by. I shall probably hear soon that you have gone over Jordan, but we will follow on."

The old man replied, "Yes, massa, a great many years ago young men like you tell me dat; an' den after a bit, I'd hear dey ha' gone, an' I'm a pilgrim yet, but I always manages to send word."

"Well, if I should die first, what word would you send?" said Dr. M.

"O, massa, if you get home to glory afore I do, (weeping) tell em to keep the table standin,' for Johnson is holding on his way."

We dare not attempt to describe the scene we witnessed the evening his wife died; but a few days after, we said to him, "Don't you feel very lonely since Ellen left you?"

He replied, "O, yes, but de Lord comes round every day, jus' as de nuss would, an' gives me a taste ob de kingdom wid de spoon; but how I wants to get hold ob de dish!"

TO WRITERS AND SPEAKERS.

Wm. Cullen Bryant gave the following excellent advice to a young man who offered him an article for the Evening Post:—

"My young friend, I observe that you have used several French expressions in your article. I think if you will study the English language, that you will find it capable of expressing all the ideas that you may have. I have always found it so, and in all that I have written I do not recall an instance when I was tempted to use a foreign word, but that on searching, I found a better one in my own language.

Be simple, unaffected; be honest in your speaking and writing. Never use a long word when a short one will do. Call a spade not a well-known oblong instrument of manual industry; let a home be a home, not a residence; a place a place, not a locality, and so of the rest. Where a short word will do, you always lose by using a long one. You lose in clearness, you lose in honest expression of your meaning; and in the estimation of men who are competent to judge, you lose in reputation for ability.

The only true way to shine even in this false world, is to be modest and unassuming. Falsehood may be a very thick crust, but in the course of time truth will find a place to break through. Elegance of language may not be in the power of all of us, but simplicite and straight-forwardness are."

CATERPILLARS.—A correspondent at Newton suggests the following plan of destroying caterpillars on fruit trees, and says it has been successfully tested by experience:

"The best times for destroying them are early in the morning, at noon and at night, when they are in their nests. Attach two or three conical-shaped bushes to as many poles, the length of each pole being adapted to the height of the trees; by twisting the bush and rubbing faithfully, the nests and the caterpillars adhere to it. Caution should be used not to disturb the nests excepting when the caterpillars are in them, as those outside, if not destroyed, form new nests."

THE "ONE BOOK."

Little folks, did you ever hear of Bunyan's "ONE BOOK?" that Bunyan who wrote the Pilgrim's Progress, the Holy War, Grace Abounding, and many other good works? And what do you think that one book was? The Bible? Yes, the blessed Bible. It was a lamp to his feet, and a light to his path; sweeter to his soul than honey and the honey comb; every chapter in it was a chapter in his history, and every verse touched and thrilled some chord in his heart. Like the poor man's lamb, it lay in his bosom, and was to him as a daughter. Many millions have loved the Bible; but we question if any one surpassed or equaled Bunyan in the depth and fervor of his love. Many have framed concordances, and made entire transcriptions of it; but Bunyan's concordance was his memory, and it lay all transcribed, every word and syllable of it, in his heart.

Young friends, do you wish to be truly wise, truly great, truly happy? Do as Bunyan did, take the Bible; make it the man of your counsel; bind it about your necks; clasp it to your bosoms; hide it in your hearts. "So shalt thou find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and man."

The stars that in their courses roll,
Have much instruction given;
But Thy good word informs my soul
Which is the way to heaven.

Then let me love my Bible more,
And take a fresh delight
By day to read those wonders o'er,
And meditate by night.

HOW THE CRICKETS BROUGHT GOOD FORTUNE.

My friend Jacques went into a baker's shop one day to buy a little cake which he had fancied in passing. He intended it for a child whose appetite was gone, and who could be coaxed to eat only by amusing him. He thought that such a pretty loaf might tempt even the sick. While he waited for his change, a little boy six or eight years old, in poor, but perfectly clean clothes, entered the baker's shop. "Ma'am," said he to the baker's wife, "my mother sent me for a loaf of bread." The woman climbed upon the counter, (this happened in a country town,) took from the shelf of four pound loaves the best one she could find, and put it into the arms of the little boy.

My friend Jacques then first observed the thin and thoughtful face of the little fellow. It contrasted strangely with the round, open countenance of the great loaf, of which he was taking the greatest care.

"Have you any money?" said the baker's wife.

The little boy's eyes grew sad.

"No, ma'am," said he, hugging the loaf closer to his thin blouse; "but mother told me to say that she would come and speak to you about it to-morrow."

"Run along," said the good woman; "carry your bread home, child."

"Thank you, ma'am," said the little fellow.

My friend Jacques came forward for his money. He had put his purchase into his pocket, and was about to go, when he found the child with the big loaf whom he had supposed to be half-way home, standing stock still behind him.

"What are you doing there!" said the baker's wife to the child, whom she had thought to be fairly off. "Don't you like the bread?"

"O yes, ma'am!" said the child.

"Well, then, carry it to your mother, my little friend. If you wait any longer, she will think you are playing by the way, and you will get a scolding."

The child did not seem to hear; something else absorbed his attention.

The baker's wife went up to him, and gave him a friendly tap upon the shoulder. What are you thinking about?" said she.

"Ma'am," said the little boy, "what is it that sings?"

"There is no singing," said she.

"Yes!" cried the little fellow. "Hear it! Queek, queek, queek, queek!"

My friend and the woman both listened, but they could hear nothing, unless it was the song of the crickets, frequent guests in bakers' houses.

"It is a little bird," said the dear little fellow, "or perhaps the bread sings when it bakes, as the apples do."

"No, indeed, little goosey!" said the baker's wife; "those are crickets. They sing in the bake-house because we are lighting the oven, and they like to see the fire."

"Crickets!" said the child; "are they really crickets?"

"Yes, to be sure," said she, good humoredly. The child's face lighted up.

"Ma'am," said he, blushing at the boldness of the request, "I would like it very much if you would give me a cricket."

"A cricket!" said the baker's wife, smiling; "what in the world would you do with a cricket, my little friend? I would gladly give you all there are in the house, to get rid of them, they run about so."

"O ma'am, give me one, only one, if you please!" said the child, clasping his little thin hands under the big loaf. "They say that crickets bring good luck into houses; and perhaps if we had one at home, mother, who has so much trouble, would'nt cry any more."

"Why does your poor mother cry?" said my friend, who could no longer help joining in the conversation.

"On account of her bills, sir," said the little fellow. "Father is dead, and mother works very hard, but she cannot pay them all."

My friend took the child, and with him the great loaf, into his arms, and I really believe he kissed them both. Meanwhile, the baker's wife, who did not dare to touch a cricket herself, had gone into the bakehouse. She made her husband catch four, and put them into a box with holes in the cover, so that they might breath. She gave the box to the child, who went away perfectly happy.

When he had gone, the baker's wife and my friend gave each other a good squeeze of the hand. "Poor little fellow," said they, both together. Then she took down her account book, and, finding the page where the mother's charges were written, made a great dash all down the page, and wrote at the bottom "Paid."

Meanwhile my friend, to lose no time, had put up in paper all the money in his pockets, where fortunately he had quite a sum that day, and had begged the good wife to send it at once to the mother of the little cricket boy, with her bill receipted, and a note, in which he told her she had a son who would one day be her joy and pride.

They gave it to a baker's boy with long legs, and told him to make haste. The child, with his big loaf, his four crickets, and his little short legs, could not run very fast, so that when he reached home, he found his mother for the first time in many weeks with her eyes raised from her work, and a smile of peace and happiness upon her lips.

The boy believed that it was the arrival of the four little black things which had worked this miracle, and I do not think he was mistaken. Without the crickets, and his good little heart, would this happy change have taken place in his mother's fortunes?—Our Young Folks.

THE LAMB, WOLF, AND DOG.

A FABLE.

A little lamb once left its mother and went down the mountain, to drink at a stream which ran below. At the same moment, a wolf ran out of the neighboring wood, and faced the lamb, on the opposite bank.

"What right have you to drink here?" quoth the wolf. "Don't you know this stream belongs to me?"

"Am I doing wrong?" asked the innocent lamb. "I thought the stream was free to all, and did not know that you were the owner of it."

"Don't stand lying there," said the wolf, pretending to be very angry.

"I do not tell a lie," answered the little lamb. "I was very thirsty when I came down the mountain, and am sorry if I have offended you by drinking of the stream."

"Your sorrow won't prevent me from killing you," replied the wolf; so prepare yourself to die."

"I have no preparation to make," said the lamb; all my life has been as innocent as that of the flowers in the meadows."

"So, then," said the wolf, "you will make a dainty meal for me," and he jumped over the stream, whilst the lamb lifted up its eyes to heaven, and stood ready to be sacrificed."

At this instant the faithful sheep-dog came bounding down the mountain, and confronted the wolf. "How now, old rascal!" quoth he, "do you seek to kill one of my master's stray lambs, by pretending to own the stream wherein he has slaked his thirst? This is one of your ancient tricks, which you must now answer for without loss of time."

"Pardon me," quoth the wolf," crouching with a vulpine smile; "I meant the little lamb no harm; I merely wanted to try her courage."

"Try thy own courage against mine, then," answered the brave sheep-dog; and with that he fell upon the cowardly wolf and tore him to pieces.

The little lamb uttered sorrowful cries, like the wailing of an orphan in some alien world, and again lifted up its meek eyes to heaven and saw the face of Jupiter looking out of the clouds, smiling and well pleased. Then the dog and the lamb walked up the mountain together towards the fold.

THE MEANING.

Dear to heaven is innocence,
Every ready its defense;
Though a moment seems the wronger
Over right to triumph stronger,
There are angels evermore
At the threshold of God's door,
Swift to fly, and strong to do
Justice, all the wide world through.
Thou art safe in self possession,
Innocence needs no confession,
Guilt lies only in transgression.
Hold thy heart in quiet keeping;
Evil sowing, evil reaping,—
The Master's eyes are never sleeping.
Fear not, therefore, though there be
No sign of ready help for thee;
But, in thy peril and distress,
Trust the Master, questionless.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

The following was sent for insertion in our paper, and will well pay one for a careful reading. We suppose it was taken from some paper of the Christian denomination.—Ed.

OUR POSITION AND DOCTRINE.

We call ouselves christians, not any thing more,
No titles succeeding, or going before;
We thing it most natural, it leads to no strife,
For Christ is our husband, and we the Lamb's wife.

We give not the glory to Cephus or Paul,
Appollos or James, for Christ is our all.
No Wesley or Luther, no Calvin or Fox,
We claim as a leader, foundation or Rock.

No human invention of platform or creed,
We take as a standard and sacredly heed;
Our creed is the Bible, the Spirit our guide,
All christians our brethren—a truth undenied.

The doctrine we teach, and have from our youth,
Is the doctrine of Reason, Revelation and Truth;
Unmixed with traditions and the dogmas of men,
As pure as the morning, and clear as the sun.

We talk of no three all mysteriously one,
Nor think that our Savior's both Father and Son;
But believe in one God, and only in one,
And one Mediator between God and man.

The teaching of Jesus, the example he set,
The miracles wrought, the blood and the sweat;
His sufferings and death, as he bore the great load,
Was the atonement he made to bring us to God.

We teach that the church of Messiah is one,
United in spirit like the Father and Son;
That party distinctions forever should cease,
And saints all unite as dear children of peace.

We advocate liberty of conscience throughout,
Believe in a free interchanging of speech;
Are liberal in sentiment, feeling and thought,
Designing to practice the doctrine we preach.

Although we are liberal in thought and in deed,
And mean to be free from bigotry's chain;
The law of the spirit of life we will heed,
Be practical christians without and within.

The life is what constitutes christians with us,
Externals are trifling when with it compared;
The crown that we seek lies under the cross,
The faithful alone for heaven's prepared.

We boast not of members, of titles or fame,
Nor join with the world in their envy and strife;
With the learned and the great we scarce have a name,
Yet rejoice it is written in the Lamb's Book of Life.

We make no pretentions to smoothness of speech,
Scholastic divinity by us is abhorred;
The preaching we offer is not out of reach,
But simple and easy, the word of the Lord.

MICHAEL--WHO IS HE? Dan. 12: 1.

Various are the views entertained by different religionists respecting the personage denominated Michael. But among the more critical class, those who have given the subject a careful examination, there seems to be quite a harmony of opinion.

That he is a person who will accomplish wonders is evident, both from the prophecy, which declares he shall stand up,—that is, reign,—and the events with which he is associated, or that are produced by, or in conjunction with, his standing up; and also of the import of the term as given by distinguished Hebrew scholars. In connection with his standing up, there is to "be a time of trouble," the magnitude of which is "such as never was since there was a nation," and the deliverance of Daniel's people, embracing all those who are "written in the book," and the anastasis of the dead; "some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt"; and the shining forth of the wise in the kingdom, etc., which will bring to a terminus the present mortal economy, and inaugurate a state of things more grand and glorious, which will endure eternally.

From the character of the events which are produced by his standing up, we can draw an inference which leads us to conclude who he is; and viewing the subject from this standpoint; viz., from his work, it is clearly seen that he is none other than the Lord Jesus Christ, the anointed One.

Albert Barnes, in his Notes on the book of Daniel, says the proper meaning of this name is—"Who as God, and is a name given undoubtedly from some resemblance to God." Dr. Adam Clarke also translates the term—"He who as God shall stand up," etc. Prof. Stuart renders it about the same. He says, "Who as God, or a guardian angel, shall stand up." Who is more like God than his Son? Can a being be more than the express image of another? Paul, when addressing the Hebrews, says Christ is the "express image" of his Father's "person." If it is a fair expression of the Hebrew to say, he "who as God," or like God, shall stand up; then it must be obvious to all that Christ is the one referred to; for no one can be more like God than Christ, both in a moral and physical sense. Here, in Dan. 12: 1, he is called "the great Prince," which appellation is one of the titles by which Jesus is called. Also in Dan. 8: 25, he is called "the Prince of princes," against whom a certain power is to stand up. In Isa. 9: 6, where Christ is mentioned, he is denominated "the Prince of peace." Also in Acts 3: 15, he is called "the Prince of life." In Dan. 9: 25, we read, "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks," etc.

An argument corroborative of the above is found in the New Testament, where Jude speaks (in the 9th verse of his epistle) of Michael, in conjunction with the archangel,—"Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil . . . about the body of Moses," etc. Here the terms "Michael" and "archangel" are used signifying one and the same being; and as archangel is defined to be one who is Lord over angels, and as Christ evidently sustains that relation to the angels, he is undoubtedly the personage to whom Jude in his epistle refers.

Upon the two texts in which the term archangel occurs, Bishop Horsely very appropriately remarks:—"One of the two passages is in the first epistle to the Thessalonians, where the apostle, among the circumstances of the pomp of our Lord's descent from heaven to the final judgment, mentions the voice of the archangel; the other passage is in the epistle of St. Jude, where the title of archangel is coupled with the name of Michael. This passage is so remarkably obscure that I shall not attempt to draw any conclusion from it but this which manifestly follows, be the particular sense of the passage what it may; since this is one of the two texts in which alone the word archangel is found in the whole Bible; since in this one only the title archangel is coupled with any name; and since the name with which it is coupled is Michael, it follows undeniably the archangel Michael is the only archangel of whom we know anything from holy writ. It cannot be proved from holy writ, and if not from holy writ it cannot be at all, that any archangel exists but the one archangel Michael, and this one archangel Michael is unquestionably the Michael of the book of Daniel. From all this it is evident that Michael is a name for our Lord himself, in his particular character of the champion of his faithful people, against the violence of the apostate faction and the wiles of the devil. To this opinion there is nothing unreconcilable."

With the above facts before you, we submit the subject for your candid consideration, dear reader. Other important questions come up in this connection, such as the following: What is meant by the phrase "stand up"? and, When will Michael stand up? etc. These are questions of great moment, especially the last one; and an attempt to answer it, as to definiteness, should be very carefully done. May the Lord guide us into truth, and preserve us unto his kingdom.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT SHALL WE DO FOR THE FREEDMEN!

No grander, nobler work, was ever undertaken by the Christian church, than that which is now being done, in American Christendom, for the mental, moral and religious elevation of four million freedmen south, whose shackles God has now broken forever.

A bloody and wicked rebellion, begun and carried on for the interest of Slavery, is crushed; and now, where Slavery tyrannized and trampled, Freedom reigns, to raise and bless. In all that terrible four years' struggle, the hand of an overruling Providence was plainly visible,—bringing good out of evil, and making the wrath of man to praise him. The long, patient, and agonizing cry of the wronged and down-trodden slave for deliverance, which for so many years had gone up into the ears of God, he has at last heard and answered.

The struggle is ended; and the will and purpose of God, which he has wrought out from it, is accomplished,—the emancipation of a race from a worse than Egyptian bondage, and the opening to the church of a field for educational and missionary labor, such as, for extent and promise, the world never saw before, and the like of which the church has never before been called upon to cultivate.

In all this, we recognize a distinct call from God, upon his people of all names and of whatever faith, for special effort, in behalf of the race delivered, to carry on the work which He has begun. And, in all this, we see the directing finger of God, pointing south, to fields now open to the sower and the reaper, and hear his voice crying loudly to the American church,—"Occupy!"

The field is large, the harvest great, and there is an earnest call for laborers. Missionaries and teachers are wanted, who will give their whole mind and heart to the work. Hundreds have gone, hundreds are going, and there is room for hundreds and thousands more. The demand is great. Imploringly, Western Ethiopia stretches forth her hands to God; and, from the Atlantic coast to the Great River, from the Ohio to the Gulf, four million voices cry to God's people north,—"Come over and help us!"

In this grand and glorious work every christian, every church and denomination, of whatever name, has or ought to have something to do. And this work, almost every other denomination is doing, and doing nobly and well. If we, as a people, and as individuals, have so long slumbered, unconscious of our duty, and deaf to the calls of Providence, while others, with greater promptness and zeal, have been doing faithfully what God has given them to do, it is surely time for us to AWAKE, and inquire if he has not, in this direction, a work also for us to do; and, if so, go about it at once, and with so much the more promptitude and energy as we see the Great Day of the world's doom approaching.

From the dark and dismal grave of Slavery, the voice of God has called a dead race to a social, civil and political resurrection; and, Lazarus-like, they have "come forth" to a new life; but, yet "bound hand and foot with the grave-clothes" of their former degradation, and their faces still bound about with the napkin of ignorance, the Master turns now to his people, and says,—"Loose them, and let them go!" Release them from the disabilities of their former condition; remove from their eyes the bandages of moral and religious darkness and ignorance, and let them go forth hereafter enlightened freemen in Christ Jesus. God has done his work; we are now to do ours. A race is to be elevated, educated, christianized. A nation, born in a day, is to be made fit for the kingdom of heaven,—ready to hail, with joyful acclamations, the coming of the Great Emancipator.

The work already done in their behalf, by the various Mission and Freedmen's Aid Societies, and by Christian denominations of almost every name, is great; the results are cheering, and full of hope. Efforts have been made in every direction for their material, mental and spiritual good. Men and women of very high character and ability, and of the highest culture, have left home, and society, and position, to labor there, amid privations and discomforts, for the enlightenment and salvation of a long despised and down-trodden race. Missions have been organized; free schools for the children, night schools for adults, and Sunday Schools for religious instruction, have been established, and are all now in successful operation.

Old and young are thirsting for knowledge. Such an avidity for instruction was never seen before. Their eagerness to learn is astonishing, and their progress wonderful. "Every where, in tent or hovel, in shop or kitchen, you will already see the well-thumbed primer or spelling-book; and often it is the grey head which is bent over the little book, and the eyes, dim with age and suffering, kindle with hope and enthusiasm, at every chance for a lesson."

Their great desire is to be able to read the Word of God; and their eagerness for this is all the greater, because it has been to them so long a prohibited and sealed book. Thank God! that seal is broken. But the seal of ignorance remains. That, too, will soon be removed; and then, as God wills, a free Bible, open to all, sealed to none.

How dense the ignorance South, few realize. In name, a Christian land; yet shrouded in almost heathen darkness. The mass of the white population South are but little higher in the scale of intelligence than the blacks. In 1861, while Massachusetts had less than 2000 white native adults who could neither read nor write, Virginia had more than 77,000. In 1850, Georgia had 41,000; and in 1854, including the youth between 8 and 20 years of age who could not read, there were in that State 150,000 whites without the rudiments of education; and over 380,000 colored Georgians, to teach whom to read was a crime, for which the culprit must suffer heavy punishment by the State laws.

What a field for educational and missionary labor! In a single State, in the most enlightened and christianized (?) nation on the globe, more than 500,000 souls (over half the entire population) rushing on to the judgment—unable to read the Word of God!

Ye who enjoy the blessings of freedom and enlightened Christianity, what a call is here upon you to send forth laborers, armed with primers, spelling-books, papers, Bibles, to cultivate a field so unfruitful, and yet so full of promise. No richer, riper, fuller harvest ever invited the reaper's sickle. Now that Slavery is dead, and Liberty reigns, nothing hinders. Who will send? Who will go?

Who will sacrifice ease and comfort, the enjoyments of home society, and the emoluments of office or business, for the sake of Christ, and the poor, despised, benighted bondmen, to save whom Christ died? Who will humble himself, to raise the low, and be at last with Christ exalted? Who will go bring the outcasts into the fold, instruct them in righteousness, and shine, by and by, as the stars for ever and ever?

God has his chosen ones among us, qualified and waiting, whom he will yet call to the work. Some who now read these lines, their hearts kindling with holy love and zeal, are all ready to cry out,—"I, Lord! Send me!"—and others, faithful stewards of the Lord's money, stand ready to respond,—"Here are the dollars! Go!"

Let us, then, in obedience to the call of God, do our part in the great work of regenerating a race and lifting them from their low estate to a higher manhood and a purer christianhood,—and wait for our reward when the Judge comes and the books are opened. And, as all great works are best carried forward through organized action, shall we not, at once, or as soon as may be, and for the more successful accomplishment of the object in view, establish Freedmen's Missions, and support them by generous and liberal contributions to a Freedmen's Mission Fund?

Every one who has a voice, or pen, or purse, has a duty to do in this matter. We shall not have long to work, at the longest, and there is no time to lose. What we do, let us do quickly, and well,—and we shall receive at last the Master's "Well done!" W. B. H.

For the World's Crisis.

MEMORY.

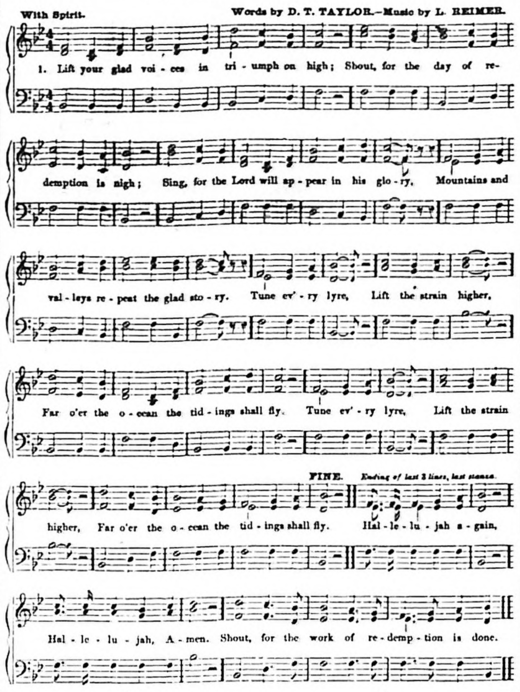
We can identify ourselves under great changes of body and mind, through the power of memory. The full grown man recollects when he was a child, and also remembers some of his childish tricks. There is a bodily change from the boy to the man. There is also a change in mind; for he looks upon his childish sports as foolishness and could not be induced to act them over again. So also in sleep; if it was not for the power of memory, on awaking from a sound sleep, we could not identify ourselves; it would seem to us a creation to life.

Sleep is the image of death, in this respect, that while we are in a sound sleep we are as the dead. As we identify ourselves on awaking from a sound sleep, so also shall we identify ourselves on awakening at the resurrection; though we lay down our poor frail body and rise in the likeness of Christ's glorious body, we shall be able to identify ourselves, and rejoice that we have come up out of many tribulations, having our robes washed white in the blood of the Lamb.

Bath, Me. J. A. Saunders.

GLAD VOICES.

With Spirit. Words by D. T. Taylor.—Music by L. Reimer.



2.

Lift your glad voices, ye nations, and sing,
Let the high anthem re-echo and ring.
Sing, for the bright One that slept in the manger
Comes; and the earth that once pillowed the stranger,
In rich adorning,
Hails the glad morning,
Blossoms to Eden and welcomes her King.

3.

Lift your glad voices, He conquered the grave,
Jesus, Immanuel, almighty to save.
Shout to the tyrant, "Thy chains are all broken";
Sing, for the voice of Jehovah hath spoken.
Open the portal,
Ransomed, immortal;
Life shall endure with Eternity's wave.

4.

Lift your glad voices, your banners unfurl,
Sin, Death and Hell shall to ruin be hurled.
Christ shall come down in his chariot of fire,
Bethlehem's Beauty, and Israel's Messiah;
Prince ever glorious,
Strong and victorious,
Lion of Judah, and King of the world.

5.

Lift your glad voices, He cometh again;
Sound out the tidings o'er earth and o'er main!
Sing, for the dark days of evil are ending;
Shout to the Bridegroom with angels descending!
Bride of Jehovah,
Welcome thy lover;
Sing, for He cometh, He cometh to reign.

6.

Lift your glad voices wide under the sun,
Sing of his power who the victory has won.
Strong is that arm that the strengthless defended,
Saved us from hell, and the warfare hath ended.
Hallelujah again,
Hallelujah, Amen!
Shout! for the work of Redemption is done.

For the World's Crisis.

"JESUS OF NAZERETH, THE KING OF THE JEWS."—Jno. 19: 19.

Such was the title written by Pilate in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, and placed over our Lord, fastened to the cross on which he was crucified, and we are thus led to contemplate, first,

The Cross of Christ.

This was composed of an upright or perpendicular shaft, having a transvere piece fastened to it at right angles. Allowing the upright to represent the "will of God," and the transverse the human will, and we discover that Jesus is to be King by the will of the Father, and not by his own will, for the title was connected, not with the transverse, but with the upright. As saith the 2nd Ps. v. 6, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion." Hence also it is written in Jno. 5: 30, and 6: 38,—"I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father. . . . I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." "By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." Heb. 10: 10. In Rom. 8: 7, the apostle says, "The carnal mind (or will) is enmity against God"; i. e., it is across His will—diametrically opposed to it; constituting an antagonism with the divine will, "not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be"; therefore, it must be crucified, put to death, as in Rom. 6: 6,—"Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with (or by) him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin; for he that is dead is freed from sin."

"And he, bearing his cross, went forth."—Jno. 19: 17. "And as they came out" of the city (Matt. 27: 32), they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name; him they compelled "to bear his cross."

Take now the cross on your shoulder, without having first taken off the transverse piece, and what kind of a cross will you have? Instead of having "the cross of Christ," you will have your own cross; instead of having an easy yoke and a light burden, you will find a yoke that is galling, and a burden that is not bearable; because you have not learned of Christ. When Christ was "risen again," he had triumphed over the world, over the flesh, and over the devil. His will was crucified, his cross was ended, his burden was gone, his yoke was easy. He had wrought, not his own will, but the will of the Father. But pass on as you are; travel through this wilderness of sin with that cross on your shoulder, as you now have it, with its extended transverse arms, like the flukes of an anchor, catching in every tree, bush, bramble, thorn, thistle and brier; in every opposing principle and doctrine, every false notion and fashion that you may encounter; and a sweet, happy time you will have of it, will you not? Oh! how you will be tormented, teased, troubled, twisted, tossed, thrown to the right, thrown to the left, held in check, drawn backwards and thrust forward, buffeted and cast down, lifted up and abased; dissatisfied with yourself, and satisfied with no one, displeasing everybody and pleasing nobody. Oh! how you will be laughed at for your pains, derided for your folly, held in scorn and contempt for your arrogance, and in pity for your stupidity.

Why make yourself a gazing stock for the simple of this world to make merry over? Why make yourself so much toil, labor, trouble, sorrow, and vexation of spirit, unnecessarily? Why spend your days amid clouds, storms, darkness, and tempest, when they might and should be spent beneath a cloudless sky, in a calm and heavenly atmosphere, a light and joyous tranquility? Why spend your nights mid visions of trouble and sorrow, tossing to and fro in unquiet sleep and unrest, disturbed with dismal and distempered dreams of borrowed trouble and self-imagined forebodings of evil; when you should and might commit all your ways and yourself into the hands of the Lord, whose angels encamp round about them that trust in him; and with peace of mind, like deep waters, fall into a gentle, quiet, undisturbed, refreshing slumber, sleep-enfolded in the arms of love, mercy and goodness; until exhausted nature, replenished from the fountain of repose, shall no longer demand forgetfulness; and the joyous light of morn, dancing on your eyelids, shall wake thee to gladness, usefulness, and duty?

Alas! alas! how you do yourself wrong! how you wrong the cross of Christ, and how you wrong all those who bear that cross in honor, not finding his commandments grievous, but altogether lovely and pleasureable.

Now stop, my brother, my sister; let me help you. Get down here, on your knees, low, low; lower still, seven times lower; clear down here in this deep valley of humiliation; away from the pride of the world, the pride of the flesh, and the pride of life, where none but the "all-seeing eye" can reach; where nothing but the still, small voice can come; and let us commune together. There, now; let me take one end of that heavy cross; my sympathy will carry at least one half of it; now rest the other end of it on the shoulder of that stranger bending near you to receive it, and "stand from under." O, what a load! how tired, exhausted, wayworn and weary you look! and no wonder; only look at this transverse! Why, it is of itself more than a score times heavier than the main shaft; and no marvel. What is this title in great iron letters, leaded into it? S-e-l-f W-i-l-l! Self-will! And then see! why, here is hatred, variance, and emulation, too; with wrath, strife, sedition, heresy, envy, evil-surmising, covetousness, greed, carnal propensity, and abomination! O, my conscience! how did you ever come thus far with such a sin-log of evil on your back? This will never do. You can never get out of this valley again with that lumber on your shoulder. Here, take this "sword of the Spirit" and hew it off. There, now, that's it; bury it here; let the waters of oblivion cover it. Now take up that straight, light shaft. What a difference! Now you can travel and not be weary, run and not faint, lift up your voice like a trumpet, cry aloud and shout for joy, clap your hands and be glad; for this that you now endure is not your own, but the ever blessed will of God, your heavenly Father.

Olena, O. G. W. Stetson.

THINK FOR YOURSELF.

By J. C. Ryle, B. A., Rector of Helmingham, Suffolk.

There is great need in the present day for reminding men that God expects them to prove all things by the Bible, and to think for themselves. Give me your attention while I try to set before you the right, duty and necessity of private judgment.

When I say the right of private judgment, I mean that every individual christian has a right to judge for himself by the word of God, whether that which is put before him as religious truth, is God's truth, or is not.

When I say the duty of private judgment, I mean that God requires every christian man to use the right of which I have just spoken; to compare man's words and man's writings with God's revelation, and to make sure that he is not deluded and taken in by false teaching.

And when I say the necessity of private judgment, I mean this,—that it is absolutely needful for every christian who loves his soul, and would not be deceived, to exercise that right, and discharge that duty to which I have referred; seeing that the neglect of private judgment has always been the cause of immense evils in the church of Christ.

The principle of private judgment is this: "You are to prove all things by the word of God: all ministers, all teaching, all preaching, all doctrines, all sermons, all writings, all opinions, all practices. Measure all by the measure of the Bible. Compare all with the standard of the Bible. Weigh all in the balances of the Bible. Examine all by the light of the Bible. Test all in the crucible of the Bible. That which can abide the fire of the Bible, receive, hold, believe and obey. That which cannot abide the fire of the Bible, reject, refuse, repudiate and cast away."

This is the right you are to exercise if you love your soul. You are not to believe things in religion merely because they are said by Popes or Cardinals, by Bishops or Priests, by Presbyters or Deacons, by Churches, Councils or Synods, by Fathers, Puritans or Reformers. You are not to argue, "Such and such things must be true, because these men say so." You are not to do so. You are to prove all things by the word of God.

I know such doctrine sounds shocking in some men's ears. But I write it down advisedly, and believe it cannot be disproved. I want to encourage no man in ignorant presumption or ignorant contempt. I praise not the man who seldom reads his Bible, and yet sets himself up to pick holes in his minister's sermons. I praise not the man who knows nothing but a few texts in the New Testament, and yet undertakes to settle questions in divinity which have puzzled God's wisest children. But still I hold with Bishop Bilson (A. D. 1575), that "All hearers have both liberty to discern and a charge to beware seducers; and woe to them that do it not." And I say with Bishop Davenant, (A. D. 1627), "We are not to believe all who undertake to teach in the church, but must take care and weigh with serious examination, whether their doctrine be sound or not."

Reader, men may dislike the doctrine of private judgment, but there is no doubt that it is continually taught in the word of God.

This is the principle laid down in the eighth chapter of Isaiah, 19th verse. These words were written, remember, at a time when there were men upon earth who had direct revelations from God. Yet what does Isaiah say? "When they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards, that peep and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? to the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." If this be not private judgment, what is?

This again is the principle laid down by our Lord Jesus Christ in the sermon on the Mount. Remember what he says: "Beware of false prophets which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits." (Matt. 7: 15). How is it possible that men shall know these false prophets, except they exercise their private judgment as to what their fruits are.

This is the practice you find commended in the Bereans, in the Acts of the Apostles. They did not take the Apostle Paul's word for granted, when he came to preach to them. You are told that they "searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so;" and "therefore," it is said, many of them believed. (Acts 17: 11, 12). What was this again but private judgment?

This is the spirit of the advice given in 1 Cor. 10: 15; "I speak as unto wise men; judge ye what I say;" and in Col. 2: 18; "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit;" and in 1 Thess. 5: 21; "Prove all things;" and in 1 John 4: 1; "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God;" and in 2 John 10; "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house." If these passages do not recommend the use of private judgment, I do know not what words mean.

Reader, whatever men may say against private judgment, it cannot be neglected without immense danger to your soul. You may not like it, but you never know what you may come to if you refuse to use it. No man can say into what depths of false doctrine you may be drawn if you will not do what God requires of you, and "prove all things."

Suppose that in fear of private judgment, you resolve to believe whatever the church believes. Where is your security against error? The church is not infallible. . . . There was a time, before the Reformation, when the darkness over the face of Europe was a darkness that might be felt. The particular branches of the church are not infallible. Any one of them may err. Many of them have fallen foully, or have been swept away. Where is the church of Ephesus at this day? Where the church of Sardis at the present time? Where the church of Hippo in Africa? Where the church of Carthage? They are all gone! Not a vestige of any of them is left. Will you then be content to err, merely because the church errs? Will your company be any excuse for your error? Will your erring in company with the church remove your responsibility for your own soul? O! reader, it were surely a thousand times better for a man to stand alone and be saved, than to err in company with the church and be lost.

But suppose that, to cut matters short, you resolve to believe whatever your minister believes. Once more I ask, Where is your safety? Where is your security? Ministers are not infallible any more than churches. All of them have not the Spirit of God. The very best of them are only men. Call us bishops, priests, deacons, or whatever names you please, we are all earthen vessels. I speak not merely of Popes who have promulgated awful superstitions, and led abominable lives. I would rather point to the very best of Protestants, and say, "Beware of looking upon them as infallbile—beware of thinking of any man, (whoever that man may be), that he cannot err." Luther held consubstantiation; that was a mighty error. Calvin, the Geneva reformer, advised the burning of Servetus; that was a mighty error. Cranmer and Ridley urged the putting of Hooper into prison, because of some [illegible]ling dispute about vestments; that was a mighty error. Whitgift persecuted the Puritans; that was a mighty error. Wesley and Toplady, in the last century, quarreled fiercely about Calvinism; that was a mighty error. All these things are warnings, if you will only take them. All say, "Cease ye from man." All show us that if a man's religion hangs on ministers, whoever they may be, and not on the word of God, it hangs on a broken reed. Never make ministers Popes. Follow us so far as we follow Christ, but not a hair's-breadth farther. Believe whatever we can show you out of the Bible, but do not believe a single word more. Neglect the duty of private judgment, and you may find, to your cost, the truth of what Whitby says: "The best of overseers do sometimes make oversights."

Reader, I warn you not to be moved by the specious argument, that it is humility to disallow private judgment; that it is humility to have no opinion of your own; that it is the part of a true christian not to think for himself!

I tell you that such humility is a false humility. Call it rather laziness. Call it rather sloth. It makes a man strip himself of all his responsibility, and throw the whole burden of his soul into the hands of the minister and the church. It gives a man a mere vicarious religion, a religion by which he places his conscience and all his spiritual concerns under the care of others. He need not trouble himself! He need no longer think for himself. He has embarked in a safe ship, and placed his soul under a safe pilot, and will get to heaven! Oh! beware of supposing that this deserves the name of humility. It is refusing to exercise the gift that God has given you. It is refusing to employ the sword of the Spirit which God has forged for the use of your hand. Blessed be God! our forefathers did not act upon such principles. Had they done so, we should never have had the Reformation. Had they done so, we might have been bowing down to the image of the Virgin Mary at this moment, or praying to the spirits of departed saints, or having a service performed in Latin. From such humility may the good Lord ever deliver you!

Reader, as long as you live, resolve that you will read for yourself, think for yourself, judge of the Bible for yourself, in the great matters of your soul. Have an opinion of your own. Never be ashamed of saying, "I think that this is right, because I find it in the Bible," and "I think that this is wrong, because I do not find it in the Bible."

As long as you live beware of the blindfold system, which many commend in the present day—the system of following a leader, and having no opinion of our own—the system which practically says, "Only keep your church, only receive the sacraments, only believe what the ordained ministers who are set over you tell you, and then all shall be well." I warn you that this will not do. I warn you that if you are content with this kind of religion, you are perilling your . . . soul. Let the Bible, and not any church upon earth, or any minister upon earth, be your rule of faith.

And above all, as long as you live, look forward to the great day of judgment. Think of the solemn account which every one of us shall have to give in that day before the judgment seat of Christ. We shall not be judged by churches. We shall not be judged by whole congregations. We shall be judged individually, each by himself. What shall it profit you or me in that day to say, "Lord, Lord, I believed everything the church told me. I received and believed everything ordained ministers set before me. I thought that whatever the church and the ministers said must be right?" What shall it profit us to say this, if we have held some deadly error? Oh! reader, if you refuse to exercise your private judgment, think of that awful day and beware. Take my advice this day. Read your Bible regularly. Prove all things by the Bible. Think for yourself.

☞ Mankind should live together as one great brotherhood, each striving to do his share of life's labor for the mutual benefit of all, without the least regard to dollars and cents, only as a means of exchange, until a better system is instituted, which must ere long be ushered into existence.

☞ The happiness a man derives from money is in proportion to his liberality. A poor man who thinks he can afford to give his mite, feels richer than the miser who will not give any thing.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

The following was sent for insertion in our paper, and will well pay one for a careful reading. We suppose it was taken from some paper of the Christian denomination.—ED.

OUR POSITION AND DOCTRINE.

We call ouselves christians, not any thing more,
No titles succeeding, or going before;
We thing it most natural, it leads to no strife,
For Christ is our husband, and we the Lamb's wife.

We give not the glory to Cephus or Paul,
Appollos or James, for Christ is our all.
No Wesley or Luther, no Calvin or Fox,
We claim as a leader, foundation or Rock.

No human invention of platform or creed,
We take as a standard and sacredly heed;
Our creed is the Bible, the Spirit our guide,
All christians our brethren—a truth undenied.

The doctrine we teach, and have from our youth,
Is the doctrine of Reason, Revelation and Truth;
Unmixed with traditions and the dogmas of men,
As pure as the morning, and clear as the sun.

We talk of no three all mysteriously one,
Nor think that our Savior's both Father and Son;
But believe in one God, and only in one,
And one Mediator between God and man.

The teaching of Jesus, the example he set,
The miracles wrought, the blood and the sweat;
His sufferings and death, as he bore the great load,
Was the atonement he made to bring us to God.

We teach that the church of Messiah is one,
United in spirit like the Father and Son;
That party distinctions forever should cease,
And saints all unite as dear children of peace.

We advocate liberty of conscience throughout,
Believe in a free interchanging of speech;
Are liberal in sentiment, feeling and thought,
Designing to practice the doctrine we preach.

Although we are liberal in thought and in deed,
And mean to be free from bigotry's chain;
The law of the spirit of life we will heed,
Be practical christians without and within.

The life is what constitutes christians with us,
Externals are trifling when with it compared;
The crown that we seek lies under the cross,
The faithful alone for heaven's prepared.

We boast not of members, of titles or fame,
Nor join with the world in their envy and strife;
With the learned and the great we scarce have a name,
Yet rejoice it is written in the Lamb's Book of Life.

We make no pretentions to smoothness of speech,
Scholastic divinity by us is abhorred;
The preaching we offer is not out of reach,
But simple and easy, the word of the Lord.

MICHAEL—WHO IS HE? Dan. 12: 1.

Various are the views entertained by different religionists respecting the personage denominated Michael. But among the more critical class, those who have given the subject a careful examination, there seems to be quite a harmony of opinion.

That he is a person who will accomplish wonders is evident, both from the prophecy, which declares he shall stand up,—that is, reign,—and the events with which he is associated, or that are produced by, or in conjunction with, his standing up; and also of the import of the term as given by distinguished Hebrew scholars. In connection with his standing up, there is to "be a time of trouble," the magnitude of which is "such as never was since there was a nation," and the deliverance of Daniel's people, embracing all those who are "written in the book," and the anastasis of the dead; "some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt"; and the shining forth of the wise in the kingdom, etc., which will bring to a terminus the present mortal economy, and inaugurate a state of things more grand and glorious, which will endure eternally.

From the character of the events which are produced by his standing up, we can draw an inference which leads us to conclude who he is; and viewing the subject from this standpoint; viz., from his work, it is clearly seen that he is none other than the Lord Jesus Christ, the anointed One.

Albert Barnes, in his Notes on the book of Daniel, says the proper meaning of this name is—"Who as God, and is a name given undoubtedly from some resemblance to God." Dr. Adam Clarke also translates the term—"He who as God shall stand up," etc. Prof. Stuart renders it about the same. He says, "Who as God, or a guardian angel, shall stand up." Who is more like God than his Son? Can a being be more than the express image of another? Paul, when addressing the Hebrews, says Christ is the "express image" of his Father's "person." If it is a fair expression of the Hebrew to say, he "who as God," or like God, shall stand up; then it must be obvious to all that Christ is the one referred to; for no one can be more like God than Christ, both in a moral and physical sense. Here, in Dan. 12: 1, he is called "the great Prince," which appellation is one of the titles by which Jesus is called. Also in Dan. 8: 25, he is called "the Prince of princes," against whom a certain power is to stand up. In Isa. 9: 6, where Christ is mentioned, he is denominated "the Prince of peace." Also in Acts 3: 15, he is called "the Prince of life." In Dan. 9: 25, we read, "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks," etc.

An argument corroborative of the above is found in the New Testament, where Jude speaks (in the 9th verse of his epistle) of Michael, in conjunction with the archangel,—"Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil . . . about the body of Moses," etc. Here the terms "Michael" and "archangel" are used signifying one and the same being; and as archangel is defined to be one who is Lord over angels, and as Christ evidently sustains that relation to the angels, he is undoubtedly the personage to whom Jude in his epistle refers.

Upon the two texts in which the term archangel occurs, Bishop Horsely very appropriately remarks:—"One of the two passages is in the first epistle to the Thessalonians, where the apostle, among the circumstances of the pomp of our Lord's descent from heaven to the final judgment, mentions the voice of the archangel; the other passage is in the epistle of St. Jude, where the title of archangel is coupled with the name of Michael. This passage is so remarkably obscure that I shall not attempt to draw any conclusion from it but this which manifestly follows, be the particular sense of the passage what it may; since this is one of the two texts in which alone the word archangel is found in the whole Bible; since in this one only the title archangel is coupled with any name; and since the name with which it is coupled is Michael, it follows undeniably the archangel Michael is the only archangel of whom we know anything from holy writ. It cannot be proved from holy writ, and if not from holy writ it cannot be at all, that any archangel exists but the one archangel Michael, and this one archangel Michael is unquestionably the Michael of the book of Daniel. From all this it is evident that Michael is a name for our Lord himself, in his particular character of the champion of his faithful people, against the violence of the apostate faction and the wiles of the devil. To this opinion there is nothing unreconcilable."

With the above facts before you, we submit the subject for your candid consideration, dear reader. Other important questions come up in this connection, such as the following: What is meant by the phrase "stand up"? and, When will Michael stand up? etc. These are questions of great moment, especially the last one; and an attempt to answer it, as to definiteness, should be very carefully done. May the Lord guide us into truth, and preserve us unto his kingdom.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT SHALL WE DO FOR THE FREEDMEN!

No grander, nobler work, was ever undertaken by the Christian church, than that which is now being done, in American Christendom, for the mental, moral and religious elevation of four million freedmen south, whose shackles God has now broken forever.

A bloody and wicked rebellion, begun and carried on for the interest of Slavery, is crushed; and now, where Slavery tyrannized and trampled, Freedom reigns, to raise and bless. In all that terrible four years' struggle, the hand of an overruling Providence was plainly visible,—bringing good out of evil, and making the wrath of man to praise him. The long, patient, and agonizing cry of the wronged and down-trodden slave for deliverance, which for so many years had gone up into the ears of God, he has at last heard and answered.

The struggle is ended; and the will and purpose of God, which he has wrought out from it, is accomplished,—the emancipation of a race from a worse than Egyptian bondage, and the opening to the church of a field for educational and missionary labor, such as, for extent and promise, the world never saw before, and the like of which the church has never before been called upon to cultivate.

In all this, we recognize a distinct call from God, upon his people of all names and of whatever faith, for special effort, in behalf of the race delivered, to carry on the work which He has begun. And, in all this, we see the directing finger of God, pointing south, to fields now open to the sower and the reaper, and hear his voice crying loudly to the American church,—"Occupy!"

The field is large, the harvest great, and there is an earnest call for laborers. Missionaries and teachers are wanted, who will give their whole mind and heart to the work. Hundreds have gone, hundreds are going, and there is room for hundreds and thousands more. The demand is great. Imploringly, Western Ethiopia stretches forth her hands to God; and, from the Atlantic coast to the Great River, from the Ohio to the Gulf, four million voices cry to God's people north,—"Come over and help us!"

In this grand and glorious work every christian, every church and denomination, of whatever name, has or ought to have something to do. And this work, almost every other denomination is doing, and doing nobly and well. If we, as a people, and as individuals, have so long slumbered, unconscious of our duty, and deaf to the calls of Providence, while others, with greater promptness and zeal, have been doing faithfully what God has given them to do, it is surely time for us to AWAKE, and inquire if he has not, in this direction, a work also for us to do; and, if so, go about it at once, and with so much the more promptitude and energy as we see the Great Day of the world's doom approaching.

From the dark and dismal grave of Slavery, the voice of God has called a dead race to a social, civil and political resurrection; and, Lazarus-like, they have "come forth" to a new life; but, yet "bound hand and foot with the grave-clothes" of their former degradation, and their faces still bound about with the napkin of ignorance, the Master turns now to his people, and says,—"Loose them, and let them go!" Release them from the disabilities of their former condition; remove from their eyes the bandages of moral and religious darkness and ignorance, and let them go forth hereafter enlightened freemen in Christ Jesus. God has done his work; we are now to do ours. A race is to be elevated, educated, christianized. A nation, born in a day, is to be made fit for the kingdom of heaven,—ready to hail, with joyful acclamations, the coming of the Great Emancipator.

The work already done in their behalf, by the various Mission and Freedmen's Aid Societies, and by Christian denominations of almost every name, is great; the results are cheering, and full of hope. Efforts have been made in every direction for their material, mental and spiritual good. Men and women of very high character and ability, and of the highest culture, have left home, and society, and position, to labor there, amid privations and discomforts, for the enlightenment and salvation of a long despised and down-trodden race. Missions have been organized; free schools for the children, night schools for adults, and Sunday Schools for religious instruction, have been established, and are all now in successful operation.

Old and young are thirsting for knowledge. Such an avidity for instruction was never seen before. Their eagerness to learn is astonishing, and their progress wonderful. "Every where, in tent or hovel, in shop or kitchen, you will already see the well-thumbed primer or spelling-book; and often it is the grey head which is bent over the little book, and the eyes, dim with age and suffering, kindle with hope and enthusiasm, at every chance for a lesson."

Their great desire is to be able to read the Word of God; and their eagerness for this is all the greater, because it has been to them so long a prohibited and sealed book. Thank God! that seal is broken. But the seal of ignorance remains. That, too, will soon be removed; and then, as God wills, a free Bible, open to all, sealed to none.

How dense the ignorance South, few realize. In name, a Christian land; yet shrouded in almost heathen darkness. The mass of the white population South are but little higher in the scale of intelligence than the blacks. In 1861, while Massachusetts had less than 2000 white native adults who could neither read nor write, Virginia had more than 77,000. In 1850, Georgia had 41,000; and in 1854, including the youth between 8 and 20 years of age who could not read, there were in that State 150,000 whites without the rudiments of education; and over 380,000 colored Georgians, to teach whom to read was a crime, for which the culprit must suffer heavy punishment by the State laws.

What a field for educational and missionary labor! In a single State, in the most enlightened and christianized (?) nation on the globe, more than 500,000 souls (over half the entire population) rushing on to the judgment—unable to read the Word of God!

Ye who enjoy the blessings of freedom and enlightened Christianity, what a call is here upon you to send forth laborers, armed with primers, spelling-books, papers, Bibles, to cultivate a field so unfruitful, and yet so full of promise. No richer, riper, fuller harvest ever invited the reaper's sickle. Now that Slavery is dead, and Liberty reigns, nothing hinders. Who will send? Who will go?

Who will sacrifice ease and comfort, the enjoyments of home society, and the emoluments of office or business, for the sake of Christ, and the poor, despised, benighted bondmen, to save whom Christ died? Who will humble himself, to raise the low, and be at last with Christ exalted? Who will go bring the outcasts into the fold, instruct them in righteousness, and shine, by and by, as the stars for ever and ever?

God has his chosen ones among us, qualified and waiting, whom he will yet call to the work. Some who now read these lines, their hearts kindling with holy love and zeal, are all ready to cry out,—"I, Lord! Send me!"—and others, faithful stewards of the Lord's money, stand ready to respond,—"Here are the dollars! Go!"

Let us, then, in obedience to the call of God, do our part in the great work of regenerating a race and lifting them from their low estate to a higher manhood and a purer christianhood,—and wait for our reward when the Judge comes and the books are opened. And, as all great works are best carried forward through organized action, shall we not, at once, or as soon as may be, and for the more successful accomplishment of the object in view, establish Freedmen's Missions, and support them by generous and liberal contributions to a Freedmen's Mission Fund?

Every one who has a voice, or pen, or purse, has a duty to do in this matter. We shall not have long to work, at the longest, and there is no time to lose. What we do, let us do quickly, and well,—and we shall receive at last the Master's "Well done!" W. B. H.

For the World's Crisis.

MEMORY.

We can identify ourselves under great changes of body and mind, through the power of memory. The full grown man recollects when he was a child, and also remembers some of his childish tricks. There is a bodily change from the boy to the man. There is also a change in mind; for he looks upon his childish sports as foolishness and could not be induced to act them over again. So also in sleep; if it was not for the power of memory, on awaking from a sound sleep, we could not identify ourselves; it would seem to us a creation to life.

Sleep is the image of death, in this respect, that while we are in a sound sleep we are as the dead. As we identify ourselves on awaking from a sound sleep, so also shall we identify ourselves on awakening at the resurrection; though we lay down our poor frail body and rise in the likeness of Christ's glorious body, we shall be able to identify ourselves, and rejoice that we have come up out of many tribulations, having our robes washed white in the blood of the Lamb.

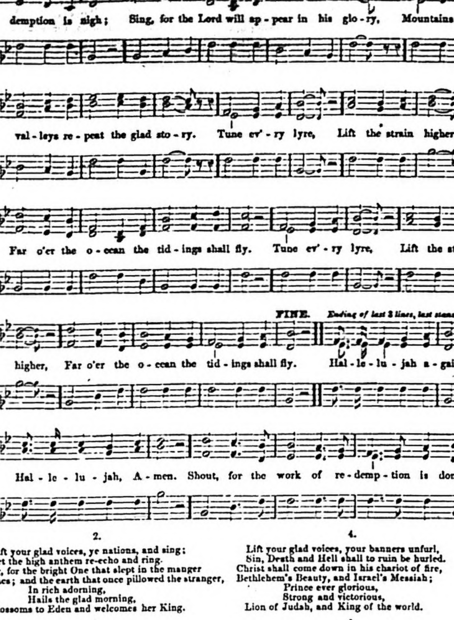
GLAD VOICES.

With Spirit. Words by D. T. TAYLOR.—Music by L. REIMER.



2.
Lift your glad voices, ye nations, and sing;
Let the high anthem re-echo and ring.
Sing, for the bright One that slept in the manger
Comes; and the earth that once pillowed the stranger,
In rich adorning,
Hails the glad morning,
Blossoms to Eden and welcomes her King.

3.
Lift your glad voices, He conquered the grave,
Jesus, Immanuel, almighty to save.
Shout to the tyrant, "Thy chains are all broken";
Sing, for the voice of Jehovah hath spoken.
Open the portal,
Ransomed, immortal;
Life shall endure with Eternity's wave.

4.
Lift your glad voices, your banners unfurl,
Sin, Death and Hell shall to ruin be hurled.
Christ shall come down in his chariot of fire,
Bethlehem's Beauty, and Israel's Messiah;
Prince ever glorious,
Strong and victorious,
Lion of Judah, and King of the world.

5.
Lift your glad voices, He cometh again;
Sound out the tidings o'er earth and o'er main!
Sing, for the dark days of evil are ending;
Shout to the Bridegroom with angels descending!
Bride of Jehovah,
Welcome thy lover;
Sing, for He cometh, He cometh to reign.

6.
Lift your glad voices wide under the sun,
Sing of his power who the victory has won.
Strong is that arm that the strengthless defended,
Saved us from hell, and the warfare hath ended.
Hallelujah again;
Hallelujah, Amen!
Shout! for the work of Redemption is done.

"JESUS OF NAZERETH, THE KING OF THE JEWS."—Jno. 19: 19.

Such was the title written by Pilate in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, and placed over our Lord, fastened to the cross on which he was crucified, and we are thus led to contemplate, first,

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

This was composed of an upright or perpendicular shaft, having a transvere piece fastened to it at right angles. Allowing the upright to represent the "will of God," and the transverse the human will, and we discover that JESUS is to be KING by the will of the Father, and not by his own will, for the title was connected, not with the transverse, but with the upright. As saith the 2nd Ps. v. 6, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion." Hence also it is written in Jno. 5: 30, and 6: 38,—"I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father. . . . I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." "By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." Heb. 10: 10. In Rom. 8: 7, the apostle says, "The carnal mind (or will) is enmity against God"; i. e., it is across His will—diametrically opposed to it; constituting an antagonism with the divine will, "not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be"; therefore, it must be crucified, put to death, as in Rom. 6: 6,—"Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with (or by) him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin; for he that is dead is freed from sin."

"And he, bearing his cross, went forth."—Jno. 19: 17. "And as they came out" of the city (Matt. 27: 32), they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name; him they compelled "to bear his cross."

Take now the cross on your shoulder, without having first taken off the transverse piece, and what kind of a cross will you have? Instead of having "the cross of Christ," you will have your own cross; instead of having an easy yoke and a light burden, you will find a yoke that is galling, and a burden that is not bearable; because you have not learned of Christ. When Christ was "risen again," he had triumphed over the world, over the flesh, and over the devil. His will was crucified, his cross was ended, his burden was gone, his yoke was easy. He had wrought, not his own will, but the will of the Father. But pass on as you are; travel through this wilderness of sin with that cross on your shoulder, as you now have it, with its extended transverse arms, like the flukes of an anchor, catching in every tree, bush, bramble, thorn, thistle and brier; in every opposing principle and doctrine, every false notion and fashion that you may encounter; and a sweet, happy time you will have of it, will you not? Oh! how you will be tormented, teased, troubled, twisted, tossed, thrown to the right, thrown to the left, held in check, drawn backwards and thrust forward, buffeted and cast down, lifted up and abased; dissatisfied with yourself, and satisfied with no one, displeasing everybody and pleasing nobody. Oh! how you will be laughed at for your pains, derided for your folly, held in scorn and contempt for your arrogance, and in pity for your stupidity.

Why make yourself a gazing stock for the simple of this world to make merry over? Why make yourself so much toil, labor, trouble, sorrow, and vexation of spirit, unnecessarily? Why spend your days amid clouds, storms, darkness, and tempest, when they might and should be spent beneath a cloudless sky, in a calm and heavenly atmosphere, a light and joyous tranquility? Why spend your nights mid visions of trouble and sorrow, tossing to and fro in unquiet sleep and unrest, disturbed with dismal and distempered dreams of borrowed trouble and self-imagined forebodings of evil; when you should and might commit all your ways and yourself into the hands of the Lord, whose angels encamp round about them that trust in him; and with peace of mind, like deep waters, fall into a gentle, quiet, undisturbed, refreshing slumber, sleep-enfolded in the arms of love, mercy and goodness; until exhausted nature, replenished from the fountain of repose, shall no longer demand forgetfulness; and the joyous light of morn, dancing on your eyelids, shall wake thee to gladness, usefulness, and duty?

Alas! alas! how you do yourself wrong! how you wrong the cross of Christ, and how you wrong all those who bear that cross in honor, not finding his commandments grievous, but altogether lovely and pleasureable.

Now stop, my brother, my sister; let me help you. Get down here, on your knees, low, low; lower still; seven times lower; clear down here in this deep valley of humiliation; away from the pride of the world, the pride of the flesh, and the pride of life, where none but the "all-seeing eye" can reach; where nothing but the still, small voice can come; and let us commune together. There, now; let me take one end of that heavy cross; my sympathy will carry at least one half of it; now rest the other end of it on the shoulder of that stranger bending near you to receive it, and "stand from under." O, what a load! how tired, exhausted, wayworn and weary you look! and no wonder; only look at this transverse! Why, it is of itself more than a score times heavier than the main shaft; and no marvel. What is this title in great iron letters, leaded into it? S-E-L-F W-I-L-L! SELF-WILL! And then see! why, here is hatred, variance, and emulation, too; with wrath, strife, sedition, heresy, envy, evil-surmising, covetousness, greed, carnal propensity, and abomination! O, my conscience! how did you ever come thus far with such a sin-log of evil on your back? This will never do. You can never get out of this valley again with that lumber on your shoulder. Here, take this "sword of the Spirit" and hew it off. There, now, that's it; bury it here; let the waters of oblivion cover it. Now take up that straight, light shaft. What a difference! Now you can travel and not be weary, run and not faint, lift up your voice like a trumpet, cry aloud and shout for joy, clap your hands and be glad; for this that you now endure is not your own, but the ever blessed will of God, your heavenly Father.

Olena, O. G. W. STETSON.

THINK FOR YOURSELF.

By J. C. RYLE, B. A., Rector of Helmingham, Suffolk.

There is great need in the present day for reminding men that God expects them to prove all things by the Bible, and to think for themselves. Give me your attention while I try to set before you the right, duty and necessity of private judgment.

When I say the right of private judgment, I mean that every individual christian has a right to judge for himself by the word of God, whether that which is put before him as religious truth, is God's truth, or is not.

When I say the duty of private judgment, I mean that God requires every christian man to use the right of which I have just spoken; to compare man's words and man's writings with God's revelation, and to make sure that he is not deluded and taken in by false teaching.

And when I say the necessity of private judgment, I mean this,—that it is absolutely needful for every christian who loves his soul, and would not be deceived, to exercise that right, and discharge that duty to which I have referred; seeing that the neglect of private judgment has always been the cause of immense evils in the church of Christ.

The principle of private judgment is this: "You are to prove all things by the word of God: all ministers, all teaching, all preaching, all doctrines, all sermons, all writings, all opinions, all practices. Measure all by the measure of the Bible. Compare all with the standard of the Bible. Weigh all in the balances of the Bible. Examine all by the light of the Bible. Test all in the crucible of the Bible. That which can abide the fire of the Bible, receive, hold, believe and obey. That which cannot abide the fire of the Bible, reject, refuse, repudiate and cast away."

This is the right you are to exercise if you love your soul. You are not to believe things in religion merely because they are said by Popes or Cardinals, by Bishops or Priests, by Presbyters or Deacons, by Churches, Councils or Synods, by Fathers, Puritans or Reformers. You are not to argue, "Such and such things must be true, because these men say so." You are not to do so. You are to prove all things by the word of God.

I know such doctrine sounds shocking in some men's ears. But I write it down advisedly, and believe it cannot be disproved. I want to encourage no man in ignorant presumption or ignorant contempt. I praise not the man who seldom reads his Bible, and yet sets himself up to pick holes in his minister's sermons. I praise not the man who knows nothing but a few texts in the New Testament, and yet undertakes to settle questions in divinity which have puzzled God's wisest children. But still I hold with Bishop Bilson (A. D. 1575), that "All hearers have both liberty to discern and a charge to beware seducers; and woe to them that do it not." And I say with Bishop Davenant, (A. D. 1627), "We are not to believe all who undertake to teach in the church, but must take care and weigh with serious examination, whether their doctrine be sound or not."

Reader, men may dislike the doctrine of private judgment, but there is no doubt that it is continually taught in the word of God.

This is the principle laid down in the eighth chapter of Isaiah, 19th verse. These words were written, remember, at a time when there were men upon earth who had direct revelations from God. Yet what does Isaiah say? "When they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards, that peep and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? to the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." If this be not private judgment, what is?

This again is the principle laid down by our Lord Jesus Christ in the sermon on the Mount. Remember what he says: "Beware of false prophets which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits." (Matt. 7: 15). How is it possible that men shall know these false prophets, except they exercise their private judgment as to what their fruits are.

This is the practice you find commended in the Bereans, in the Acts of the Apostles, They did not take the Apostle Paul's word for granted, when he came to preach to them. You are told that they "searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so;" and "therefore," it is said, many of them believed. (Acts 17: 11, 12). What was this again but private judgment?

This is the spirit of the advice given in 1 Cor. 10: 15; "I speak as unto wise men; judge ye what I say;" and in Col. 2: 18; "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit;" and in 1 Thess. 5: 21; "Prove all things;" and in 1 John 4: 1; "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God;" and in 2 John 10; "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house." If these passages do not recommend the use of private judgment, I do know not what words mean.

Reader, whatever men may say against private judgment, it cannot be neglected without immense danger to your soul. You may not like it, but you never know what you may come to if you refuse to use it. No man can say into what depths of false doctrine you may be drawn if you will not do what God requires of you, and "prove all things."

Suppose that in fear of private judgment, you resolve to believe whatever the church believes. Where is your security against error? The church is not infallible. . . . There was a time, before the Reformation, when the darkness over the face of Europe was a darkness that might be felt. The particular branches of the church are not infallible. Any one of them may err. Many of them have fallen foully, or have been swept away. Where is the church of Ephesus at this day? Where the church of Sardis at the present time? Where the church of Hippo in Africa? Where the church of Carthage? They are all gone! Not a vestige of any of them is left. Will you then be content to err, merely because the church errs? Will your company be any excuse for your error? Will your erring in company with the church remove your responsibility for your own soul? O! reader, it were surely a thousand times better for a man to stand alone and be saved, than to err in company with the church and be lost.

But suppose that, to cut matters short, you resolve to believe whatever your minister believes. Once more I ask, Where is your safety? Where is your security? Ministers are not infallible any more than churches. All of them have not the Spirit of God. The very best of them are only men. Call us bishops, priests, deacons, or whatever names you please, we are all earthen vessels. I speak not merely of Popes who have promulgated awful superstitions, and led abominable lives. I would rather point to the very best of Protestants, and say, "Beware of looking upon them as infallbile—beware of thinking of any man, (whoever that man may be), that he cannot err." Luther held consubstantiation; that was a mighty error. Calvin, the Geneva reformer, advised the burning of Servetus; that was a mighty error. Cranmer and Ridley urged the putting of Hooper into prison, because of some [illegible] dispute about vestments; that was a mighty error. Whitgift persecuted the Puritans; that was a mighty error. Wesley and Toplady, in the last century, quarreled fiercely about Calvinism; that was a mighty error. All these things are warnings, if you will only take them. All say, "Cease ye from man." All show us that if a man's religion hangs on ministers, whoever they may be, and not on the word of God, it hangs on a broken reed. Never make ministers Popes. Follow us so far as we follow Christ, but not a hair's-breadth farther. Believe whatever we can show you out of the Bible, but do not believe a single word more. Neglect the duty of private judgment, and you may find, to your cost, the truth of what Whitby says: "The best of overseers do sometimes make oversights."

Reader, I warn you not to be moved by the specious argument, that it is humility to disallow private judgment; that it is humility to have no opinion of your own; that it is the part of a true christian not to think for himself!

I tell you that such humility is a false humility. Call it rather laziness. Call it rather sloth. It makes a man strip himself of all his responsibility, and throw the whole burden of his soul into the hands of the minister and the church. It gives a man a mere vicarious religion, a religion by which he places his conscience and all his spiritual concerns under the care of others. He need not trouble himself! He need no longer think for himself. He has embarked in a safe ship, and placed his soul under a safe pilot, and will get to heaven! Oh! beware of supposing that this deserves the name of humility. It is refusing to exercise the gift that God has given you. It is refusing to employ the sword of the Spirit which God has forged for the use of your hand. Blessed be God! our forefathers did not act upon such principles. Had they done so, we should never have had the Reformation. Had they done so, we might have been bowing down to the image of the Virgin Mary at this moment, or praying to the spirits of departed saints, or having a service performed in Latin. From such humility may the good Lord ever deliver you!

Reader, as long as you live, resolve that you will read for yourself, think for yourself, judge of the Bible for yourself, in the great matters of your soul. Have an opinion of your own. Never be ashamed of saying, "I think that this is right, because I find it in the Bible," and "I think that this is wrong, because I do not find it in the Bible."

As long as you live beware of the blindfold system, which many commend in the present day—the system of following a leader, and having no opinion of our own—the system which practically says, "Only keep your church, only receive the sacraments, only believe what the ordained ministers who are set over you tell you, and then all shall be well." I warn you that this will not do. I warn you that if you are content with this kind of religion, you are perilling your . . . soul. Let the Bible, and not any church upon earth, or any minister upon earth, be your rule of faith.

And above all, as long as you live, look forward to the great day of judgment. Think of the solemn account which every one of us shall have to give in that day before the judgment seat of Christ. We shall not be judged by churches. We shall not be judged by whole congregations. We shall be judged individually, each by himself. What shall it profit you or me in that day to say, "Lord, Lord, I believed everything the church told me. I received and believed everything ordained ministers set before me. I thought that whatever the church and the ministers said must be right?" What shall it profit us to say this, if we have held some deadly error? Oh! reader, if you refuse to exercise your private judgment, think of that awful day and beware. Take my advice this day. Read your Bible regularly. Prove all things by the Bible. Think for yourself.

☞ Mankind should live together as one great brotherhood, each striving to do his share of life's labor for the mutual benefit of all, without the least regard to dollars and cents, only as a means of exchange, until a better system is instituted, which must ere long be ushered into existence.

☞ The happiness a man derives from money is in proportion to his liberality. A poor man who thinks he can afford to give his mite, feels richer than the miser who will not give any thing.

DEFINITE TIME.

This subject seems to create deep and strong feelings. Some scorn, some ridicule, others reason and bring objections; while others receive it with delight, and pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." It makes but little difference who proclaims the time of the coming kingdom. All share in the common odium. If an illiterate man, without denominational position in the church, proclaims the time, he is set down as an ignoramus, or a fanatic. If the polished and learned Doctor in high standing in his church proclaims it, he also is reproached and ridiculed. The following extract from Dr. Cumming's sermon on 1867, as the probable time of the Lord's appearing, will be read with interest. It will show how a man in high standing is treated on account of his advocacy of the time.

"These are the data on which each can form his own conclusions. I do not venture to dogmatize,—I do not attempt to dictate,—I do not presume to decide. I have shown that the best and ablest christian students are all agreed that 1867 is an era fraught with gigantic issues,—that some think it is the commencement of the millennial rest; others think it is the destruction of all the errors whose roots are struck deep into our world, and the universal spread of the empire of the Prince of Peace. Then, if these things be so, we look at Europe at this moment with intense and awful interest. No one can reflect upon the last ten years without seeing that they have been ten years of unprecedented events in the history of mankind. No one can look upon Europe at this moment without feeling that it is scarcely a sleeping volcano: Russia coming from its snows; Germany aroused to its very heart; the proud and victorious Napoleon, so far alive to the cause of righteousness, and liberty, and peace; our own country employing all the genius of its statesmen, of every side and every party, to stave off the tides of war from touching our own peaceful shores;—and yet all things leading us to fear that we shall not finally (though for a season we may) escape the terrible conflict.

"But what does all this teach us now? Suppose I had proved to you, to demonstration, that 1867 was to close this present era. Some will say, O! then we had better not insure our lives; we had better not take leases; we had better do nothing; but fling every thing off, and let society go to ruin. I say, no. What is the Lord's command? 'Occupy till I come.' What is the condition of the people when he comes? 'Two women shall be grinding in the mill: the one shall be taken,' that is, one a christian, 'and the other left. What does that teach us? That our duties are determined by God's plain precepts; they are not to be modified by any of his prophecies, however clear. The prophecy I read for comfort; the precept I read for direction. And, therefore, when people say we act inconsistently,—as it was said not very long ago by caricaturists and others in the papers,—that, because I took the lease of a house, therefore I did not believe these conclusions, I answer that if I thought it would be for my interest or the advantage of my family, I would take a house for a hundred years' lease tomorrow. I have nothing to do with prophecy in determining my duties,—they are to be determined by God's precepts, and by common sense; and if I believed that 1867 were to end the present economy of things, I should have my hand equally busy in my work. I would bid the soldier appear in the ranks, the merchant in his counting-house, the senator in the parliament,—every man at his post; for the post of duty is always the place of safety before God, and in the sight of all mankind. But whilst our hands should be at duty, our hearts should be more than ever in heaven.

"Some people say, O, how shocking, how terrible, that the world is to end! Why, how shocking, how terrible, that you may die tomorrow! I might say, How shocking that the aged of sixty has only some fifteen years to live, on an average. Death, to the individual, is just as solemn as the close of this economy to the whole world; but there is nothing shocking in it. Our Savior does not so construe it; for what does he say? When ye see these things begin to come to pass, what! be terrified,—be alarmed,—resign your duties? No, no, no. The Bible is too rich in common sense: 'Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh.' And who can possibly regret the probable nearness of such a consummation? What will it be? The end of sin,—the emancipation of the oppressed,—the extinction of war,—the return of earth's ancient glory,—the restoration of all the blessedness we have lost,—a peace that passeth understanding; no more quarrels, no more misapprehensions, no more sins, no more sorrows. Instead of dreading the event of so glorious an epoch, with all our hearts we should pray, as from the heart I do, 'Come, Lord Jesus; yea, come quickly.'"—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

Bro. Grant:—It will be twenty-five years this fall since I took Father Miller by the hand, and introduced a series of agencies by which to spread the knowledge of the coming kingdom throughout the world. The events of this period have been wonderful, and interesting to the students of prophecy.

The first organized effort was in a conference held in Chardon St. Chapel, Oct. 14, 1840. I have thought for some time past, that the old Adventists, and those also, who have come into the faith in a later hour, would be interested in the celebration of our 25th Anniversary, with a historical discourse, and other appropriate exercises that would be calculated to stir up to united, and more earnest efforts for the salvation of men, and the preparation of a people for the Lord's speedy coming.

Could we not have such a meeting in Boston? Let all interested think of the matter; and I will be happy to hear from any who have an interest in the subject, or a word of counsel. We are now on the threshold of the promised land. Let us be of good cheer.

A CORRECTION.

I wish to correct one mistake in my experience. I profess to do to others as I would have them do by me. I find by talking with Eld. Eldridge, and examining the records, that the instrument drawn up was in form of a resolve, instead of a letter; therefore I cheerfully take back the statement that Eld. Eldridge was guilty of wilful prevarication.

I will also say that I never intended to say that the conference voted him in for the special purpose of turning me out. I meant just this, and nothing more; that in the time of their emergency, they voted him in, and he helped them out. Charles Stratton.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, May 30, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

SCATTER TRACTS.

Never has there been a period when there was such a good opportunity for scattering light by means or tracts, as the present time. The ground is all ready for the seed, and let us sow liberally, and we may expect an abundant harvest. Many of our Brn. and Srs. are doing nobly; but let every one lend a helping hand, from the widow who gives her "mites," to the person who gives hundreds of dollars. Money thus laid out will bring a richer income than it would if lent to banks on compound interest.

There is now a wide field opening in the South, among those who have never heard on the "blessed hope" we love so well. We have just sent some forty dollars' worth of tracts to that destitute portion. Sr. Jolliffe, of Philadelphia, is forming circulating libraries in the Southern and Middle States, and is thus spreading the light on the great truth of the Lord's speedy coming. We sent to her care, and she will see that they are disposed of in a judicious manner. We learn that the people south are reading on the subject of the Second Advent with great interest,—just as we did at the north some twenty years ago. The war has opened the way so that we can now send the glad tidings to the people in the Southern States. The poor slaves receive the light with great joy.

Many joyful reports are coming in from tracts already sent to different parts of the country. Let us sow more liberally, that we reap more bountifully.

BROOKFIELD, N. H.

Our meeting in Brookfield, N. H., May 28th, was one of much interest. Although the weather was rainy, we had the Town Hall crowded with an attentive audience. Some came fifteen miles. The truth is gaining ground in that section of country. Six were baptized, and were greatly blessed. They came out of the waters shouting the praises of the Lord. It was a good time, and tears of joy stood in the eyes of beholders. We found some true-hearted christians in this place, who are firmly resolved to be ready to welcome our coming King. They are alive in the service of the Lord, and feel like doing more for the welfare of our fellow men.

"GLAD VOICES."

It will be remembered that in No. 1 of the present volume of the Crisis, Mar. 21st, we published an interesting hymn from Bro. D. T. Taylor, with a request for a tune adapted to it. Several good ones have been sent, but we have given the preference to one composed by Bro. L. Reimer, of Philadelphia. It will be found, with the hymn, on the first page.

We purpose to have the tune and hymn printed on sheets, to accommodate those who wish for extra copies.

A MODEL OBITUARY.

We would call attention to the obituary notice of Sr. Esther Jones, on the opposite page, as a model for comprehensiveness and brevity. It is far more expressive than one filling a whole column, and will produce a more lasting impression upon the mind of the reader.—"She sleeps in Jesus."

"A PROMISE HARD TO KEEP."

The above heading stands over the first article, on the first page of the Herald of Life for May 24th, 1865. As the article relates to the Editor of the Crisis, our readers may be interested to read an extract from it of some length. It is from the pen of Bro. R. Wendell, relative to our late discussion, held in Boston, on the non-resurrection of the wicked. After the above heading, he says:—

"The Editor of the Crisis, by visiting Rabbi Noot, during the late discussion, to consult him on Daniel 12: 2, got himself into a really embarrassing predicament. He asked the Rabbi for exegetical 'bread,' from which the notion of the revival of the wicked dead might derive sustenance, but the learned Israelite gave him instead a 'stone' of the most indigestible kind. At that time, and even for some days afterwards, my brother seemed to think he had received veritable bread. Vain was the effort of the affirmative to undeceive him, and so the illusion clung to him long enough to find a record in the first of the two articles that have appeared in the Crisis in relation to the debate. There is reason, however, for believing that the negative got his eyes open before he had completed his second article. His zeal to connect the verb 'awake' with the 'shame and everlasting contempt' of the passage in Daniel, led him into a theological pitfall that will look deeper and deeper to him the more he explores it. And he will find—if he has not already found—that deliverance from his situation can only come from the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked. The alternative of either remaining in his present plight, or accepting the view just named, may be a disagreeable one, but there is no help for it. The case is very plain and simple, and too interesting to be kept from our readers. A statement of it will show, that a fact, which was a 'fish' in the hands of the affirmative, became, in those of the negative, a troublesome 'scorpion.' Dismissing the figures, let us look at the facts.

In the Crisis account of his interview with Dr. Noot, Bro. Grant—in reference to the belief of the Pharisees—says:—

"They believed in the resurrection 'of the just and unjust,' but not of the notoriously wicked. The information gathered from the Jew helped us to understand Paul's language in Acts 24: 15, better than ever before. This we will notice in due time."

It would appear from the foregoing, that, prior to the debate, Bro. G.'s understanding of Acts 24: 15 was not perfect. This is unquestionably true, and the admission of the fact is worth something. Now, then, what discoveries does his 'better' acquaintance with the passage comprehend? An analysis of his statement furnishes the desired answer to this question. 1. According to Bro. G., the Pharisees held to the resurrection of those termed the 'unjust' in Acts 24: 15. 2. They believed that the 'notoriously wicked' would not be raised. Here, then, Bro. G. stands squarely committed, by the remorseless logic of his own assertions, to the position that there will never be a resurrection of the 'notoriously wicked.' . . . Let him tell his readers, if he can, in what way his conference with 'the Jew' helped him to a 'better' comprehension than he previously had of 'Paul's language in Acts 24: 25.'

'A Promise Hard to Keep'—stands at the head of this article. Its import will now be explained. It will be seen that, in reference to his new light on 'Paul's language in Acts 24: 15,' Bro. Grant says—'This we will notice in due time.' Here is a promise to his readers, and it relates to what he designed to do in his article of the succeeding week, wherein he introduced the passage from Acts to show 'that the wicked would as certainly arise as the just.' But the promise was not kept. The due time arrived, and with it an editorial on 'The Discussion in Boston,' but with them the looked-for 'notice' did not come. Nor has it come yet. My conviction is, that the promise is one that cannot be fulfilled. . . . His omission to allude to the matter when the 'due time' came, justifies the inference that he discovered how unavailable the faith of the Pharisees would be for the purposes of his argument. He is perfectly excusable for not doing an impossible thing; but he is fairly bound, it seems to me, to withdraw a pledge which he finds himself unable to keep. It may be a little humiliating to do so, but what of that? The truth of God is ten thousand times more important than the concealment of our blunders can possibly be. If we always evince a cheerful readiness to confess our mistakes, one good at least will result from our having made them. This willingness to retreat when we are wrong, gives weight to our opinions when we are right."

R. W.

We are glad Bro. Wendell has called our attention to the promise we made in the Crisis relative to the fact, that the information we received from Dr. Noot helped us to understand Acts 24: 15, "better than ever before." The reason we did not notice the point, was because it was entirely forgotten in our subsequent report of the discussion, and did not come to mind till mentioned by Bro. Wendell. Our promise, we are now happy to fulfill; and instead of finding it "hard to keep," we find it directly the opposite,—very easy.

Previous to the time when we consulted Dr. Noot, who is a Jew, and holds to the same doctrine entertained by the Pharisees, on the subject of the resurrection, as he himself declared to us, we found an apparent difficulty in harmonizing Paul's statement in Acts 24; 15, with the following from Josephus: "The Pharisees . . . believe that souls have an immortal vigor in them, and that under the earth there will be rewards and punishments, according as they have lived virtuously or viciously in this life; and the latter are to be detained in everlasting prison, but that the former shall have power to revive and live again."—Josephus Ant. b. 18, c. 1, s. 3.

Acts 24: 15 reads as follows:—"And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." It will be seen that there is an apparent contradiction between Paul's statement and that of Josephus, which was all harmonized by the information we received from the modern Pharisee, Dr. Noot. Paul declares that he believed in the "resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." No one, we think, who has carefully read the New Testament Scriptures, would dispute for a moment that the "unjust" are the wicked, in distinction from the righteous, and embrace all of mankind who are not saved.

The difficulty in our mind was to see how the Pharisees could deny the resurrection of the wicked and yet "allow," as Paul says, "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." We turned to the commentary of Dr. Pearce on Acts 24: 15, and on the phrase "both of the just and unjust," found the following:—"This truth Paul had probably not learned till after his conversion; because he was a Pharisee, and the Pharisees believed that the just only would be raised."—Com. Vol. ii., p. 166. Dr. Noot informed us that the Pharisees believed that the "notoriously wicked" would not be raised," but those who had been only moderately wicked would have a resurrection. This fact cleared up the whole difficulty. Paul declared his faith in the resurrection of all mankind by saying he believed in the resurrection "both of the just and unjust," which includes all, both good and bad; and then shows them that they really admit the same thing when they "allow" the resurrection of the "unjust," although they deny that the "notoriously wicked" will ever be raised.

Jesus has taught us to "beware of the . . . doctrine of the Pharisees," as well as of the Saducees. Let us heed his admonition.

INSTRUCTION FROM THE SPIRITS.

The spirits say strange things through their mediums. Had the people been told twenty years since that such doctrines as are now taught by the demons would be believed by millions of people, many professors of religion, besides being adopted by scores of ministers, who were then, in the main, preaching the doctrines of the Bible, they would have been as unwilling to credit it as to believe that error is more valuable than truth. But now people seem ready to believe almost any thing, no matter how ridiculous and absurd it may be.

In the Banner of Light for April 27th, '65, we find some questions put to the spirits, and the answers returned, as follows:—

"Q. Do you teach that man is a part of God?

A. We certainly do.

Q. Are there any idiots that have not immortal souls?

A. As individualities, as distinct personal identities, they have not immortal souls, those who are in the spirit-world.

Q. What kind of souls do they possess?

A. Souls peculiar to themselves.

Q. If man is a part of God, is not God divided?

A. We do not so understand it. The hand is divided from the body, and yet it is a member of it.

Q. How is it with regard to prayer?

A. Prayer is simply an uprising of the faculties of the soul into a higher atmosphere, a more spiritual condition. You might as well pray to a planet, a flower, as an outside, separate intelligence. We only desire to produce a better condition of mind by prayer.

Q. Is not the creature distinct from the Creator?

A. No; the creature and the Creator are one and inseparable, and you cannot prove to the contrary."

It was seventeen years ago the 31st of last March since the first rap was made at Hydeville, near Rochester, N. Y. It is truly wonderful to see how Spiritualism has spread since that time. In a short time, if it continues to spread as it has done for the last ten years, it will be the prevailing system of religion, and also be connected with political power.

Another spirit was questioned, and the answers given in the Banner of April 22nd, 1865, as follows:—

Q. "In reality, is there any such thing as evil?

A. No. . . .

Q. It was said when Christ was crucified the saints arose with him: Was this true?

A. If you refer to a literal resurrection of the body, we should say that it would be impossible. Inasmuch as separation of body and spirit is one of the laws of human life, it would be an impossibility for such a thing to have occurred. There are a great many things said and recorded that are almost, if not entirely, untrue. Perhaps this is one of them.

Q. Then the Bible must be incorrect?

A. That is our opinion. If you have pinned your faith upon the Bible, you will soon find, sooner or later, that you have pinned it upon a form, and not a spirit, a dead body, and not a real life."

PARIAN CHRONICLE.

Bro. Grant:—Will you publish the Chronicle as far as Bro. Thurman has gone?

J. G. Smith.

The following is the part of the "Chronicle" referred to, before its correction by Dr. Hales, which should have been inserted at the beginning of Bro. Thurman's second article on the "Parian Chronicle," in the Crisis of April 25th, 1865, which will give all needed explanation:—

FIGHTING SOULS.

In past ages of the world, as well as at the present, when priests and generals have felt anxious to persuade men to fight and kill each other upon the battle-field, it has been frequently urged as a motive, that their souls would go to glory, if they would only give up their lives for their country, or their party. This was presented with much weight by Mahomet to his followers.

At the time Jerusalem was taken by the Romans, Titus addressed his soldiers as follows:—

"As for myself, I shall at present waive any commendation of those who die in war, and omit to speak of the immortality of those men who are slain in the midst of their martial bravery; yet cannot I forbear to imprecate upon those who are of a contrary disposition, that they may die in time of peace by some distemper or other, since their souls are condemned to the grave, together with their bodies. For what man of virtue is there who does not know that those souls which are severed from their fleshy bodies in battles by the sword, are received by the ether, that purest of elements, and joined to that company which are placed among the stars; that they become good demons and propitious heroes, and show themselves as such to their posterity afterward? While upon those souls that wear away in and with their distempered bodies, comes a subterranean night to dissolve them to nothing, and a deep oblivion to take away all the remembrance of them, and this, notwithstanding they be clean from all spots and defilements of this world; so that in this case, the soul at the same time comes to the utmost bounds of life, and of its body, and of its memorial also. But since fate hath determined that death is to come of necessity upon all men, a sword is a better instrument for that purpose than any disease whatsoever."

We hope to have a call from him again soon, and enjoy the benefit of his labors.

OUR CONVENTION.

Dear Sisters:—As there are but a few days more, till we start for this meeting of women, to arrange plans and bring about measures whereby we can help each other to do good, and labor more effectually in the vineyard of the Lord; therefore we feel that we all, who love Jesus and his soon coming, and the salvation of souls, need to pray expressly for this meeting.

Dear sisters, we shall go to this meeting without any strength of our own, depending entirely upon God to guide and direct the whole matter. Feeling as I do that this whole move is of God, I believe that good will come out of it, notwithstanding its opposing powers. I have not been surprised, but a little hurt, at some remarks of my brethren, and sisters too, the last few weeks in reference to our Convention. Brethren and sisters, I have something to say on the other side of the question, but shall reserve mine till I have more time. I don't want you to suppose for a moment that after I have stood the test of twenty-three years of battling for the glorious truth of the personal, speedy, and visible coming of my Lord, that I am afraid to stand the test in contending for the rights and privileges of my own sex, especially when I have the word of the Lord on my side. Truly, wo is me if I do not; and all I ask is the prayers of God's dear children, and I know that God will do just right. Praise his name!

Now sisters, remember the 7th of June, at Poultney, Vt., and come up in the strength of the Lord. I hope none of my sisters will feel neglected because I have not answered their letters, as it was impossible for me to do so with all my other labors. Your sister, looking for deliverance at the coming of Jesus.

A WORD FROM THE SICK BED.

For nearly two months I have been prostrated upon a bed of the most excruciating pain; suffering so much that life has at times looked of but little worth. In the long tedious nights, when my body has been so racked with pain that sleep has, as it were, departed from my eyes, and slumber from my eyelids, with one of old I have felt to say that I chose death rather than life. For six long weeks I have not been off my bed to have it made, and my disease is of that nature that, by being moved from one side of the bed to the other, to have it made, it causes me the most painful suffering.

The cause of my writing, when I am so weak and sick, is to let the dear friends of Jesus, who have written such good, heart-cheering epistles to me, know that they are not forgotten, if I do not answer them. O, no. You will never be forgotten by me. In weary hours of night, your letters, with their kind and gentle words, have been of great benefit to me. May God help you, one and all, who have so kindly helped me by your words of true comfort and heavenly consolation, to still continue to write to me, and help me bear the heavy trials and afflictions through which I am daily passing. No one can ever know what it is to be in constant pain until they have a trial of it. I have passed long days in such hard and cutting pain that it has seemed as if I must die.

No one can ever know what a comfort and consolation it then is to have good letters come from the dear friends of Jesus, full of love and pure christian sympathy. Dear ones in the Lord, continue to write to me in my deep and heavy affliction; and the good Lord will by and by reward you for it. Think of those, as you go out into the beautiful air daily, who are shut up as it were in prison, suffering with pain and deep distress, who can never enjoy that happiness again in this world; who see no one only as they come in to see them, and hear from no one only by their letters. Tears dim my eyes as I write, when I think that I could once walk forth into the beautiful air and inhale its fragrance, and could go to the house of God to worship, and mingle my voice in prayer and praise to my blessed Redeemer; but, alas! the scene is changed. I am now a poor, lonely orphan, and a cripple, and an invalid. Never more will my feet walk upon this earth. It is hard at times to think of it; but it is a living reality.

But, as I lie here in my little bed-room upon my bed, my heart rejoices at the thought of my blessed Savior's soon coming. It is so cheering to me in my loneliness. I sigh for home. I can from the depths of my heart pray, "Thy kingdom come"; gather thy weeping bride into the land of sweet rest. I long to lean my aching head upon my dear Savior's bosom, and know I am safe from fear and care, pain and distress. I am weary of tossing to and fro upon my bed of pain and languishing. Come, dear Savior, gather thy saints into the paradise of God. I am so weary and sad, I long for one hour free from pain.

And now, dear ones in Jesus, be good, watch and pray; the victory will soon be won. Pray for the sick and afflicted ones, and comfort them by your words of heavenly consolation. Write often. Think of them as they lie upon their beds of pain and deep distress, and think that if you have eased one weary sufferer by your kind words of true sympathy, what a reward awaits you when the Master comes. In much pain I have written to thank you for your kind letters, which have been to me like a sunbeam in the darkness. God bless you for the good you have done me. Still keep writing. The good Lord direct you in all things, is my prayer.

LITERAL INTERPRETATION.

NUMBER THREE.

Applied to Jno. 5: 28, 29.

We as a people profess to be "Literalists." But how strangely inconsistent many are who thus declare in favor of the literal interpretation. Some, in their ignorance, deny the use of any figures, except in allegory, or vision. Others, again, are "Literalists" on some subjects, while they are "Spiritualists" on other points. For instance, some will receive as literal those declarations relating to the state of the dead, etc., while they reject the idea of a personal devil, and the special influences of the Holy Spirit; teaching us that the account of Satan given throughout the Scriptures is merely a mention of the depravity of the human heart, or the Roman government; and that there is no Spirit outside of the "Word."

We could multiply thoughts upon this subject almost ad infinitum. The field is large. We cannot do the subject justice in these few short articles. Neither could we, if we had time to extend them. We felt so when we began; but we felt it our duty to say something. We now close our articles by an application of the literal interpretation to John 5: 28, 29, which reads as follows: "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

The following novel exposition of these verses was given to us some time ago. The writer first quotes verse 25, and says: "'The dead' Lazarus and others heard in the 'now is' hour or time; and all 'the dead saints will hear and live in the coming hour or time, when 'The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first.'

"It is generally admitted, especially by Adventists, that none but the righteous dead will be raised at the coming of Christ,—which conclusion is justified by his next expression, viz: 'And they that hear shall live'; clearly implying that all the dead will not hear the voice of the Son of God, which will awake and raise to life his children: they only will hear and live. And as a sufficient reason why they may strongly hope to live by the power of the Son of God, he says in verse 28, 'Marvel not at this:' for I have something more to announce of my power as the Son of man, or heir to David's throne, which I shall do after I have come in my glory, raised the righteous dead, and commenced my reign, or executing justice and judgment in the earth. In addition to these things, 'all that are in the graves,' etc.

"Mnœmeios, from which graves is translated, denotes sepulchres, tombs, secure places, where precious things are stored up and preserved. It does not signify 'the unseen, the invisible abode or mansion of the dead,' etc., which comes from the Greek word Hades. There is but one hades, but many mnœmeia. Hence they are different places. The first is the mansion (singular) of the literal dead; the latter are the many (plural) national or figurative tombs, in which the scattered tribes of Judah and Israel have long been nationally entombed. The first will not be questioned, and the latter is proved correct by the vision of the valley of dry bones in Ezek. 37: 1–14; Isa. 52: 1, 2; Isa. 27: 13; John 5: 28, 29; Luke 20: 36; Jno. 11: 24; Ezk. 21: 34–38.

"To say that 'the dead' in ver. 25, and 'all that are in the graves' in ver. 28 are the same class of persons, is tantamount to saying, I will raise all the dead! thus making the Son of God utter unmeaning tautology!"

To the first and last paragraphs we shall readily assent. We think that different classes are referred to in the 25th and 28th verses. And as the writer quoted has remarked, Lazarus and others heard and lived when Christ was here. But while it may be true that the righteous dead only will be raised at the coming of Christ, how is this conclusion justified by the expression, "And they that hear, shall live"? Does not that declaration refer to those who heard when Christ was here? Most certainly it does. Why, then, after virtually admitting this, apply it to the general resurrection? Why say that this expression clearly implies that only the righteous will be raised after Christ comes?

Again, it is said that hades signifies the abode of the literal dead; while mnœmeion signifies national or figurative graves, in which the tribes of Israel have long been entombed. That there is a difference between these two words we willingly admit. But it is not such as has been stated. Hades, signifying "the hidden, invisible," applies to all the dead, whether in the graves or not. Mnœmeion, signifying "a tomb, sepulchre," presented to our minds the locality of the dead. All the dead are in hades, but all are not in mnœmeiois. But because Christ used the latter term, does it follow that all the dead will not be raised? By no means. It was the custom of the Jews and other Eastern nations to bury their dead in caves, rocks, and other similar places. Abraham and his family were buried in Machpelah's cave. The grave of Lazarus was a cave. It was called mnœmeion. The grave of Christ in the rock was called mnœmeion. So that though the word itself does not include all the dead, yet these facts, and the language of Christ (who used the common language of men), show that all the dead may be, and are, included. But if this be thought to be insufficient, we will quote Rev. 20: 13, "And death (thanatos) and hell (hades) delivered up the dead which were in them."

Again, it seems that the writer referred to takes the position that mnœmeion always means "national or figurative graves." We heard such a statement made once, but we refuted it on the spot. This writer makes this statement in effect, for he says "hades is the mansion of the literal dead;" but that mnœmeious signifies "the many national or figurative tombs," etc. But if this be true, Lazarus was only raised figuratively! Christ died a spiritual or national death, and was raised therefrom!! Into such absurdities are we led, if we take this position.

But it is said further, that this spiritual interpretation is sustained by the vision of dry bones. To this we reply, this argument is too far fetched. If there is a metaphor used in Ezek. 37, it would not follow that there must be one in John 5: 28, or any other passage. But there is no metaphor used in Ezk. 37: 12. It is a plain declaration in explanation of the vision. And whenever the Lord interprets a vision, we ought to have reverence enough to allow his explanation to stand, believing that he is wiser than we. Then the cases are not parallel. In John 5, there is no vision. And the 28th and 29th verses are plain declarations of what shall take place. There are no figures used in it. There are no similes, metaphors, metonymies, synecdoches, hyperboles, or any other figures. The declaration is given in as plain language as could well be presented. In order for the interpretation which we have been considering to stand, the word graves should be used by a metaphor. Now it is a law of figures, that the figure is contained in the affirmative part of a proposition. But the phrase "all that are in the graves" embraces the subject of the proposition; and the affirmation is, "shall hear his voice," etc.

Another law of the metaphor is: it ascribes to its subject that which is incompatible with its nature. As when it is said, "Our God is a consuming fire." Here God is the subject. But it is incompatible with his nature to be a "fire." And shall we say that it is incompatible with our nature to be raised from the dead?

Still another law of the metaphor is: the name of the subject is always used in its literal sense. Take for instance the example quoted—"Our God is a consuming fire." The name of the subject is God. And he is called a fire, and no one else. Applying all these rules, then, to this passage, we can arrive at no other conclusion than this: Christ meant to teach us that a time would come when all that are in the literal graves shall rise again, both righteous and wicked. Here, then, is an invulnerable text. We need go no further to prove the resurrection of the wicked; here it is expressly declared. It is stronger than Gibralter, for that has been taken in the past; but this position never can be taken from us. No sound Biblical criticism can ever put a different construction upon this text. There is no translation (at least none that we have seen) that can convey a different idea. And if there should be one, it could easily be proved erroneous, for the original conveys the idea strongly of a resurrection of both classes.

I heard one preacher say that this passage from Christ should yield to what the prophets say to the contrary. How long will ye "make void the word of God through your traditions?" "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth."

Be Civil.—When the rich Quaker was asked the secret of his success in life, he answered, "Civility, friend, civility."

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. A. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—For the encouragement of the church, I wish to say a few things through the Crisis, in relation to the work that has been going on in East Carlton, since the 30th of last August. It has been a work of God truly, which friend and foe acknowledged to be so. One reason that the truth had so great a hold on the people at first was, there were no ministers of the orthodox church there to oppose the work, and when they came on to attempt to direct the people to their old errors, they had so much light on the Bible there was no harm done. The Baptist deacon that came out and made such a confession that he had said so many hard things about me and the work of God that was then going on, and talked and prayed in our meetings, has turned back again, and is trying to do all he can against the truth, but to no avail, thank the Lord. Two of his sisters have been baptized, and it galls him very much.

Another reason for the prosperity of the church is, there has been no pretended Advent preachers with their pretended new light, that has done so much in destroying and scattering the little flock in other places. They want preachers that preach the gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. They are the most humble, devoted, working church, that I have ever been the means of raising up, and I very much regret that I am about to leave them, to go to California, for my health. I was out there last Saturday and Sunday, and baptized five happy pilgrims, which makes thirty-one that have been baptized. We had the Lord's Supper on Sunday afternoon, and the Lord was there in power. O what a melting time we had. People are under conviction, and being converted all the while. They have three prayer-meetings every week, and there labor to get their neighbors to be christians. This must be a work that angels are interested in.

My course has been to preach the whole of the truth, harmonizing the Bible by presenting the prophecies, showing where we are in the history of the world; that Jesus is coming soon; then give God's purpose and plans as revealed in his word, in the redemption of the world. While correcting the errors of others, do it in kindness and love to them, and it will have more to do in getting them to see the truth than it will to treat them harshly; and the best of all is, the Lord will smile on your labors and give a present blessing. The persons that have been converted in Carlton have been from all classes, the infidel, the drunkard, the old, the young, the heads of families, with their children, for which there appears to be such a thankfulness, that tongue cannot express.

In conclusion, let me say to the Advent brethren, do not be discouraged; the Lord will soon come, and the Lord will hold us responsible for the promulgation of this "blessed hope." O that all might feel it as I do. I will try to do all I can to save as many as I can, and give God all of the glory.

P. A. S.

From S. D. Ackerman.

Bro. Grant:—It is the holy Sabbath day, and how my heart longs to be privileged with hearing the truth preached as it is in Jesus. For more than twenty years, I have professed religion, and been connected with the Methodist church, and have tried to walk in the light as far as I saw it. But how dark has been the day. I was taught in my childhood to believe in the immortality of the soul; that at death it left the body and went either to heaven or hell. If to heaven, eternally happy; if to hell, eternally miserable; and I sincerely believed all this, though my better judgment often proposed questions like these:

What is the judgment day for, if the soul goes to heaven or hell when it leaves the body? and how can God, who is a God of love and mercy, as well as justice, punish his children in quenchless fire forever and ever? But I never dared allow myself to look into the matter, for fear I should be found replying against God. I would here say that I hope no other professing christian will be so much afraid of obeying the injunction of our Savior to "search the Scriptures," as I have been these many years, in which I have constantly prayed for the teaching of the Holy Spirit, that I might rightly understand the blessed word of inspiration.

But I thank God that he has heard and answered my prayer, as I feel that he has, by sending me the dear "Crisis." It has truly been a light to my path, to guide me to the knowledge of the truth as contained in the holy word of God.

I have been reading your tracts and have found them a great help to me, and would recommend to every candid seeker after truth to read them. I know that the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, and ultimate destruction of the wicked, is not a popular doctrine. Even my own family think me almost an infidel; and the soon coming of the Savior meets with, if possible, less sympathy. It pains me to see christians so unwilling to speak of, or hear it spoken of. I fear some who feel all ready to die now, will tremble if they live to see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven. I doubt not but some of them will live to see that day. O what a multitude of people are groping their way in darkness; the blind leading the blind. May God hasten the time when the truth shall be preached here is my earnest prayer. Yours in the glorious hope of immortality and eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Savior, and of his soon appearing to take his ransomed children home to dwell with him in the New Jerusalem forever and ever. S. D. Ackerman.

Hingham, Mass.

From Bro. D. Eastman.

Bro. Grant:—Perhaps some of the brethren would like to know how we are prospering here in Orange and Canaan. We do not forget to assemble ourselves together as some do, but we have a little band of brethren that are strong in the Lord; yet poor, as to the things of this world, but we hope rich in faith. Sometimes Bro. Hook comes up from Concord and preaches the word of life to us, and we have a heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus. May God bless Bro. Hook while he feels he must go out and warn his fellow-men to flee from the wrath to come. Some had put on Christ, others are inquiring for the truth, and we feel that the Lord does bless us, and give us his Holy Spirit. Bless his holy name. We are striving for the kingdom together; for there is union and love which have taken the place of hatred, malice, contention, evil speaking, etc., which are sure to drown men in perdition. We have learned to be spiritual minded is life, joy and peace. Bless God for the bright prospect that is before us. We hope to be all ready when the Master comes, having on the wedding garment, that we may not be speechless.

I love to see the brethren searching the Scriptures for time; for it is written, "Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it; for the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." If Bro. Thurman has the vision, let him write it and make it plain, and if others can pick flaws and see errors, let them do so, for the truth will stand, thank God. May the Lord bless his labors, and save him in his kingdom is my prayer. D. Eastman.

Orange, N. H.

From Bro. Wm. Ingham.

Bro. Grant:—As good news from a far country is cheering to the friends of Zion, I would just say that the Lord in his mercy has revived his cause at the Phiney Mountain Cove, N. S. I left home to make them a short visit, stopped as many weeks as I expected to days; had some solemn and interesting meetings, and some few I trust, have given their hearts to God; and some wanderers have been reclaimed. Others are seeking the Lord. Baptized three. I am glad Jesus is on the giving hand, and sinners can come in this eleventh hour, and backsliders may come back to Father's house and find pardon; but soon it will be too late. What is done must be done quickly, for I believe the Master is soon coming to give his saints the kingdom. Oh hail happy day, that brings deliverance to the little flock. I can look forward and with an eye of faith behold the glorious inheritance of the saints, who shall come up through much tribulation, having their robes washed and made white through the blood of the Lamb, to be anointed kings and priests, and reign with Christ on the earth. Yours in hope, Wm. M. Ingham.

Dear Sisters:—Those who go to the Convention at Poultney, Vt., will inquire for Asa J. Rogers. The fare from New York to Troy is $2.50 in boat, from Watts St. Pier. Take the Eagle Bridge route to Poultney. Fare from Troy to Poultney, $1.50 or $2.00. Don't forget to pray that the church may be blessed at that place, and souls converted, while we are there, and that we may come away much refreshed in the Lord. Remember sisters, no hobbies, no Spiritualism, no women's rights, no such nonsense will be allowed in this Convention. We have but one aim,—the glory of God and the salvation of souls,—nothing else. Obituaries.

John Noka. Those of the preaching brethren who have visited and preached in South Kingston, R. I., will remember Bro. John Noka, one of the Narraganset tribe of Indians, who has long been looking for the "blessed hope," and waiting "for the Son of God from heaven." For many years his house was a pilgrim's home, and he has long been a staunch upholder of the gospel faith.

He was for years one of the pillars in the Indian meeting, formerly held at their chapel, in South Kingston. Latterly their meetings there had been abandoned, some of them meeting with the church at Rocky Brook, and others being like sheep without a shepherd.

For a while, Bro. Noka had been less active than formerly in the work of God; and from various circumstances, his light burned less brightly than before. A few months ago it was our privilege to spend an hour in his dwelling, and we found opportunity for prayer and encouraging words, which were, it is hoped, blest of God to mutual good.

During the past few months, though suffering from bodily infirmities, the old fervor has seemed to be renewed in his heart and life. Meetings were resumed at the chapel, and with his former zeal he has labored for the Lord.

On Sunday, May 14, 1865, he was in Centreville, Conn., being employed at his business as a stone mason in that vicinity; and though fifty-five years old, he thought it no hardship to walk six miles in company with another brother to meet with the people of God. At night he hastened back that he might attend an evening meeting where he bore a powerful testimony to the grace of Christ, which will long be remembered by those who heard it.

Monday morning, May 15th, he, as he had often done, went out to a little brook to fish, and when called to breakfast, he was found lying in the shallow water dead. He had for some time previously been in feeble health and once had fallen as if paralyzed, and probably a similar shock brought him to his end unwarned. He was brought to his home in Peacedale, South Kingston, R. I., where after an impressive discourse from Rev. Mr. Williams, the Congregational minister, from 1 Sam. 20: 3,—"There is but a step between me and death," he was borne from the little Indian chapel to his resting-place, to await the sounding of the trump of God in the morning of the first resurrection. The writer, failing to arrive in season to attend the funeral, was yet enabled to speak words of comfort and admonition, in the evening, to an attentive and sympathizing congregation in the chapel at Rocky Brook.

Our brother is at rest, and his family, who know the God of their father, sorrow not as those that have no hope. May God give them strong consolation. And though death hides from our view the manly form and kindly face of our brother, and hushes his voice, and finishes all his work, yet, when they of every nation, kindred, tongue and people, come up before the throne, we hope to meet our Bro. Noka in the kingdom of our God. May God speed the glad day, and give us then our glory and our rest. H. L. H.

Sanborn. Died in Holderness, N. H., May 17, 1865, Bro. James M. Sanborn, aged fifty-six years, two months and twelve days.

Bro. S. was among the first who embraced the doctrine of the coming King in 1843, and in common with the rest, met with a sad disappointment. Yet this hope cheered him to the last. Bro. S. was the one that Bro. Munger refers to in his life, page 194, who came from Ossipee Pocket, thirty-eight miles through the mud to his meeting. He expected to sleep in Jesus until he comes, and then to be made like him, and see him as he is. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn. May the Lord sustain them in their affliction. The writer tried to comfort the friends with the words of Paul,—"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." T. W. Piper.

Allen. Died, in Upper Gilmanton, N. H., May 8, 1865, after a long and distressing illness, Mary, wife of Isaac L. Allen, aged forty-six. A. Kidder.

Curtis. Died in Harpswell, Me., May 18, 1865, Carlton L., son of Stephen and Mary Curtis, aged one year.

May the sorrowing parents be prepared to live with their child, when he shall come again from the land of the enemy. H. D. Reed.

Jones. Died in Portsmouth, N. H., March 24, 1865, my dear mother, Esther Jones, aged sixty-seven years.

She sleeps in Jesus.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool May 18th, Londonderry 19th.
News unimportant.

Another Revolution in Hayti.—The British schooner Pomona, Capt. Molyneux, arrived here this forenoon, bringing advices from Cape Haytien to May 13, by which we learn that Hayti or a portion of the island has undergone another revolution. A party of disaffected persons, headed by a Colonel Salnave, appeared before the town of Cape Haytien on the 10th inst. and demanded its surrender, which was promptly acceded to by the government troops who garrisoned the place, and the rebels marched in and took possession. Not a gun was fired in defense of the town, and the whole affair was carried through without bloodshed. There was no opposition among the people, who appeared satisfied with the change. Other towns on the coast had also been taken by the insurgents.

The instigators of this movement have been at work for some time past in plotting against the peacable and humane government of President Geffrard, and although a former attempt to overthrow it most signally failed, the present conspiracy in which they are engaged may prove more successful.

President Geffrard was at Port au Prince during the recent disturbances, and it remains to be seen what force he can bring in opposition to the rebels.

The following is an extract of a letter from Arthur Folsom, Esq., U. S. Consul at Cape Haytien, to Messrs. N. P. Mann & Co. of this city:

Cape Haytien, May 11, 1865.—We have had a complete political change, and, as we learn that Gonaives and St. Marcs have done the same thing, we think it will be a peaceable end to the Geffrard government. The fellow here who has had himself proclaimed dictator is Col. Salnave, (now Gen. Salnave,) the person who attempted to assassinate one of Geffrard's ministers here some months since, but not having succeeded he escaped to the Dominicans, but has now emerged from his hiding place, and on his arrival at the gates of the town all the troops submitted without firing a gun."

DOMESTIC.

New York, May 23. The gunboat Rhode Island, from Pensacola and Mobile Point, 16th inst., has arrived. St. Marks and Tallahassee, Florida, surrendered to our forces on the 9th inst., and the steamer Spray to Lieut. Gibson of the Mahaska on the 11th.

The Herald's Mobile correspondence announces the surrender of the rebel fleet in the Tombigbee river on the 9th, comprising two commodores and one hundred and fifty other officers and twelve vessels.

The steamer America brings Savannah dates of the 20th. The Savannah Herald has late advices from Augusta, Ga. The country between Savannah and Augusta is filled with rebel paroled sol. returning to their homes.

Nearly all the planters have put in large amounts of seed, mostly corn, rye and vegetables. Some have planted cotton, the first in four years. But few slaves have skedaddled.

Much grief and excitement was caused in Augusta by the announcement that Davis was captured.

A wagon containing $243,000 in specie belonging to the rebel government, was found in a by way and turned over to Gen. Molineux.

Gen. Gillmore has issued a proclamation declaring null and void the proclamation issued by the self-styled Governors of South Carolina, Georgia and Florida; and also declaring that the people of the black race are free citizens of the United States, and will be protected in the enjoyment of their freedom and the fruits of their industry by the government.

War Department,
Washington, May 27.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

A dispatch from Gen. Canby, dated at New Orleans 26th inst., states that arrangements for the surrender of the rebel forces in the trans-Mississippi Department have been concluded. They include the men and material of the army and navy.

(Signed (Edwin M. Stanton,
Secretary of War.

Washington, May 27. The following order has just been issued from the War Department:

"That in all cases of sentences by military tribunals of imprisonment during the war the sentence be remitted, and that the prisoners be discharged. The Adjutant-General will issue immediately the necessary instructions to carry this order into effect.

By order of the President.

(Signed) Edwin M. Stanton,
Secretary of War."

Chicago, Ill., May 29. The Tribune's New Orleans dispatches of the 26th, state that the Ordnance Depot and Magazine at Mobile exploded at 2 o'clock yesterday. The shock was terrific. The city shook to its very foundations. Eight squares of buildings were destroyed. Five hundred persons were buried in the ruins. Loss $8,000,000. Origin of the explosion not yet ascertained.

Philadelphia, May 29. The telegraph lines are now in full telegraphic connection with Memphis, Vicksburg, Mobile and New Orleans, and are receiving and sending private messages to these cities.

The War Closed.

With the surrender by Kirby Smith of the rebel forces west of the Mississippi river, the war formally closes. If any evidence beyond the manifest disappearance of all enemies in arms were needed in support of this announcement, it would be found in the order just emanating from the War Department, remitting the sentences of all persons who were to be imprisoned "during the war." The Government, therefore, understands that the duration of the war has ceased. We are glad that Kirby Smith has not proved himself the fool he was represented to be. He has saved bloodshed and much valuable time. Gen. Sheridan, if he continues his route to the Southwest, will employ his energies in promoting the return of order and prosperity to that region.

And so the great war is ended at last. We thought so when Lee surrendered, and now we know so. If there is to be any more fighting—which God forbid—it can only be of an exceptional character, originating in local causes. The grand struggle is finished, and, by the blessing of Providence, finished right. If it had been won over a foreign foe, we should now indulge in the celebrations of victory; but as it is, we can have no better way of testifying our joy than by entering most heartily upon all the duties and privileges of the new era opening before us.—Boston Journal.

A Remarkable Prophecy.—Not long ago was found at Toledo, in Spain, in a monastery, a paper containing the following prophecy:

In the far west beyond the ocean will rise a nation which will be great in power and wealth; and Satan, in one of his walks to and fro in the earth, will observe this nation, and determined to destroy their happiness, will there send two monsters, one in the North and the other to the South, and he will give them strawberries, and they will eat them; and after they have eaten, they will feel a great thirst, not to be quenched with anything else but blood. They will, therefore, cause the brother to slay the brother, the father to slay the son, and the son the father, and they will drink the blood of the slain, and it will bring lamentation and wailing throughout the land. And when the time is fulfilled, there will rise a strong man in the North who will take the monsters and bind them and draw them into the sea, where it is the deepest, and peace and happiness will again prevail throughout, and the people will praise the Lord.

It is said the monks in said monastery maintain that this prophecy was written before the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus; that Ferdinand and Isabella were, in the main, induced by it to fit out the ship for Columbus, and that the first part of it is fulfilled in America, and that the other part soon will come to pass.

☞ Mrs. Warren Potter, of Greenfield, who fell asleep last October and remained unconscious for eighteen weeks, then woke up for three days, and finally took another nap of five days' duration, has since that time been gradually recovering, and is now able to ride out. All remedies failed to restore her until electricity was tried.

☞ The Government has knowledge that the rebellion is not entirely vanquished, and it will be necessary in many portions of the South to maintain military power for some time.

Making up a Newspaper.—The difficulties in making up a newspaper are often of a very practical character. Every week something is to be left over, and somebody is to be disappointed, not to say chagrined or offended. Only an experience in a printing-office can explain the matter. A paper of huge dimensions is every way easier to edit than a small one. You can throw into its capacious folds articles and documents unabridged, but one of small or medium size has to be manipulated with the tenderest care, else you will lack variety, will leave out important paragraphs, will have a superfluity of words and a scarcity of sense. In our last week's issue we meant to get in a good many good things that did not get in. The exhortation to patience is always in order; also that of brevity. Think of the fact that your epistle is not the only one written or to be written—that A, B, C, D, E, F, down the whole line of the alphabet, is waiting to come in, and that if you do not shorten, somebody will be shut out. To print in detail would be to destroy the general variety of the paper. Write as often as you think there is need, but choose words with the same care that you would if sending dispatches over the wires at fifteen cents per word.—Christian Advocate.

☞ That a wholesale emigration from Canada, says the Montreal Transcript, to the neighboring States has set in, is painfully evident from the reports that reach us from all parts of the country. Nearly every exchange that comes to hand tells of the rapid decrease of population. Want of capital to furnish employment for labor, is assigned as a cause.

☞ A great religious movement is taking place in China in favor of the Catholic religion. Hundreds of villages have become converted, and the converts exceed the capacity of the ministers to receive and baptize them. The Chinese Bishops make an earnest appeal to Catholic Europe to send more missionaries to aid in saving souls.

☞ B. F. Hatch, M. D., the husband of the celebrated Cora L. V. Hatch, has just obtained a legal divorce at the hands of the law in the State of Rhode Island.

Notice.

As I believe time is very short, and it behooves us to be up and doing, and as I have found many females that feel God has called them to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, but because of the prejudice of the church in its present cold and backslidden state, they are kept back from laboring as they feel God has called them to do; and as I believe that we are living in the day when God will pour out his spirit upon his handmaids, I therefore give this notice to all the women of America, independent of denomination or color, who feel that they have been called of God to preach, exhort, pray, or to write, on the subject of his speedy coming, and a preparation for that coming, to open a correspondence with me in reference to holding a convention of women, which will be held in the Poultney church, at Poultney, Vt., commencing Wednesday, June 7th, and continuing one week. All brethren are invited to meet with us. This convention shall be for the promulgation of all Bible truths; but no hobbies.

Now, sisters, let this be a missionary movement. Remember Jesus is at the door, and wickedness is abounding, and the love of many is waxing cold. Let us be up and doing, so that he may say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . Enter into the joy of thy Lord." Let all who feel interested in this great work, make it a subject of special prayer at the hour of twelve o'clock, every day, that God may bless the effort that we may put forth to his honor and glory.

All brethren who are favorable to this convention are invited to assist us by advice, by kind words of encouragement. Address,

Mrs. Anna E. Smith,
No. 128 East 27th St., New York City.

LINES.

How oft have many learned divines
Sinful and vainly taught,
That God by outward rites designs
To cleanse from every fault.

They tell you babes are purged from sins,
Regen'rate, born anew;
But soon as active life begins,
What do they all pursue?

May no such fallacy deceive
The children, Lord, we pray;
But let them first repent, believe,
And choose the narrow way.

May they receive the inward grace,
Then have the outward sign,
And ever show in every place
That they are wholly thine.

Nor other's act, nor their own deed,
For cleansing will avail;
Thy Spirit, gracious God, they need,
His power can never fail.

When they with all the heart believe,
When Christ is known and prized,
Let them the sacred rite receive,
And be indeed baptized,—

Wholly immersed beneath the stream,
Thence may they joyful rise,
And Christ and grace be all their theme,
Till they meet him in the skies.

"MINISTRATION OF DEATH." "Ministration of the Spirit."—No. 4.

PAUL AND THE THEATRE.

Paul's next attempt to speak to the people was to go into a theatre (19: 30–61). But in this he failed, as his friends would not permit him to do it, "advising him not to venture into the theatre. Some therefore said one thing, and some another; for the assembly was confused, and the greater part did not know why they were come together. And they pushed Alexander out of the crowd, the Jews thrusting him forward." When the town clerk, or recorder, finally succeeded in quieting the crowd, "he dismissed the assembly." "After the tumult was allayed, Paul, having summoned the disciples," "departed to go into Macedonia (20: 1). And he went into Greece, and "remained three months." But "a plot being laid for him by the Jews, as he was about to sail into Syria, he resolved to return through Macedonia." And when he was in Troas, we find Paul holding his meeting on "the FIRST day of the WEEK," in an "upper room," in the "third story," instead of a Jewish synagogue. Now let the reader remember that the meeting held at Troas was on the first day of the week (sabbaton), and not on the seventh day of "sabbaton." It was not a night (Greek, nux) meeting exclusively; as certain ones would have us believe, so as to make it appear that Paul "journeyed" (?) on the first day of the week. But it was a day (heemeran) meeting, commenced on the first day of the week (sabbaton), and not the first night. Having the meeting continued through the first day, and through the second night; and thus Paul "journeyed" on the second day of the week. But, says the objector, the word sabbaton, rendered week, has nothing to do with this matter; and the word "day" is not found in the original, where it is rendered "first day of the week," in our common version.

To meet these objections, we will here introduce a criticism as found in "Both Sides," pp. 118–9:

"It is evident that the word sabbaton sometimes means the whole week. How, then, shall we determine when it has this meaning? Easily enough. Robinson says that it has this meaning 'after numerals denoting the days of the week.' We now inquire, Does the word sabbaton, in those places where the expression, 'first day of the week,' occurs in the New Testament, follow a numeral adjective denoting the day of the week? We answer, Yes, in every instance. Then no one can deny, without discarding all authority, that in these instances sabbaton means week, and the translation of our common version is correct. . . . One instance will suffice for the whole, and we will take the first one, Matt. 28, 1. The words are, mian sabbaton (pronounced with long o, as in tone). Mian is the numeral adjective meaning one, or according to a Hebraism, 'first.' It agrees with day, understood. Sabbaton is in the genitive plural, literally answering to the English words, 'of the week.' So we have, as plainly as language can say it, 'first day of the week.' . . . The word mian being in the feminine gender shows that the noun understood, with which it agrees, is a feminine noun. And there is no word which can be introduced to supply the ellipsis, except the word which the translators of our Bible have supplied, namely, heemeran, day, which renders the sense complete, and being a feminine noun, answers to the feminine adjective, mian, and makes the construction harmonious and perfect. We accordingly find in the margin of the Greek Testament, a reference from the word mian, saying, "heemeran understood." And we are forced to the conclusion that Greenfield, Robinson, and Liddell and Scott, in their lexicons, and the forty-seven learned men of England who made our version of the New Testament, are correct in their translation."

"So we have, as plainly as language can say it," that Paul did hold his meeting at "Troas," on "the first day of the week"—"Both Sides" itself being one of our witnesses.

THE DAY CHANGED ACCORDING TO THE LAW AND THE TESTIMONY.

Has the first day of the week been set apart, by divine sanction, to be observed in place of the seventh day, as the Sabbath? Has God authorized this change? Great stress is laid here upon the production of some express precept; declaring in so many words that Christ made, or directed this change. It is said—"Give us your text"—"give us your text"—"To the law and to the testimony;" is the supposed unanswerable demand. Yet, notwithstanding this, "to the law and to the testimony" we will go. In doing so, we will adduce three forms of the argument.

1. If we find an express precept for such a change, then we have "the law." If we find in the history of Christ and his early disciples, distinct traces of a corresponding position, then we have "the testimony;" and in the two united we have the evidence of "the law and testimony."

2. If we find the express precepts affirming the right of such a change, we have "the law." If we find, then, actual traces of such a change in the practice, of those who had this right, we again have "the testimony;" and in these two united, we again have the evidence of "the law and testimony."

3. If we cannot find any express precept of either kind, yet if we can trace the fact of the actual change, through witness after witness, from the apostles and early christians to the present time, then, again, we have "the testimony;" and in the practice of the apostles and primitive disciples of Christ, we have the indisputable proof, that such a change was never made by them, without the authority, or sanction, of their divine Master. Hence, in this way, we again, in the end, obtain the evidence of "law and testimony" both. Our appeal, then, is "to the law and to the testimony."

* The patriarchs, for the first 2500 years of the world, had no express precept for keeping a Sabbath; and we do not pretend that we have any express precept, or passage, saying in so many words that the change in question was made by Christ, or the apostles; and hence, we pass the first form of the argument. But (2). That Christ had a right, to change the Sabbath, appears in the fact that "the Son of man is Lord of the Sabbath day," and we therefore introduce him as our first witness. If he claimed the right to regulate the Sabbath generally, and thus free it from the traditions of men, and also a right to change the days on which the Sabbath should be held; we here then have "the law." Christ's example, or actual conduct, will give us his "testimony." What then was his example? Before his death and resurrection, he carefully observed the seventh-day Sabbath, according to the true spirit of that institution. After this period, we never find him observing the seventh day; but he especially honored and observed "THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK" (sabbaton), as a day for meeting with his disciples.

Luke informs us (Acts 1: 3) that after His resurrection he appeareth to his disciples at different times for the space of "forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." At some of their interviews during this forty days, among other things "pertaining to the kingdom of God," Christ either authorized a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, or he did not. If he did not, the reason is found in these words—"I have many things to say, but you cannot bear them now" (John 16: 12, 13). If therefore Christ himself did not make the change during this period of forty days, it must be because it was reserved to be done by the apostles, when the "Spirit of truth" should come; for Christ had said, "He will guide you into all truth." The apostles knew what "seemed good to the Holy Spirit," (Acts 15: 28) and also to them, and hence said to the disciples, we shall "lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things," etc. We therefore are to look for the first decisive indications of this change to the apostles and their history, rather than to the conduct and history of Christ himself. But suppose Christ did authorize this change of days, in those interviews during the forty days; still it must be made known to the world through the apostles, for Christ never appeared publicly to the world after his resurrection. And what he said to his apostles during this forty days we know but little about. In Luke 24: 27, it is said: "And beginning at Moses, and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." And in Acts 1: 3, we find he was "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." After Christ's resurrection, the old "dispensation of death," was virtually at an end, and the "dispensation of the Spirit" was fully introduced; and therefore we never find Christ in the synagogues or meeting with his disciples on the seventh day after this. But for religious purposes, for worship, he did meet them on "the first day of the week." See Matt. 28: 9; Luke 24: 18–49; John 20: 13–23. At the close of this last interview Christ said, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you. And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained."

The Holy Spirit was to be to the apostles more than Christ himself, and was the one to lead them "into all truth," and qualify them for the work to which Christ had commissioned them. The Spirit was to direct them in the exercise of their authority to instruct, and to regulate the order, the institutions, and the worship of the church. In all these respects the "Spirit" was to be the same to them as a present Christ. Yea, more; for Christ had said, "I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away," etc., (John 16: 7, 13); so that under the Spirit's guidance, the instruction to the disciples would be more correct, and the order, institutions and worship they should prescribe for the church, would be attended with greater authority than if they were under the immediate, personal guidance of Christ himself. And so "when the day of Pentecost was fully come," the Holy Spirit taught them "to speak with other tongues;" this being their public anointing to the work which Christ had begun, and which now devolved on them to carry out and complete. And be it remembered that this wonderful and important work transpired upon "the first day of the week"—THE LORD'S DAY." The immediate result of this anointing was, that the apostles, and especially Peter, preached with such power, that "three thousand souls" were added to them on that day. And thus was "the first day of the week," again honored and blessed of Him who was the Head of the church and "Lord of the sabbath day."

Thus on "the first day of the week," we have seen that in the first instance we have an account of Christ's resurrection—the exposition of the Scriptures concerning himself—the evidence of the identity of his resurrected body—the commission to the disciples and their investment with apostolic authority; and in the second instance, that of Pentecost—the mission of the Holy Spirit, with all of the official recognition and endowment which it involved. All these occurrences, on the first day of the week, are just what we should expect them to be, on the supposition that Christ intended to honor the first day of the week, above all other days—in the "dispensation of the Spirit"—as the day for religious worship. Why should all these events transpire on the first day, except Christ, the great Head of the church, intended—as "Lord of the Sabbath"—to institute a new day as the Sabbath for his people, thenceforth to be distinguished from other days as "THE LORD'S DAY?" ☞ Quarreling and disputing should never be engaged in by any one. If one hate another, or wishes to retaliate, let him go and do some kind act, that he feels will be appreciated by his opponent. If you do not first succeed, try again; but be sure and cultivate the kindest feelings, and let your life be a living example of peace and good will toward all animated beings.

DESTRUCTION OF GOOD.

"One sinner destroyeth much good."

The world abounds in sinners, and there is a great variety of them; high and low, rich and poor, the honored and the lowly, alike have their share. But, alas! that there should be any in the church of God. Strange that any professing godliness should destroy much good; and yet there are those who from selfish motives hinder the work of the Lord. Brother, sister, it is not necessary for you to commit any great sin to become a sinner in this sense; but a few words from you in exhortation, or even in prayer, may throw a chill over a meeting, hinder the free course of the Spirit, and thus destroy much good. Every one feels that you are not in unison with the rest of God's people, that your influence is in an opposite direction, though you may profess much love to God and his cause.

We are responsible for the influence we exert. We may by our discouraging words hold the work of God in check for months together; and what account shall we have to render? Perhaps souls are lost by our willfulness or obstinacy.

The Judge is coming. Are we seeking the unity of the Spirit? Are we seeking the salvation of those around us, or to build up self? Or have we a theory to sustain, though all around us perish? What is our calling, brethren and sisters? Does the Lord require nothing at our hand? Arouse ye, one and all.

"Let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake go abroad."

CHRISTIAN UNION.

"Sectarianism a Waste of Moral Power."

NUMBER EIGHT.

"He who has the truth and keeps it,
Keeps what not to him belongs;
But performs a selfish action,
That his fellow-mortal wrongs."

A writer in the Methodist Quarterly of 1845, reviewing a book on the evils of sectarianism, says:

"The divisions, bickerings and sectarian prejudices of the Protestant churches, with respect to each other, can never be viewed, by the sincere friend of a spiritual christianity, with any other feelings than those of unmingled sorrow and painful regret. What a pity that the body of Christ should be thus divided. That his seamless garment should be so needlessly rent asunder, and that he should be thus cruelly wounded in the house of his friends! Nothing, perhaps, has done so much to strengthen the hands of the skeptic, to render religion inefficient, and to array prejudice against it, as that want of christian union, which one author so pointedly and eloquently condemns. It has been the Bohon Upas of the American churches, blasting, by its dreadful, malign effluvia, the fruits of righteousness, and spreading mildew and death, over the heritage of the Lord."

It is true, this warfare, like that in the world's military battle-fields, is modified and tamed by the advancing civilization of the age. Men are ashamed of some of its more barbarous exhibitions, just as the Russians or the Allies would be ashamed to disregard a flag of truce, or massacre their prisoners. But the war still goes on, and forts are built, ditches dug, mines laid and stratagems resorted to, in the theological as well as in the civil field. Courtesies are often exchanged by opposing cohorts in the ecclesiastical as well as in the military field, previous to, or during an engagement; but the bulwarks of opposing churches, like the spires of belligerent castles, rising in each village and hamlet, are as significant of a smouldering warfare, as was a Feudal landscape in the palmiest days of the Norman Barons.

How terrible is the thought, that all Christendom is plunged into this sin! that religious leaders have made the unthinking people believe it to be a virtue! These leaders are urging on their dupes to spend all their strength in committing this sin. Do not let us be misunderstood. We do not say that all who commit this sin are guilty. The great mass do it ignorantly. But this does not destroy the fact, that the practice itself is sinful.

How fearful is the responsibility of those leaders, who ought to know better, and who continue this practice! They have brought the curse and blight of party hate upon all Christendom. They have so distorted God's religion, as to fill the world with infidelity. They have cast the spirit of Christ out of his church, in the persons of the weak but honest members. Faction, under priestly guides, like the beast of the Apocalypse, has trod all christian graces under her demoniac feet. Shame marks the brow of church history, because divisions and bickerings, and the rise and fall of rival partizans guide her pen. While civil history is but a spirit of national robbery, blood and death, ecclesiastical history is her consort in wickedness over the whole field of time. All the bloody wars of earth, have grown out of the indulgence of the same spirit which builds the sects of modern Christendom. That spirit is tamed and restricted by the civilization of the age, but is not exorcised. How demoralizing is such a crime! When civil government is broken into factions, headed by civil chieftains, how speedily is the state ruined! When the family breaks out into open divisions, how soon all domestic peace and virtue take their flight! But how much more ruinous is this spirit and are these practices in the church of God! It is, professedly, the great, harmonizing power of the earth. It was designed to bring order out of chaos, and moral music out of discord. But, now, under sectarian leaders, it begins its work in every place by religious disorder, and breathes into the heart of every community a new occasion of discord, by introducing sectarian points of controversy. In this wicked work, its ministers lead off. Their first mission to every place, where two of a different faction meet, is to divide the good men and women into opposing parties. Could the devil devise a more fatal scheme for ruining religion? Ah! the day will come, when this chapter of human history will appear to all the world as it does to us,—the darkest picture in the book of time.

As God is true to the redemption of the race, these sectarian scales will yet fall from the eyes of good men. The intelligence of the age has lifted the minds of the people to an elevation, where their disgust at some of the worst forms of sectarianism cannot be suppressed. The feeling against this low, religious vice, rises from year to year. The sects are obedient to public opinion, and so they begin to soften down their ancient quarrels, out of regard to appearances. But the subject is not to be thus disposed of. The minds of the masses if once thoroughly aroused to its enormities, will not be satisfied with a modification of the evil, but will demand its extirpation. D. F. NEWTON.

A SINGULAR CONVERSION.

A passage from "The Life of Hiram Munger."

Coming home from a long tour all worn down, I took my wife, and started to visit her friends, and rest awhile. On our way we heard of a protracted meeting on that road, and thought we would stop a short time. Sister H. was lecturing. After the lecture, liberty was given to pray and exhort as the Spirit moved. Some prayed; but it seemed to be a dead set. When the man of the house, being a preacher, requested me to take hold, I told him that I was worn out, and was going further that night, and must be off. But he was very urgent, and I told him that the meeting was prayed to death, and that such prayers as were then being offered would kill any meeting. The sister prayed for everything that she could think of, and then repeated them over again. I told Bro. P. that I would stop a little while, and make a few remarks on long praying, etc. I got tired of waiting for her to finish, and cried out, "Lord, bless that sister now, so that she can stop praying!" She stopped, and I talked short and plain. I told them what killed the meeting, and then we started a class-meeting. I spoke to some whom I knew did not enjoy religion, and was pointed in my remarks; I felt that something might be done. The Spirit of God began to move, and the wicked and triflers began to scatter, and, in a short time, we had a good meeting.

As I was going, for I had stayed much longer than I had expected, we got into the entry, and we saw a young woman making sport of some of the expressions I made use of in the meeting. I felt like speaking to her, but it was late, and we had two miles further to go, so we started; but I wanted to speak to her, and I knew it would take but a moment, so I left my wife standing at the door, and that was the last I saw of her till the next day, for here began a work that took nearly all night to finish. I spoke to the woman, and will give the language as nearly as possible between us.

"Young woman, do you enjoy religion?"

"No, sir."

"Did you ever?"

"No, sir."

"Do you ever expect to?"

"No, sir."

"Do you believe in the christian religion?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you believe you will go to hell without it?"

"Yes, sir."

She was so prompt, that I hardly knew what question to put next; but I could not give it up. I saw that all were still; they knew what I had to contend with, but I did not. Next question: "Do you expect to sin against such light, and then go to hell after all?"

Answer was very prompt—"Yes, sir."

"Do you believe that God will answer the prayers of his people?"

"Yes, sir, I do."

"Well, inasmuch as you expect to go to hell, would it not be appropriate to pray to God to take you away this night, rather than let you go on in sin any longer, as your torment would be worse?"

"Yes, sir, was the horrid and unexpected reply.

I paused and trembled. "Will you go and kneel down for me to pray?"

"Yes, sir." And she did.

This was a trying time to all present, saint and sinner.

I commenced praying, and telling the Lord what he had heard said by us both, and prayed that, if it were possible to save this sinner, he would do it now. But, if not, to answer prayer. At this moment, she cried out for mercy. Others knelt down, and God took the work into his hands, and she soon came out happy, and praised the Lord. She went to work for others, and God blessed a number of them. After we closed, she embraced her father and mother, rejoicing in what God had done for her. This was the first time that I learnt that she was Elder P.'s daughter. It always astonishes me when I think of this scene. I have talked this over with Azuba since, and she says that God plucked her as a brand from the fire, for her breath had stopped, and she would have died if she had not cried out before I had spoken the next work. This was the work of God, and it was marvelous in our eyes. I saw her father and sister recently, and they told me that Azuba was trying to live religion. This circumstance took place at Three Rivers, in Palmer, Mass.

ENEMIES OF THE CHURCH.

"Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you."

We can believe that when the world is spoken of in the sense of the above text, it only includes that class of individuals previously named, extending no further than unto all who make no pretensions to the christian religion; for there are many who claim to be true "worshipers of God," who are bitter "enemies of the cross"; who cherish the most deadly hatred towards God's people; by whom every lover of Jesus has been reviled, slandered, and many with cruel and inhuman treatment. This may seem strange, but it is no less true; past history as well as the Book of books affirm it, as also the spirit of this our own day.

Look, for example, at the treatment of Cain, the first worshiper, toward his brother Abel, in whom was embodied the holy and righteous principle of the church. Here we see the spirit of the true and false church in their infancy, the first and early types of the same. See the disposition which was made of the beloved patriarch Joseph by his pious brethren. Mark the conduct of Saul, the anointed, toward the holy David. Thus the holy prophets were ever persecuted in all their arduous labors, and from the hands of a hypocritical multitude.

What class formed the most inveterate enemies of our beloved Redeemer? Who met him on every turn, constantly bringing false charges against him, impugning his motives, and endeavoring to "catch him in his words"? And who was it that had him at last formally condemned and really put to death? Was it not those who claimed to be God's favorites, and wholly devoted to his service, the high priest himself being the most prominent actor in the scene? And from whence did the apostles meet with the most deadly opposition; and by whom were they persecuted in various ways? Was it by the really barbarous and uncivilized nations? No, verily; but from those who pretended to be very pious and to possess a most vehement zeal for God. And Paul confirms the same thus: "But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now."—Gal. 4: 29. And need we expect any amendment in these last days of "false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good"? We think not. And awful as it is to see the sinner a willing captive to his lusts, openly rebelling against an infinitely good Creator, it is still more awful to see those "having a form of godliness . . . denying the power thereof." 2 Tim. 3: 5. The world, in the general acceptation of the term, has never been so great an enemy to the church as those false professors who profess to be alive, while dead. Then "marvel not" at this hatred of the world, understood in the sense we have endeavored to portray it, but be encouraged in the violence of the storm and the seeming darkness of night.

Be thou my strength, O God of power;
Then, tho' winds blow and thunders roar,
I'll still thy faithful witness be,
'Tis fixed I all can do for thee.

Persecution will come upon us unsought. We have no occasion to court it; all we have to do is, to avoid that which is not of God, go not with the multitude, but stand out in bold relief with the glorious Bible in hand, the love of God shed abroad in our hearts, through the Holy Ghost given unto all that obey him. We must be found in "the Way, the Truth, and the Life," advocating that truth to the best of our ability, and then, be assured, tribulation will come; then we shall realize the truth of what Paul declared to them at Antioch, that "we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God."—Acts 14: 22. "For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake."—Phil. 1: 29. "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."—2 Tim. 3: 12. Only occupy this position, live godly, work righteousness, show to the world that you are really on God's side and his truth, then you may with just as much hope of success expect to escape persecution as you would be likely to evade drowning if you were to leap into the midst of the sea.

Tribulation to the church is inseparable with duty; they are associates, and go hand in hand, and are designed by our heavenly Father as one of those instrumentalities of purification which shall work "for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." We have the promise that, "if we suffer with him" (Christ), then we shall reign with him—"be glorified together"; and that "the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—2 Cor. 4, 17; Rom. 8: 17, 18. And all this is "that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer."—2 Thess. 1: 5.

Then "marvel not," ye afflicted and persecuted ones, but be ye strengthened, cheered and comforted on your way by the many promises of God, and of our Savior in his Sermon on the Mount,—"Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."—Matt. 5: 10–12.

How delightful to dwell upon this language of our great Deliverer and coming King! Let us treasure it in our hearts as a rich legacy, and may we be enabled, like the "apostle to the Gentiles," to "glory in tribulation," that the power of Christ may rest upon us, "knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope." Therefore, endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."—Rom. 5: 3–5; 2 Tim. 2: 3. "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you."

Beloved, persevere in your righteous course, knowing that the great day of reckoning hasteth greatly when there will be a "time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time"; at which time, blessed be God, his "people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book"; when "the wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many (not to the false fables of men, but) to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever." Glorious promise!

"DESIGNS."

Have you not sometimes been pained by the manner in which some preachers and writers try to appear "wise above what is written" on the subject of the "designs of God"? Such preaching seems to me a near approach to blasphemy,—though we would hope in charity that the preacher is unconscious of it. It may be a habit into which he has fallen, but it is a bad habit and should be abandoned. Let us render the point plain by illustration.

A certain writer says his "original plan failing . . . he devises another scheme," etc. This might be said of the plans of man, but who can prove that the original plan of GOD ever failed? Did not HE see the "end from the beginning?"

When men standing in the place of teachers, become inflated with their own importance, and speak great swelling words of vanity, they tell us how very differently things result from the original design of the Deity. But the Scriptures teach that the ways of HIM who rules above are past finding out, and we can safely trust that none of his plans will ever fail. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

BUTTER-MAKING.

Four years ago I was placed in charge of the Oneida Community Dairy, then numbering only between fifty and sixty cows. It was to me an entirely new department of industry, and I endeavored to make amends for my ignorance by investigation and experiment. I diligently read all the articles on butter-making which I could find in the old and new files of the Country Gentleman, Genessee Farmer, American Agriculturist, and other agricultural papers, and made many experiments, in the course of a twelve-month, with varied success. With the aid of these investigations and experiments, I finally developed a plan of butter-making which produced very satisfactory results, and which I am satisfied is adapted to the production of excellent butter at all seasons of the year.

NECESSARY CONDITIONS.

Nearly all authorities on butter-making agree, that every thing used in and about the dairy should be kept clean, free from taint of every description; that the milk should be set in a light and airy place, and be kept at a temperature ranging from fifty-five to sixty degrees; that the milk should be frequently examined, in order that the cream may be removed in the proper time (if the cream remains on the milk too long it loses its best flavor;) that the time which milk should stand before skimming depends upon many causes, suce as the season, state of the atmosphere, feed of the cows, etc.; that after the cream is removed from the milk, it may be kept before churning a short time in nearly the same temperature as the milk of the dairy; that if occasionally stirred the churning-process will be facilitated.

CHURNING AND PACKING.

Have the cream about sixty degrees when churned—better in summer at fifty-six deg.—as soon as the butter comes wash it in several waters (in ice-water in summer,) i. e. until the buttermilk is all out, and the water in which the butter is placed is perfectly clear. Then salt it (1 oz. to the lb.,) and work the salt in evenly with a ladle or butter-worker. Great pains must be taken to work the salt into the butter evenly, otherwise it will look streaked and its taste will vary. Then pack down immediately, and cover with brine. This method of packing butter more effectually excludes the atmosphere from the butter than any other plan I have seen; and this appears to me an essential point in the art of butter-preserving. I think it will be found much easier to make good butter than to keep it good.

WORKING BUTTER.

I judge that more butter is injured in the process of "working," as it is termed, than by any other means. It is rightly assumed that the buttermilk must be entirely separated from the butter; but this may be effected in various ways. If performed with the ladle or roller the grains or globules of the butter are very likely to be seriously injured, rendering the butter as a whole salvy or oily, and greatly damaging the flavor. Besides this method of freeing the butter from the buttermilk often takes away the brine as well as milk, leaving the butter too fresh. Then more salt is added, which will remain in the butter, partly held in solution, and partly not, unless the already over-worked butter is put through the rolling and ladleing process again. Hence my conclusion that the better way is to have the butter come hard, and with little buttermilk (which can always be done if one has the right sort of churn, and a supply of ice,) and wash out the buttermilk with cold water (the colder the better,) and afterwards work the butter only sufficiently to have the salt evenly distributed through it.

MISCELLANEOUS REMARKS.

There may be methods of butter-making and preserving, superior to that indicated above; and therefore I rejoice in the present discussion of the subject. I have, for instance, heard it objected, that the washing of butter takes away some of its sweetness and virtue. I am not prepared to deny this assertion. But I am certain that very good butter may be made and preserved for a long period by the plan described above.

Butter, I am satisfied, is also often injured by remaining too long a time after it is churned before it is packed in tub or jar. It should be packed as soon as may be after the buttermilk is separated from it, and it is properly salted. Never wait to put it through a second and third working.

The butter sent to market from small dairies is not generally so good as from large ones—partly owing perhaps to the fact that the former cannot fill a tub at one packing, and the butter in the partly-filled tub is not properly excluded from the air by a covering of salt or brine. This remark is of course more particularly applicable to butter-making during the summer months. I think the butter of small dairies would in many cases be improved by the use of smaller sized tubs or firkins.

It must not be forgotten in our philosophising on this subject, that the quality of feed has much influence upon the quality of butter produced. The grass or other products of the soil are more nourishing, and better adapted to the production of rich, sweet milk, in some portions of the country than in others.

I anticipate that the best system of butter-making which can be devised, will manufacture butter directly from the milk of the dairy, thus avoiding much of the labor and trouble incidental to the methods now generally practiced, producing a superior article, and obtaining a greater quantity from the same amount of milk.—The Circular.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

RESTLESS NIGHTS.

Some persons "toss and tumble" half the night, and get up in the morning weary, unrefreshed and dispirited, wholly unfit, either in body or mind, for the duties of the day; they are not only incapacitated for business, but are often rendered so ungracious in their manners, so irritable and fretful, as to spread a gloom and a cloud over the whole household. To be be able to go to bed and be in a sound sleep, an unconscious deliciousness, in five minutes, but enjoyed in its remembrance, is a great happiness, an incalculable blessing, and one for which the most sincere and affectionate thanks should habitually go up to that beneficent Providence which vouchsafes the same through the instrumentalities of a wise and self-denying attention to the laws of our being.

Restless nights as to persons apparently in good health, arise from, first, an overloaded stomach; second, from worldly care; third, from want of muscular activities proportioned to the needs of the system. Few will have restless nights who take dinner at mid-day, and nothing after that except a piece of cold bread and a sip of soft pure water; anything beyond that, as cake, pie, chipped beef, preserves, dough-nuts, and the like, only tempt nature to eat when there is a really no call for it, thus engendering dyspepsia and all its train of evils.

Worldly care. For those who cannot sleep from the unsatisfactory condition of their affairs; who feel as if they were going behindhand; or that they are about to encounter great losses, whether from their own remissness, the perfidy of friends, or unavoidable circumstances, we have a deep and sincere sympathy. To such we say: Live hopefully for better days ahead, and meanwhile strive diligently, persistently, and with a brave heart to that end.

But the more common cause of restless nights is, that exercise has not been taken to make the body tired enough to demand sound sleep. Many spoil all their sleep by attempting to force more on nature than she requires. Few persons will fail to sleep soundly, while they do sleep, if they avoid sleeping in the daytime, and will go to bed at a regular hour, and heroically resolve to get up the moment they wake, whether it is at two, four, or six o'clock in the morning. In less than a week each one will find how much sleep his system requires; thereafter give it that, and no more. —Hall's Journal of Health.

CHECKING PERSPIRATION.

If while perspiring, ar while something warmer than usual, from exercise or a heated room, there is a sudden exposure in stillness to a still, cold air, or to a raw, damp atmosphere, or to a draft, whether at an open window or door or street-corner, an inevitable result is a violent and instantaneous closing of the pores of the skin, by which waste and impure matters, which were making their way out of the system, are compelled to seek an exit through some other channel, and break through some weaker part, not the natural one, and harm to that part is the result. The idea is presented by saying that the cold has settled in that part. To illustrate:

A lady was about getting into a small boat to cross the Delaware; but wishing first to get an orange at a fruit-stand, she ran up the bank of the river, and on her return to the boat found herself much heated, for it was summer, but there was a little wind on the water, and the clothing soon felt cold to her; the next morning she had a severe cold, which settled on her lungs, and within the year she died of consumption.

A stout, strong man was working in a garden in May; feeling a little tired about noon, he sat down in the shade of the house and fell asleep; he waked up chilly; inflamation of the lungs followed, ending, after two years of great suffering, in consumption. On opening his chest, there was such an extensive decay, that the yellow matter was scooped out by the cupful.

A Boston ship-owner, while on the deck of one of his vessels, thought he would "lend a hand" in some emergency; and pulling off his coat, worked with a will, until he perspired freely, when he sat down to rest a while, enjoying the delicious breeze from the sea. On attempting to rise, he found himself unable, and was so stiff in his joints, that he had to be carried home and put to bed, which he did not leave until the end of two years, when he was barely able to hobble down to the wharf on crutches.

A lady, after being unusually busy all day, found herself heated and tired toward sundown of a summer's day. She concluded she would rest herself by taking a drive to town in an open vehicle. The ride made her uncomfortably cool, but she warmed herself up by an hour's shopping, when she turned homeward; it being late in the evening, she found herself more decidedly chilly than before. At midnight she had pneumonia, (inflamation of the lungs,) and in three months had the ordinary symptoms of confirmed consumption.

A lady of great energy of character lost her cook, and had to take her place for four days; the kitchen was warm, and there was a draft of air through it. When the work was done, warm and weary, she went to her chamber and laid down on the bed to rest herself. This operation was repeated several times a day. On the fifth day she had an attack of lung fever; at the end of six months she was barely able to leave her chamber, only to find herself suffering with all the more prominent symptoms of confirmed consumption; such as quick pulse, night and morning cough, night-sweats, debility, short breath, and falling away.

Multitudes of women lose health and life every year, in one of two ways; by busying themselves in a warm kitchen until weary, and then throwing themselves on a bed or sofa, without covering, and perhaps in a room without fire; or by removing the outer clothing, and perhaps changing the dress for a more common one, as soon as they enter the house after a walk or a shopping. The rule should be invariable to go at once to a warm room and keep on all the clothing, at least for five or ten minutes, until the forehead is perfectly dry. In all weathers, if you have to walk and ride on any occasion, do the riding first.—Hall's Journal of Health.

PRESERVATION OF THE TEETH

Horace Walpole says (Letters, vol. iii., p. 286:)—"Use a little bit of alum twice or thrice in a week, no bigger than half your nail, till it has all dissolved in your mouth, and then spit it out. This has fortified my teeth, so that they are as strong as the pen of Junius. I learned it of Mrs. Grosvenor, who had not a speck in her teeth till her death." Do not let your brushes be too hard, as they are likely to irritate the the gums and injure the enamel. Avoid too frequent use of tooth powder, and be very cautious what kind you buy, as many are prepared with destructive acids. Those who brush their teeth carefully and thoroughly with tepid water and a soft brush (cold water should never be used, for it chills and injures the nerves) have no occasion to use powder. Should any little incrustation (tartar) appear on the sides or on the back of the teeth, which illness and very often the constant eating of sweatmeats, fruit and made dishes containing acids will cause, put a little magnesia on your brush, and after two or thee applications it will remove it.

While treating on the care of teeth, which is a subject of the highest importance to those who have young families, and in fact every one who wishes to preserve them, I beg to remind my readers that as the period generally occupied by sleep is calculated to be about (at least) six hours out of the twenty-four, it would greatly promote the healthy maintenance of the priceless pearls whose loss or decay so greatly influences our appearance and our comfort, if we were to establish the habit of carefully cleaning them with a soft brush before going to bed. The small particles of food clogging the gums impede circulation, generate tartar and caries, and affect the breath. Think of an amalgamation of cheese, flesh, sweetmeats, fruit, etc., in a state of decomposition, remaining wedged between our teeth for six or seven hours, yet how few ever take the trouble to attend to this certain cause of toothache, discoloration, and decay, entailing the miseries of scaling, plugging, extraction, and the crowning horror—false teeth?—Godey's Ladies' Book.

SALT NECESSARY TO HEALTH.—Dr. Trall says, "All kinds of food contain portions of salt, and in these minute quantities it is salutary. In disordered states of the alimentary canal, from improper food, worms, etc., salt is an invaluable medicine, to which all animals will resort by instinct." J. S. WHITE.

For catarrh in the head, use a snuff compounded of one part camphor gum, two parts salt.

LINES.

How oft have many learned divines
Sinful and vainly taught,
That God by outward rites designs
To cleanse from every fault.

They tell you babes are purged from sins,
Regen'rate, born anew;
But soon as active life begins,
What do they all pursue?

May no such fallacy deceive
The children, Lord, we pray;
But let them first repent, believe,
And choose the narrow way.

May they receive the inward grace,
Then have the outward sign,
And ever show in every place
That they are wholly thine.

Nor other's act, nor their own deed,
For cleansing will avail;
Thy Spirit, gracious God, they need,
His power can never fail.

When they with all the heart believe,
When Christ is known and prized,
Let them the sacred rite receive,
And be indeed baptized,—

Wholly immersed beneath the stream,
Thence may they joyful rise,
And Christ and grace be all their theme,
Till they meet him in the skies.

"MINISTRATION OF DEATH." "Ministration of the Spirit."—No. 4.

PAUL AND THE THEATRE.

Paul's next attempt to speak to the people was to go into a theatre (19: 30–61). But in this he failed, as his friends would not permit him to do it, "advising him not to venture into the theatre. Some therefore said one thing, and some another; for the assembly was confused, and the greater part did not know why they were come together. And they pushed Alexander out of the crowd, the Jews thrusting him forward." When the town clerk, or recorder, finally succeeded in quieting the crowd, "he dismissed the assembly." "After the tumult was allayed, Paul, having summoned the disciples," "departed to go into Macedonia (20: 1). And he went into Greece, and "remained three months." But "a plot being laid for him by the Jews, as he was about to sail into Syria, he resolved to return through Macedonia." And when he was in Troas, we find Paul holding his meeting on "the FIRST day of the WEEK," in an "upper room," in the "third story," instead of a Jewish synagogue. Now let the reader remember that the meeting held at Troas was on the first day of the week (sabbaton), and not on the seventh day of "sabbaton." It was not a night (Greek, nux) meeting exclusively; as certain ones would have us believe, so as to make it appear that Paul "journeyed" (?) on the first day of the week. But it was a day (heemeran) meeting, commenced on the first day of the week (sabbaton), and not the first night. Having the meeting continued through the first day, and through the second night; and thus Paul "journeyed" on the second day of the week. But, says the objector, the word sabbaton, rendered week, has nothing to do with this matter; and the word "day" is not found in the original, where it is rendered "first day of the week," in our common version.

To meet these objections, we will here introduce a criticism as found in "Both Sides," pp. 118–9:

"It is evident that the word sabbaton sometimes means the whole week. How, then, shall we determine when it has this meaning? Easily enough. Robinson says that it has this meaning 'after numerals denoting the days of the week.' We now inquire, Does the word sabbaton, in those places where the expression, 'first day of the week,' occurs in the New Testament, follow a numeral adjective denoting the day of the week? We answer, Yes, in every instance. Then no one can deny, without discarding all authority, that in these instances sabbaton means week, and the translation of our common version is correct. . . . One instance will suffice for the whole, and we will take the first one, Matt. 28, 1. The words are, mian sabbaton (pronounced with long o, as in tone). Mian is the numeral adjective meaning one, or according to a Hebraism, 'first.' It agrees with day, understood. Sabbaton is in the genitive plural, literally answering to the English words, 'of the week.' So we have, as plainly as language can say it, 'first day of the week.' . . . The word mian being in the feminine gender shows that the noun understood, with which it agrees, is a feminine noun. And there is no word which can be introduced to supply the ellipsis, except the word which the translators of our Bible have supplied, namely, heemeran, day, which renders the sense complete, and being a feminine noun, answers to the feminine adjective, mian, and makes the construction harmonious and perfect. We accordingly find in the margin of the Greek Testament, a reference from the word mian, saying, "heemeran understood." And we are forced to the conclusion that Greenfield, Robinson, and Liddell and Scott, in their lexicons, and the forty-seven learned men of England who made our version of the New Testament, are correct in their translation."

"So we have, as plainly as language can say it," that Paul did hold his meeting at "Troas," on "the first day of the week"—"Both Sides" itself being one of our witnesses.

THE DAY CHANGED ACCORDING TO THE LAW AND THE TESTIMONY.

Has the first day of the week been set apart, by divine sanction, to be observed in place of the seventh day, as the Sabbath? Has God authorized this change? Great stress is laid here upon the production of some express precept; declaring in so many words that Christ made, or directed this change. It is said—"Give us your text"—"give us your text"—"To the law and to the testimony;" is the supposed unanswerable demand. Yet, notwithstanding this, "to the law and to the testimony" we will go. In doing so, we will adduce three forms of the argument.

1. If we find an express precept for such a change, then we have "the law." If we find in the history of Christ and his early disciples, distinct traces of a corresponding position, then we have "the testimony;" and in the two united we have the evidence of "the law and testimony."

2. If we find the express precepts affirming the right of such a change, we have "the law." If we find, then, actual traces of such a change in the practice, of those who had this right, we again have "the testimony;" and in these two united, we again have the evidence of "the law and testimony."

3. If we cannot find any express precept of either kind, yet if we can trace the fact of the actual change, through witness after witness, from the apostles and early christians to the present time, then, again, we have "the testimony;" and in the practice of the apostles and primitive disciples of Christ, we have the indisputable proof, that such a change was never made by them, without the authority, or sanction, of their divine Master. Hence, in this way, we again, in the end, obtain the evidence of "law and testimony" both. Our appeal, then, is "to the law and to the testimony."

* The patriarchs, for the first 2500 years of the world, had no express precept for keeping a Sabbath; and we do not pretend that we have any express precept, or passage, saying in so many words that the change in question was made by Christ, or the apostles; and hence, we pass the first form of the argument. But (2). That Christ had a right, to change the Sabbath, appears in the fact that "the Son of man is Lord of the Sabbath day," and we therefore introduce him as our first witness. If he claimed the right to regulate the Sabbath generally, and thus free it from the traditions of men, and also a right to change the days on which the Sabbath should be held; we here then have "the law." Christ's example, or actual conduct, will give us his "testimony." What then was his example? Before his death and resurrection, he carefully observed the seventh-day Sabbath, according to the true spirit of that institution. After this period, we never find him observing the seventh day; but he especially honored and observed "THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK" (sabbaton), as a day for meeting with his disciples.

Luke informs us (Acts 1: 3) that after His resurrection he appeareth to his disciples at different times for the space of "forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." At some of their interviews during this forty days, among other things "pertaining to the kingdom of God," Christ either authorized a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, or he did not. If he did not, the reason is found in these words—"I have many things to say, but you cannot bear them now" (John 16: 12, 13). If therefore Christ himself did not make the change during this period of forty days, it must be because it was reserved to be done by the apostles, when the "Spirit of truth" should come; for Christ had said, "He will guide you into all truth." The apostles knew what "seemed good to the Holy Spirit," (Acts 15: 28) and also to them, and hence said to the disciples, we shall "lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things," etc. We therefore are to look for the first decisive indications of this change to the apostles and their history, rather than to the conduct and history of Christ himself. But suppose Christ did authorize this change of days, in those interviews during the forty days; still it must be made known to the world through the apostles, for Christ never appeared publicly to the world after his resurrection. And what he said to his apostles during this forty days we know but little about. In Luke 24: 27, it is said: "And beginning at Moses, and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." And in Acts 1: 3, we find he was "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." After Christ's resurrection, the old "dispensation of death," was virtually at an end, and the "dispensation of the Spirit" was fully introduced; and therefore we never find Christ in the synagogues or meeting with his disciples on the seventh day after this. But for religious purposes, for worship, he did meet them on "the first day of the week." See Matt. 28: 9; Luke 24: 18–49; John 20: 13–23. At the close of this last interview Christ said, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained."

The Holy Spirit was to be to the apostles more than Christ himself, and was the one to lead them "into all truth," and qualify them for the work to which Christ had commissioned them. The Spirit was to direct them in the exercise of their authority to instruct, and to regulate the order, the institutions, and the worship of the church. In all these respects the "Spirit" was to be the same to them as a present Christ. Yea, more; for Christ had said, "I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away," etc., (John 16: 7, 13); so that under the Spirit's guidance, the instruction to the disciples would be more correct, and the order, institutions and worship they should prescribe for the church, would be attended with greater authority than if they were under the immediate, personal guidance of Christ himself. And so "when the day of Pentecost was fully come," the Holy Spirit taught them "to speak with other tongues;" this being their public anointing to the work which Christ had begun, and which now devolved on them to carry out and complete. And be it remembered that this wonderful and important work transpired upon "the first day of the week"—THE LORD'S DAY." The immediate result of this anointing was, that the apostles, and especially Peter, preached with such power, that "three thousand souls" were added to them on that day. And thus was "the first day of the week," again honored and blessed of Him who was the Head of the church and "Lord of the sabbath day."

Thus on "the first day of the week," we have seen that in the first instance we have an account of Christ's resurrection—the exposition of the Scriptures concerning himself—the evidence of the identity of his resurrected body—the commission to the disciples and their investment with apostolic authority; and in the second instance, that of Pentecost—the mission of the Holy Spirit, with all of the official recognition and endowment which it involved. All these occurrences, on the first day of the week, are just what we should expect them to be, on the supposition that Christ intended to honor the first day of the week, above all other days—in the "dispensation of the Spirit"—as the day for religious worship. Why should all these events transpire on the first day, except Christ, the great Head of the church, intended—as "Lord of the Sabbath"—to institute a new day as the Sabbath for his people, thenceforth to be distinguished from other days as "THE LORD'S DAY?" DESTRUCTION OF GOOD.

"One sinner destroyeth much good."

The world abounds in sinners, and there is a great variety of them; high and low, rich and poor, the honored and the lowly, alike have their share. But, alas! that there should be any in the church of God. Strange that any professing godliness should destroy much good; and yet there are those who from selfish motives hinder the work of the Lord. Brother, sister, it is not necessary for you to commit any great sin to become a sinner in this sense; but a few words from you in exhortation, or even in prayer, may throw a chill over a meeting, hinder the free course of the Spirit, and thus destroy much good. Every one feels that you are not in unison with the rest of God's people, that your influence is in an opposite direction, though you may profess much love to God and his cause.

We are responsible for the influence we exert. We may by our discouraging words hold the work of God in check for months together; and what account shall we have to render? Perhaps souls are lost by our willfulness or obstinacy.

The Judge is coming. Are we seeking the unity of the Spirit? Are we seeking the salvation of those around us, or to build up self? Or have we a theory to sustain, though all around us perish? What is our calling, brethren and sisters? Does the Lord require nothing at our hand? Arouse ye, one and all.

"Let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake go abroad."

CHRISTIAN UNION.

"Sectarianism a Waste of Moral Power."

NUMBER EIGHT.

"He who has the truth and keeps it,
Keeps what not to him belongs;
But performs a selfish action,
That his fellow-mortal wrongs."

A writer in the Methodist Quarterly of 1845, reviewing a book on the evils of sectarianism, says:

"The divisions, bickerings and sectarian prejudices of the Protestant churches, with respect to each other, can never be viewed, by the sincere friend of a spiritual christianity, with any other feelings than those of unmingled sorrow and painful regret. What a pity that the body of Christ should be thus divided. That his seamless garment should be so needlessly rent asunder, and that he should be thus cruelly wounded in the house of his friends! Nothing, perhaps, has done so much to strengthen the hands of the skeptic, to render religion inefficient, and to array prejudice against it, as that want of christian union, which one author so pointedly and eloquently condemns. It has been the Bohon Upas of the American churches, blasting, by its dreadful, malign effluvia, the fruits of righteousness, and spreading mildew and death, over the heritage of the Lord."

It is true, this warfare, like that in the world's military battle-fields, is modified and tamed by the advancing civilization of the age. Men are ashamed of some of its more barbarous exhibitions, just as the Russians or the Allies would be ashamed to disregard a flag of truce, or massacre their prisoners. But the war still goes on, and forts are built, ditches dug, mines laid and stratagems resorted to, in the theological as well as in the civil field. Courtesies are often exchanged by opposing cohorts in the ecclesiastical as well as in the military field, previous to, or during an engagement; but the bulwarks of opposing churches, like the spires of belligerent castles, rising in each village and hamlet, are as significant of a smouldering warfare, as was a Feudal landscape in the palmiest days of the Norman Barons.

How terrible is the thought, that all Christendom is plunged into this sin! that religious leaders have made the unthinking people believe it to be a virtue! These leaders are urging on their dupes to spend all their strength in committing this sin. Do not let us be misunderstood. We do not say that all who commit this sin are guilty. The great mass do it ignorantly. But this does not destroy the fact, that the practice itself is sinful.

How fearful is the responsibility of those leaders, who ought to know better, and who continue this practice! They have brought the curse and blight of party hate upon all Christendom. They have so distorted God's religion, as to fill the world with infidelity. They have cast the spirit of Christ out of his church, in the persons of the weak but honest members. Faction, under priestly guides, like the beast of the Apocalypse, has trod all christian graces under her demoniac feet. Shame marks the brow of church history, because divisions and bickerings, and the rise and fall of rival partizans guide her pen. While civil history is but a spirit of national robbery, blood and death, ecclesiastical history is her consort in wickedness over the whole field of time. All the bloody wars of earth, have grown out of the indulgence of the same spirit which builds the sects of modern Christendom. That spirit is tamed and restricted by the civilization of the age, but is not exorcised. How demoralizing is such a crime! When civil government is broken into factions, headed by civil chieftains, how speedily is the state ruined! When the family breaks out into open divisions, how soon all domestic peace and virtue take their flight! But how much more ruinous is this spirit and are these practices in the church of God! It is, professedly, the great, harmonizing power of the earth. It was designed to bring order out of chaos, and moral music out of discord. But, now, under sectarian leaders, it begins its work in every place by religious disorder, and breathes into the heart of every community a new occasion of discord, by introducing sectarian points of controversy. In this wicked work, its ministers lead off. Their first mission to every place, where two of a different faction meet, is to divide the good men and women into opposing parties. Could the devil devise a more fatal scheme for ruining religion? Ah! the day will come, when this chapter of human history will appear to all the world as it does to us,—the darkest picture in the book of time.

As God is true to the redemption of the race, these sectarian scales will yet fall from the eyes of good men. The intelligence of the age has lifted the minds of the people to an elevation, where their disgust at some of the worst forms of sectarianism cannot be suppressed. The feeling against this low, religious vice, rises from year to year. The sects are obedient to public opinion, and so they begin to soften down their ancient quarrels, out of regard to appearances. But the subject is not to be thus disposed of. The minds of the masses if once thoroughly aroused to its enormities, will not be satisfied with a modification of the evil, but will demand its extirpation. D. F. NEWTON.

A SINGULAR CONVERSION.

A passage from "The Life of Hiram Munger."

Coming home from a long tour all worn down, I took my wife, and started to visit her friends, and rest awhile. On our way we heard of a protracted meeting on that road, and thought we would stop a short time. Sister H. was lecturing. After the lecture, liberty was given to pray and exhort as the Spirit moved. Some prayed; but it seemed to be a dead set. When the man of the house, being a preacher, requested me to take hold, I told him that I was worn out, and was going further that night, and must be off. But he was very urgent, and I told him that the meeting was prayed to death, and that such prayers as were then being offered would kill any meeting. The sister prayed for everything that she could think of, and then repeated them over again. I told Bro. P. that I would stop a little while, and make a few remarks on long praying, etc. I got tired of waiting for her to finish, and cried out, "Lord, bless that sister now, so that she can stop praying!" She stopped, and I talked short and plain. I told them what killed the meeting, and then we started a class-meeting. I spoke to some whom I knew did not enjoy religion, and was pointed in my remarks; I felt that something might be done. The Spirit of God began to move, and the wicked and triflers began to scatter, and, in a short time, we had a good meeting.

As I was going, for I had stayed much longer than I had expected, we got into the entry, and we saw a young woman making sport of some of the expressions I made use of in the meeting. I felt like speaking to her, but it was late, and we had two miles further to go, so we started; but I wanted to speak to her, and I knew it would take but a moment, so I left my wife standing at the door, and that was the last I saw of her till the next day, for here began a work that took nearly all night to finish. I spoke to the woman, and will give the language as nearly as possible between us.

"Young woman, do you enjoy religion?"
"No, sir."
"Did you ever?"
"No, sir."
"Do you ever expect to?"
"No, sir."
"Do you believe in the christian religion?"
"Yes, sir."
"Do you believe you will go to hell without it?"
"Yes, sir."

She was so prompt, that I hardly knew what question to put next; but I could not give it up. I saw that all were still; they knew what I had to contend with, but I did not. Next question: "Do you expect to sin against such light, and then go to hell after all?"

Answer was very prompt—"Yes, sir."

"Do you believe that God will answer the prayers of his people?"

"Yes, sir, I do."

"Well, inasmuch as you expect to go to hell, would it not be appropriate to pray to God to take you away this night, rather than let you go on in sin any longer, as your torment would be worse?"

"Yes, sir, was the horrid and unexpected reply.

I paused and trembled. "Will you go and kneel down for me to pray?"

"Yes, sir." And she did.

This was a trying time to all present, saint and sinner.

I commenced praying, and telling the Lord what he had heard said by us both, and prayed that, if it were possible to save this sinner, he would do it now. But, if not, to answer prayer. At this moment, she cried out for mercy. Others knelt down, and God took the work into his hands, and she soon came out happy, and praised the Lord. She went to work for others, and God blessed a number of them. After we closed, she embraced her father and mother, rejoicing in what God had done for her. This was the first time that I learnt that she was Elder P.'s daughter. It always astonishes me when I think of this scene. I have talked this over with Azuba since, and she says that God plucked her as a brand from the fire, for her breath had stopped, and she would have died if she had not cried out before I had spoken the next work. This was the work of God, and it was marvelous in our eyes. I saw her father and sister recently, and they told me that Azuba was trying to live religion. This circumstance took place at Three Rivers, in Palmer, Mass.

ENEMIES OF THE CHURCH.

"Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you."

We can believe that when the world is spoken of in the sense of the above text, it only includes that class of individuals previously named, extending no further than unto all who make no pretensions to the christian religion; for there are many who claim to be true "worshipers of God," who are bitter "enemies of the cross"; who cherish the most deadly hatred towards God's people; by whom every lover of Jesus has been reviled, slandered, and many with cruel and inhuman treatment. This may seem strange, but it is no less true; past history as well as the Book of books affirm it, as also the spirit of this our own day.

Look, for example, at the treatment of Cain, the first worshiper, toward his brother Abel, in whom was embodied the holy and righteous principle of the church. Here we see the spirit of the true and false church in their infancy, the first and early types of the same. See the disposition which was made of the beloved patriarch Joseph by his pious brethren. Mark the conduct of Saul, the anointed, toward the holy David. Thus the holy prophets were ever persecuted in all their arduous labors, and from the hands of a hypocritical multitude.

What class formed the most inveterate enemies of our beloved Redeemer? Who met him on every turn, constantly bringing false charges against him, impugning his motives, and endeavoring to "catch him in his words"? And who was it that had him at last formally condemned and really put to death? Was it not those who claimed to be God's favorites, and wholly devoted to his service, the high priest himself being the most prominent actor in the scene? And from whence did the apostles meet with the most deadly opposition; and by whom were they persecuted in various ways? Was it by the really barbarous and uncivilized nations? No, verily; but from those who pretended to be very pious and to possess a most vehement zeal for God. And Paul confirms the same thus: "But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now."—Gal. 4: 29. And need we expect any amendment in these last days of "false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good"? We think not. And awful as it is to see the sinner a willing captive to his lusts, openly rebelling against an infinitely good Creator, it is still more awful to see those "having a form of godliness . . . denying the power thereof." 2 Tim. 3: 5. The world, in the general acceptation of the term, has never been so great an enemy to the church as those false professors who profess to be alive, while dead. Then "marvel not" at this hatred of the world, understood in the sense we have endeavored to portray it, but be encouraged in the violence of the storm and the seeming darkness of night.

Be thou my strength, O God of power;
Then, tho' winds blow and thunders roar,
I'll still thy faithful witness be,
'Tis fixed I all can do for thee.

Persecution will come upon us unsought. We have no occasion to court it; all we have to do is, to avoid that which is not of God, go not with the multitude, but stand out in bold relief with the glorious Bible in hand, the love of God shed abroad in our hearts, through the Holy Ghost given unto all that obey him. We must be found in "the Way, the Truth, and the Life," advocating that truth to the best of our ability, and then, be assured, tribulation will come; then we shall realize the truth of what Paul declared to them at Antioch, that "we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God."—Acts 14: 22. "For unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake."—Phil. 1: 29. "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."—2 Tim. 3: 12. Only occupy this position, live godly, work righteousness, show to the world that you are really on God's side and his truth, then you may with just as much hope of success expect to escape persecution as you would be likely to evade drowning if you were to leap into the midst of the sea.

Tribulation to the church is inseparable with duty; they are associates, and go hand in hand, and are designed by our heavenly Father as one of those instrumentalities of purification which shall work "for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." We have the promise that, "if we suffer with him" (Christ), then we shall reign with him—"be glorified together"; and that "the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—2 Cor. 4, 17; Rom. 8: 17, 18. And all this is "that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer."—2 Thess. 1: 5.

Then "marvel not," ye afflicted and persecuted ones, but be ye strengthened, cheered and comforted on your way by the many promises of God, and of our Savior in his Sermon on the Mount,—"Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."—Matt. 5: 10–12.

How delightful to dwell upon this language of our great Deliverer and coming King! Let us treasure it in our hearts as a rich legacy, and may we be enabled, like the "apostle to the Gentiles," to "glory in tribulation," that the power of Christ may rest upon us, "knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope." Therefore, endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."—Rom. 5: 3–5; 2 Tim. 2: 3. "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you."

Beloved, persevere in your righteous course, knowing that the great day of reckoning hasteth greatly when there will be a "time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time"; at which time, blessed be God, his "people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book"; when "the wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many (not to the false fables of men, but) to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever." Glorious promise!

"DESIGNS."

Have you not sometimes been pained by the manner in which some preachers and writers try to appear "wise above what is written" on the subject of the "designs of God"? Such preaching seems to me a near approach to blasphemy,—though we would hope in charity that the preacher is unconscious of it. It may be a habit into which he has fallen, but it is a bad habit and should be abandoned. Let us render the point plain by illustration.

A certain writer says his "original plan failing . . . he devises another scheme," etc. This might be said of the plans of man, but who can prove that the original plan of GOD ever failed? Did not HE see the "end from the beginning?"

When men standing in the place of teachers, become inflated with their own importance, and speak great swelling words of vanity, they tell us how very differently things result from the original design of the Deity. But the Scriptures teach that the ways of HIM who rules above are past finding out, and we can safely trust that none of his plans will ever fail. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

BUTTER-MAKING.

Four years ago I was placed in charge of the Oneida Community Dairy, then numbering only between fifty and sixty cows. It was to me an entirely new department of industry, and I endeavored to make amends for my ignorance by investigation and experiment. I diligently read all the articles on butter-making which I could find in the old and new files of the Country Gentleman, Genessee Farmer, American Agriculturist, and other agricultural papers, and made many experiments, in the course of a twelve-month, with varied success. With the aid of these investigations and experiments, I finally developed a plan of butter-making which produced very satisfactory results, and which I am satisfied is adapted to the production of excellent butter at all seasons of the year.

NECESSARY CONDITIONS.

Nearly all authorities on butter-making agree, that every thing used in and about the dairy should be kept clean, free from taint of every description; that the milk should be set in a light and airy place, and be kept at a temperature ranging from fifty-five to sixty degrees; that the milk should be frequently examined, in order that the cream may be removed in the proper time (if the cream remains on the milk too long it loses its best flavor;) that the time which milk should stand before skimming depends upon many causes, suce as the season, state of the atmosphere, feed of the cows, etc.; that after the cream is removed from the milk, it may be kept before churning a short time in nearly the same temperature as the milk of the dairy; that if occasionally stirred the churning-process will be facilitated.

CHURNING AND PACKING.

Have the cream about sixty degrees when churned—better in summer at fifty-six deg.—as soon as the butter comes wash it in several waters (in ice-water in summer,) i. e. until the buttermilk is all out, and the water in which the butter is placed is perfectly clear. Then salt it (1 oz. to the lb.,) and work the salt in evenly with a ladle or butter-worker. Great pains must be taken to work the salt into the butter evenly, otherwise it will look streaked and its taste will vary. Then pack down immediately, and cover with brine. This method of packing butter more effectually excludes the atmosphere from the butter than any other plan I have seen; and this appears to me an essential point in the art of butter-preserving. I think it will be found much easier to make good butter than to keep it good.

WORKING BUTTER.

I judge that more butter is injured in the process of "working," as it is termed, than by any other means. It is rightly assumed that the buttermilk must be entirely separated from the butter; but this may be effected in various ways. If performed with the ladle or roller the grains or globules of the butter are very likely to be seriously injured, rendering the butter as a whole salvy or oily, and greatly damaging the flavor. Besides this method of freeing the butter from the buttermilk often takes away the brine as well as milk, leaving the butter too fresh. Then more salt is added, which will remain in the butter, partly held in solution, and partly not, unless the already over-worked butter is put through the rolling and ladleing process again. Hence my conclusion that the better way is to have the butter come hard, and with little buttermilk (which can always be done if one has the right sort of churn, and a supply of ice,) and wash out the buttermilk with cold water (the colder the better,) and afterwards work the butter only sufficiently to have the salt evenly distributed through it.

MISCELLANEOUS REMARKS.

There may be methods of butter-making and preserving, superior to that indicated above; and therefore I rejoice in the present discussion of the subject. I have, for instance, heard it objected, that the washing of butter takes away some of its sweetness and virtue. I am not prepared to deny this assertion. But I am certain that very good butter may be made and preserved for a long period by the plan described above.

Butter, I am satisfied, is also often injured by remaining too long a time after it is churned before it is packed in tub or jar. It should be packed as soon as may be after the buttermilk is separated from it, and it is properly salted. Never wait to put it through a second and third working.

The butter sent to market from small dairies is not generally so good as from large ones—partly owing perhaps to the fact that the former cannot fill a tub at one packing, and the butter in the partly-filled tub is not properly excluded from the air by a covering of salt or brine. This remark is of course more particularly applicable to butter-making during the summer months. I think the butter of small dairies would in many cases be improved by the use of smaller sized tubs or firkins.

It must not be forgotten in our philosophising on this subject, that the quality of feed has much influence upon the quality of butter produced. The grass or other products of the soil are more nourishing, and better adapted to the production of rich, sweet milk, in some portions of the country than in others.

I anticipate that the best system of butter-making which can be devised, will manufacture butter directly from the milk of the dairy, thus avoiding much of the labor and trouble incidental to the methods now generally practiced, producing a superior article, and obtaining a greater quantity from the same amount of milk.—The Circular.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

RESTLESS NIGHTS.

Some persons "toss and tumble" half the night, and get up in the morning weary, unrefreshed and dispirited, wholly unfit, either in body or mind, for the duties of the day; they are not only incapacitated for business, but are often rendered so ungracious in their manners, so irritable and fretful, as to spread a gloom and a cloud over the whole household. To be be able to go to bed and be in a sound sleep, an unconscious deliciousness, in five minutes, but enjoyed in its remembrance, is a great happiness, an incalculable blessing, and one for which the most sincere and affectionate thanks should habitually go up to that beneficent Providence which vouchsafes the same through the instrumentalities of a wise and self-denying attention to the laws of our being.

Restless nights as to persons apparently in good health, arise from, first, an overloaded stomach; second, from worldly care; third, from want of muscular activities proportioned to the needs of the system. Few will have restless nights who take dinner at mid-day, and nothing after that except a piece of cold bread and a sip of soft pure water; anything beyond that, as cake, pie, chipped beef, preserves, dough-nuts, and the like, only tempt nature to eat when there is a really no call for it, thus engendering dyspepsia and all its train of evils.

Worldly care. For those who cannot sleep from the unsatisfactory condition of their affairs; who feel as if they were going behind-hand; or that they are about to encounter great losses, whether from their own remissness, the perfidy of friends, or unavoidable circumstances, we have a deep and sincere sympathy. To such we say: Live hopefully for better days ahead, and meanwhile strive diligently, persistently, and with a brave heart to that end.

But the more common cause of restless nights is, that exercise has not been taken to make the body tired enough to demand sound sleep. Many spoil all their sleep by attempting to force more on nature than she requires. Few persons will fail to sleep soundly, while they do sleep, if they avoid sleeping in the daytime, and will go to bed at a regular hour, and heroically resolve to get up the moment they wake, whether it is at two, four, or six o'clock in the morning. In less than a week each one will find how much sleep his system requires; thereafter give it that, and no more.—Hall's Journal of Health.

CHECKING PERSPIRATION.

If while perspiring, or while something warmer than usual, from exercise or a heated room, there is a sudden exposure in stillness to a still, cold air, or to a raw, damp atmosphere, or to a draft, whether at an open window or door or street-corner, an inevitable result is a violent and instantaneous closing of the pores of the skin, by which waste and impure matters, which were making their way out of the system, are compelled to seek an exit through some other channel, and break through some weaker part, not the natural one, and harm to that part is the result. The idea is presented by saying that the cold has settled in that part. To illustrate:

A lady was about getting into a small boat to cross the Delaware; but wishing first to get an orange at a fruit-stand, she ran up the bank of the river, and on her return to the boat found herself much heated, for it was summer, but there was a little wind on the water, and the clothing soon felt cold to her; the next morning she had a severe cold, which settled on her lungs, and within the year she died of consumption.

A stout, strong man was working in a garden in May; feeling a little tired about noon, he sat down in the shade of the house and fell asleep; he waked up chilly; inflamation of the lungs followed, ending, after two years of great suffering, in consumption. On opening his chest, there was such an extensive decay, that the yellow matter was scooped out by the cupful.

A Boston ship-owner, while on the deck of one of his vessels, thought he would "lend a hand" in some emergency; and pulling off his coat, worked with a will, until he perspired freely, when he sat down to rest a while, enjoying the delicious breeze from the sea. On attempting to rise, he found himself unable, and was so stiff in his joints, that he had to be carried home and put to bed, which he did not leave until the end of two years, when he was barely able to hobble down to the wharf on crutches.

A lady, after being unusually busy all day, found herself heated and tired toward sundown of a summer's day. She concluded she would rest herself by taking a drive to town in an open vehicle. The ride made her uncomfortably cool, but she warmed herself up by an hour's shopping, when she turned homeward; it being late in the evening, she found herself more decidedly chilly than before. At midnight she had pneumonia, (inflamation of the lungs,) and in three months had the ordinary symptoms of confirmed consumption.

A lady of great energy of character lost her cook, and had to take her place for four days; the kitchen was warm, and there was a draft of air through it. When the work was done, warm and weary, she went to her chamber and laid down on the bed to rest herself. This operation was repeated several times a day. On the fifth day she had an attack of lung fever; at the end of six months she was barely able to leave her chamber, only to find herself suffering with all the more prominent symptoms of confirmed consumption; such as quick pulse, night and morning cough, night-sweats, debility, short breath, and falling away.

Multitudes of women lose health and life every year, in one of two ways; by busying themselves in a warm kitchen until weary, and then throwing themselves on a bed or sofa, without covering, and perhaps in a room without fire; or by removing the outer clothing, and perhaps changing the dress for a more common one, as soon as they enter the house after a walk or a shopping. The rule should be invariable to go at once to a warm room and keep on all the clothing, at least for five or ten minutes, until the forehead is perfectly dry. In all weathers, if you have to walk and ride on any occasion, do the riding first.—Hall's Journal of Health.

PRESERVATION OF THE TEETH

Horace Walpole says (Letters, vol. iii., p. 286:)—"Use a little bit of alum twice or thrice in a week, no bigger than half your nail, till it has all dissolved in your mouth, and then spit it out. This has fortified my teeth, so that they are as strong as the pen of Junius. I learned it of Mrs. Grosvenor, who had not a speck in her teeth till her death." Do not let your brushes be too hard, as they are likely to irritate the the gums and injure the enamel. Avoid too frequent use of tooth powder, and be very cautious what kind you buy, as many are prepared with destructive acids. Those who brush their teeth carefully and thoroughly with tepid water and a soft brush (cold water should never be used, for it chills and injures the nerves) have no occasion to use powder. Should any little incrustation (tartar) appear on the sides or on the back of the teeth, which illness and very often the constant eating of sweatmeats, fruit and made dishes containing acids will cause, put a little magnesia on your brush, and after two or thee applications it will remove it.

While treating on the care of teeth, which is a subject of the highest importance to those who have young families, and in fact every one who wishes to preserve them, I beg to remind my readers that as the period generally occupied by sleep is calculated to be about (at least) six hours out of the twenty-four, it would greatly promote the healthy maintenance of the priceless pearls whose loss or decay so greatly influences our appearance and our comfort, if we were to establish the habit of carefully cleaning them with a soft brush before going to bed. The small particles of food clogging the gums impede circulation, generate tartar and caries, and affect the breath. Think of an amalgamation of cheese, flesh, sweetmeats, fruit, etc., in a state of decomposition, remaining wedged between our teeth for six or seven hours, yet how few ever take the trouble to attend to this certain cause of toothache, discoloration, and decay, entailing the miseries of scaling, plugging, extraction, and the crowning horror—false teeth?—Godey's Ladies' Book.

SALT NECESSARY TO HEALTH.—Dr. Trall says, "All kinds of food contain portions of salt, and in these minute quantities it is salutary. In disordered states of the alimentary canal, from improper food, worms, etc., salt is an invaluable medicine, to which all animals will resort by instinct." J. S. WHITE.

For catarrh in the head, use a snuff compounded of one part camphor gum, two parts salt.

LONGING.

Longing for rest;
Yes, longing to be
From sin, and temptation,
And sorrow set free.

Longing for rest;
Yes, longing to share
The glory of Jesus,
And a crown to wear.

Longing for rest;
This world is so drear,
That time moves but slowly
While traveling here.

Longing for rest;
When trials are o'er,
And redemption we'll sing
On Canaan's fair shore.

Longing for rest;
O! when shall I see
The King in his beauty,
Who died on the tree?

Longing for rest;
When saints shall all sing
Hallelujah to God!
And hail him as King.

Longing for rest;
When the city shall come
Down from heaven to earth,
For the saints a sweet home.

SABBATH ARGUMENTS EXAMINED.

"THE COMMANDMENTS."

To prove that the seventh day Sabbath is enjoined on christians, various texts are quoted containing the phrase, "the commandments," with the claim that the ten commandments are meant, and consequently that the Sabbath commandment is included. But this claim that the phrase, "the commandments," refers to the original ten, no more nor less, is a false claim, as will be seen by the use made of it by the Savior. "And behold one came and said unto him, Good master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him, . . . if thou wilt enter into life keep THE COMMANDMENTS. And he saith unto him, Which? [Which commandments?] Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Matt. 19: 16–19.) Here Christ quotes one commandment that was never on the tables of stone among the ten, and he pronounces it a "commandment," among "THE commandments,"—thus annihilating the claim that the phrase "the commandments" has reference to the ten, no more nor less, and that consequently the fourth commandment is in this way enjoined. Five of these commandments were from the tables of stone, and the other was from Lev. 19: 18.

The fact that Christ himself, in telling what he himself meant by "the commandments," includes those that were never among the ten, is utterly subversive of the claim that just ten commandments are meant by the phrase. Either Christ was wrong in his use of the phrase, "the commandments," or it is wrong to insist that this phrase has exclusive reference to the ten commandments, and thus insist that the Sabbath commandment is made binding on christians. If Christ used the phrase correctly, it is folly to claim that it has reference only to the ten commandments, in the absence of a particle of proof, and in opposition to Christ, simply to make it appear that the seventh day Sabbath is enjoined upon us. "The commandments," both from the "tables" of the law, and from the "book" of the law, so far as congenial to the gospel plan, are quoted and sanctioned as being in harmony with the principles of the gospel; but never has the seventh day been thus represented as coinciding with the gospel arrangement. Those commandments enjoining the observance of days are never referred to as being in harmony with the "law of Christ."

"The commandments" that now receive divine sanction, omitting those of a ceremonial cast in the former age, include the following: "And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ" (1 John 2: 23), and God "now commandeth all men every where to repent" (Acts 17: 31), together with the Savior's "new commandment"; none of which were ever written on the tables of stone, and all of which belong to "the commandments" of this dispensation, in which catalogue the seventh-day Sabbath is never found. So this argument is unavailing. It is one thing to assert that the phrase "the commandments" refers only to the ten on the tables of stone (and the assertion, as we have seen, is contradicted by Christ), and quite another thing to prove the assertion. The commandments of the law include the ten, with the others; but the commandments of the gospel include all that are in harmony with the New Covenant principles, by enjoining them; but the seventh day is not thus included.

"THE LAW OF GOD."

Texts of Scripture containing the expression, "The law of God," are quoted, with the claim that reference is made to the writing on the tables of stone, in contradistinction to the "Law of Moses,"—that the ten commandments are the "Law of God," which can never be abrogated, while the balance of the law was the "law of Moses," and ended at the cross. The claim that this decalogue is an endless law, and adapted to the future world, as well as this, we have examined, and exposed its fallacy. If only the ten commandments were recognized as the "law of God," and if it were true that this law could never be abolished, then it would follow that the seventh day Sabbath, as an ingredient of this law, would still be obligatory; but upon the other hand, if something beside the ten commandments is included in the "law of God," and that law can never be abrogated, those ceremonial ingredients would also still be obligatory. There is no escape from this conclusion. Then it is a matter of interest to learn what is included in the "law of God," seeing the claim is made that it signifies the decalogue, in which the seventh day Sabbath is enjoined, and that the "law of God" can not be abolished. If the "law of God" can not be abolished, all of its component parts must still be observed, whether Sabbaths, sacrifices, or ceremonies. As we proceed we shall not only learn what is included in the "law of God," but also learn that the same thing which is styled the "law of Moses," is also styled the "law of God." "They spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the BOOK of the 'law of Moses.' . . . So they read in the BOOK of the 'law of God.'" (Neh. 8: 1–8.)

Here a certain "book" is mentioned, which is not only called the 'law of Moses,' but is plainly called "THE LAW OF GOD"; and now, if "the law of God" can never be abolished, the entire catalogue of requirements contained in this "book" are still in force; for there is no evading the fact that it is called "the law of God"; and among other things, "they found written in the law . . . that the children of Israel should dwell in booths in the feast of the seventh month." This law, which is called "the law of God," speaks of building "booths," and keeping "feasts," none of which things are written on the tables of stone—yet they are to be found in "the law of God," thus proving that something beside the tables, or ten commandments, is recognized as belonging to the "law of God"; and furthermore, if the "law of God" can never be abolished, these "feast" days and the building of "booths," with the other ceremonies, are still to be continued, and nothing is left to be nailed to the cross, for the entire "law of Moses" is called "the law of God," as we have proved, just as really as the ten commandments.

In 2 Chron. 31: 3, we read concerning "the morning and evening burnt offerings, and burnt offerings for the Sabbaths, and for the new moons, and for set feasts, as it is written in the law of the Lord." Nothing can be found on the tables of stone concerning the "burnt offerings," or "new moons," or "set feasts"; yet it is all "written in the law of the Lord," which proves that something is included in "the law of God" aside from the ten commandments; and moreover, if the "law of God" could not have ended at the cross, and been succeeded by a new law, these "burnt offerings," and "new moons," and "set feasts" are still to be adhered to.

Not only is the book of the law indiscriminately called the "law of Moses," and "the law of God," but the tables of the law are just as really called the "law of Moses" as the "law of God": "Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded him in HOREB for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments." (Mal. 4: 4.) Here the law which God made in "Horeb" is plainly called the "law of Moses." What law did God give in "Horeb"? The day thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in HOREB . . . he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone. And the Lord commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments. (Deut. 4: 10, 12, 13.)

Here we have the law brought to view which was given in "HOREB," and also the "statutes and judgments." Here are two things mentioned,—first, the law given in "Horeb"; secondly, the "statutes and judgments," which include all the ceremonial features of the law. This law given in Horeb, and written on the "tables of stone," is called "the law of Moses." No other law was ever given in Horeb aside from the decalogue, and the "statutes and judgments," which are also often styled the "law of Moses," but are not here referred to under that name, as they are distinctly mentioned in contradistinction to that which is here called the "law of Moses"—"with the statutes and judgments." So there is no evading the fact that the decalogue is styled the "law of Moses." This destroys the claim of two distinct laws, one styled the "law of Moses," and ending at the cross; the other styled the "law of God," and continuing in force,—for we have seen that the book of the law, and the tables of the law, are indiscriminately styled the law of God, and the law of Moses—being simply different departments of one law, which has been succeeded by a new law.

"THE LAW."

This phrase is played with amusingly by the advocates of the two-law system. Quote to them the statement that we are "not under the law, and this is disposed of by saying that reference is made to the ceremonial law; quote another statement concerning the phrase "the law," and it is applied to the moral law. Thus "the law" is sometimes made to mean one thing, and sometimes to mean another, just according to the necessities of an unscriptural theory. But the Scriptures apply the phrase "the law" to both departments—the moral and ceremonial—one law; and inspired men, in quoting from "the law," quote from the book and the tables in the same breath. Paul refers to "the law" in this manner: "He that loveth another hath fulfilled THE LAW. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet: and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself; . . . therefore love is the fulfilling of THE LAW." Rom. 13: 8–10.) Here Paul, in quoting from THE LAW, quotes from both the tables and the book,—thus establishing the fact that they both belong to "the law," and destroying the idea of two distinct laws. "The law" says, "Thou shalt not kill. . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "THE LAW," as far as founded on a prohibition of moral evil, although it had served its time out at the cross, is sanctioned as being in harmony with the gospel, and thus enjoined in this dispensation, being so far pronounced "holy," "just," "good," and "spiritual"; but those appendages pertaining to the observance of days, are not enjoined in the new arrangement. This is true both of the tables of the law, and the book of the law. The advocates of the seventh day theory deride the idea of having a law end, and after that incorporating a part of it into a new arrangement. This is true both of the tables of the law, and the book of the law. The advocates of the seventh day theory deride the idea of having a law end, and after that incorporating a part of it into a new arrangement, and think it absurd. But they find themselves involved in precisely the same dilemma, if indeed it is a dilemma. Let me fairly state their position:

1. They claim two laws in the Mosaic age.
2. They claim that the law of God was written on the tables of stone.
3. They claim that the law of Moses was written in a book.
4. They claim that the law of Moses ended at the cross.

Now Christ affirms that "the great commandment in the law" is this: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart. . . . And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Matt. 22: 36–39.) Now here are two "commandments of the law," and all admit they are now ingredients of the "law of Christ"; but they never belonged to the decalogue, and consequently, if there are but two laws, they belonged to the law that ended at the cross. When we are inquired of, Why do away with nine good commandments, to get rid of one bad one, and then enjoin the nine again? We inquire, Why do away with the whole Mosaic law, which contained "the great commandments," and then enforce these great commandments again? Thus they are caught in their own trap. According to their own claim, the Mosaic law ended at the cross; yet these "commandments" were in it. To dodge this point it is said, The spirit of these commandments was on the table of stone. This dodge cannot be allowed, for when the lawyer inquired, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Jesus replied, "What is WRITTEN in the law? How READEST thou? And he answering, said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, . . . and thy neighbor as thyself." And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right." (Luke 10: 25–28. Mark! these commandments were "written in the law," and could be read. They were never on the tables, but were recorded in Deut. 6: 5, and Lev. 19: 18. Beside all this, I deny that even the spirit of these commandments was ever on the tables of stone. A man may not love God with all the heart, and still omit to make idol gods, omit serving them, omit swearing, omit Sabbath breaking, omit to dishonor father or mother, omit stealing, omit committing adultery, omit coveting either his neighbor's wife or property; still not have a particle of love to God in his heart, being simply a moralist. Many moral Universalists may lay claim to all this. A man may neither make or worship images, nor swear, lie, steal, murder, nor covet his neighbor's wife or property, and still not love his neighbor as he does himself. A man might keep the decalogue strictly without the spirit of these "great commandments," which are "written in the law," that ended at the cross, and are now ingredients of the gospel scheme, though the law to which they once belonged is now extinct. So with a part of the decalogue. The gospel contains principles that once belonged to both departments of the law. The entire old law arrangement has been succeeded by the "law of Christ," which embodies some of the principles of the former law, but never embodied the seventh day Sabbath commandment. W. SHELDON.

LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE.

The Savior represents his followers as the light of the world. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house." What an impressive lesson we should learn from this beautiful comparison of the Lord, "who spake as never man spake." From this we not only see the importance of walking in the light, but of reflecting it all around us. Jesus says, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father in heaven."

Let us watch unto prayer, that we may show forth the praises of Him who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light. As we grow in knowledge of the truth, may this light shine brighter and brighter unto perfect day; and "follow on to know the Lord, who is as the morning light." Let us live in the Spirit, and "through the Spirit . . . mortify the deeds of the body." Let us strive to be humble, out of self, suffering patiently, making Christ our example, following his steps: "Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: Who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself (Mar. or committed his cause) to him that judgeth righteously:" Let us, "be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble." If thus clothed, we may be the means of winning souls to Christ; and thereby, "hide a multitude of (our) sins." "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me by thy free spirit; then will I teach transgressors thy ways," etc.

This is the great object, in letting our light so shine that we may be a means of winning others to Christ; that the spirit of our blessed Master should govern all our actions and words, and at the revelation of God's glory we may be able to enter that city with its golden streets; into which, no unholy thing shall enter.

PROPHETIC.

We are standing on an isthmus between death and heavenly rest,
And only one step further is the kingdom of the blest;
Nations are in trouble and peril of the sword,—
Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Perplexity of nations, anxiety of mind,
Looking for those things that are coming from behind;
The curtain of the future revealed in his own word,—
Blessed in He that cometh in the name of the Lord.

The stars have been falling like fruit from off the trees;
There is trouble on the land, and trouble on the seas:
The sun has hid her face, and loud the sea has roared,—
Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord.

With songs and everlasting joy to Zion we will go,
Sickness and pain and sorrow, we never there shall know;
The saints shall have th' inheritance promised by the Word,
Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord.

"MINISTRATION OF DEATH."
"Ministration of the Spirit."—No. 5.

SECOND. We now introduce the apostles as witnesses. What is "the law and the testimony" in this case, and that of the primitive church?

WHAT WAS "THE LAW"? Answer. TO THE APOSTLES CHRIST GAVE EXPRESS AUTHORITY TO REGULATE THE FAITH, THE INSTITUTIONS, THE ORDER, AND THE WORSHIP OF THE CHURCH, declaring to them that, WHATEVER THEY SHOULD TEACH, OR ORDER, SHOULD BE BINDING. Proof. "And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church: and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven."—Matt. 16: 18, 19. And again:—"Verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven."—Matt. 18: 18.

This was previous to Christ's death. But afterwards (John 20: 21, 22), on the evening of the day of his resurrection, Christ gave to the apostles their commission to the apostolic work in these emphatic and ever memorable words:—"AS MY FATHER HATH SENT ME, EVEN SO SEND I YOU." And when thus investing them with apostolic authority, "he breathed on them, and saith unto them, receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained."

Here, then, we have "the law." Hence, under the Spirit's guidance, the apostles could go forth to the work to which Christ had assigned them; and thus order all the affairs of the church, prescribe her institutions, direct her order and her worship. In proof that they did exercise this power, the following will show. 1. Paul says:—"But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.—As we said before, so say I now again. If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."—Gal. 1: 8, 9. The reason he assigned for this was,—"For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." ver. 12. 2. With equal authority they pronounced the judgments of God as bold and presumptuous transgressors. Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5: 1–10) were smitten dead for lying against the Holy Spirit. See also the pointed rebuke of Simon Magus (Acts 8: 18–24) for thinking the Holy Spirit could be purchased with money. Elymas the sorcerer was struck blind (Acts 13: 8–11) for his wickedness, by the apostle Paul, being "filled with the Holy Spirit." The incestuous person delivered to satan (1 Cor. 5: 3–9) for the destruction of the flesh, etc. Hymeneus and Alexander, for their heresy (2 Tim. 2: 18) for saying that the resurrection was past already, etc., were "delivered unto satan," 1 Tim. 1: 20), "that they might learn not to blaspheme." 3. The apostles, in the same manner, ordered all the affairs of the church. They directed in the choice of its deacons (Acts 6: 3), and appointed them to their office. They "ordained them elders in every church" Acts 14: 23.) It "pleased the apostles and the elders with the whole church" (Acts 15: 22–29) to condemn "certain" men which "went out" from them, and "troubled" the brethren "with words, subverting" their souls, "saying, ye must be circumcised and keep the law." But to those "troubled" brethren, the apostles said:—"It seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well." They "set in order the things that" were "wanting,"—or left undone, margin—(Tit. 1: 5), and attended to their various duties "with all authority" (2: 15.) They corrected abuses, and prescribed the proper mode for observing the "Lord's Supper" (1 Cor. 11: 18–29.) They gave directions for the proper manner of conducting the worship of God (1 Cor. 14: 23–40) so as to avoid confusion," and said,—"If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the. Lord." And let all Judaizers remember this language of the apostle:—"If any man" think himself to be "spiritual," let him "ACKNOWLEDGE that the things that I write unto you ARE THE COMMANDMENTS OF THE LORD." And then the apostle adds, "If any man be ignorant"—(that is, determined to be ignorant)—"let him be ignorant." Hence the apostle said,—"Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle." And "We command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us."—2 Thess. 2: 15, and 3: 6. And Peter also adds (2 Pet. 3: 2),—"Be mindful of the words which were spoken by the holy prophets, and of the COMMANDMENT OF US the apostles of the Lord and Savior."

Beyond all dispute, then, it is settled that the power to "bind" and "loose," conferred by Christ upon the apostles, was the power to teach, and to order all the affairs of the church "with all authority." And thus we repeat:—Here, then, is "THE LAW."

CHANGE OF DAYS FOR THE SABBATH.

Now to the question, What is "the testimony"? In the exercise of the power conferred upon the apostles, did they authorize a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week? If they did, then the change is as binding as if made by Christ himself. The "testimony" is of two kinds, that of the Scripture record, and that of authentic ecclesiastical history. 1. What, then is the Scripture record? The apostles and early disciples were in the habit of meeting together, at stated times for public worship. None will deny this.—"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." Sometimes "the whole church" (1 Cor. 14: 20) would meet at "one place." The exercises of their meetings were prayer, and various kinds of religious instruction (See 1 Cor. 11: 1–20; 14: 23–40); exhortation (Rom. 12: 8; 1 Thess. 5: 11; Titus 2: 15: Heb. 3: 13); singing (Eph. 5: 13; Col. 3: 16); and for the observance of the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 11: 20–34). Such meetings were not always held in private houses; but in places of public worship; for it is said, "What? (1 Cor. 11: 22, 34) have ye not (private) houses to eat and drink (your ordinary meals) in?" "If any man hunger, let him eat at home," in his private house, and not come to your places of public worship, to turn the Lord's Supper into a common meal, or a place of riot! At the meeting at TROAS (Acts 20: 7), "when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached," etc. From such considerations, it is evident that the meetings for the observance of the Lord's Supper were public meetings, in public places, held regularly for the benefit of the church. The question now arises,—What day of the week did they observe for their PUBLIC STATED MEETINGS? Was it on the seventh, or was it on the first day of the week? What is "the testimony?" 1. The old seventh-day Sabbath is not named in the New Testament, as a day for the assembling of christians, after the resurrection of Christ, only as a day when Paul met with them. And why he met with Jews on that day, is explained in 1 Cor. 9: 20, to be for the express purpose of gaining the "Jews." In Col. 3: 16, the Sabbath is named, but sabbatarians will not admit that this refers to the seventh day; although many able critics so understand it.

2. The phrase "The first day of the week," never occurs in the Bible until AFTER the resurrection of Christ. Now why did the old familiar seventh-day Sabbath cease to be named, except in connection with Paul's accommodation meetings; and the new term, "first day of the week" (sabbaton), came into use, unless there was a CHANGE OF DAYS? There was a change made from the seventh day of sabbaton ("week"), to the first day of sabbaton ("week"); so far as language is concerned, surely. And why this change of language, unless the day was changed for holding their religious meetings? And be it ever remembered, that it was the "Sabbath," as an INSTITUTION, that was sanctified, as mentioned in the decalogue; and not the seventh day. And this seventh day was the seventh after six working days. And the only other seventh day that was ever sanctified, was the seventh, after the six working days of creation; and so we read (Gen. 3: 3),—"And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it." "Remember," God did not bless ALL of the seventh days and sanctify them; but he blessed "the seventh DAY and sanctified IT. But when the Sabbath was given to man, as found in the decalogue, then it was the Sabbath (Ex. 20: 4) that was sanctified; and that was not the seventh day from the beginning of the creation, for there could be but one seventh from that point; but it was the seventh, after six days of labor. And again let us "remember" that the word Sabbath does not occur in Gen 2: 2, 3. This is the Hebrew Shahvath, meaning, "he rested." The word "Sabbath," Hebrew Shab-bahth, is not found in the Bible until Ex. 16: 23; showing that no written precept, or command, was ever given to man for the observance of the Sabbath, for more than two thousand five hundred (2500) years from creation. During this long period, the old patriarchs most likely had a law in their hearts (Rom. 2: 12–15; 13: 20), which led them to observe a Sabbath. They did not need a law written with "ink;" for Adam alone could be a teacher of the people for almost a thousand years, for he lived "nine hundred and thirty years," and he recieved the words directly from the mouth of God. So christians, although they have had no law written with "ink," yet they have observed the first-day Sabbath, for about eighteen hundred (1800) years, according to the teaching and practice of the apostles and early christians.

But another fact. While Moses was with the Israelites in the "wilderness forty years," the Sabbath as an institution is named. Then we pass another period of about five hundred (500) years (2 Kings 4: 23), before the Sabbath is again named. And again from David to Elisha, a period of about one hundred and fifty (150) years more the Sabbath is not named. Then from Ezekiel to Malachi, about one hundred and seventy-seven (177) years more, the Sabbath is not mentioned. Then from Malachi to Christ, three hundred and ninety-seven (397) years more; making in all a period of three thousand seven hundred and twenty-four (3724) years, that the Sabbath is not named in the Old Testament times, if we follow the chronology as affixed to our common version of the Bible. This leaves us only about two hundred and eighty years (280) in which mention is made of the observance of the Sabbath, for the first four thousand (4000) of our world's history. In view of these facts, why should "seventh-day" Sabbath-keepers be so very particular in regard to a "law" written with "ink," in the New Testament for the observance of the first-day Sabbath? "Consistency is a jewel."

The Sabbath which was "made for man," was the seventh-day following six days of labor. Hence, the "LAW," which is written in the heart, can, and does, direct to the first day of Sabbaton ("week") as the Sabbath now "for man," and not the seventh day of Sabbaton. Therefore, it is clearly proved that the seventh-day Sabbath of the old "dispensation of death" is "done away"; and the seventh-day (first day) Sabbath of the "dispensation of the Spirit" has been virtually in force since the resurrection of Christ.

But says the objector, "It is not the law that is written in the heart; but it is the new covenant." Hold a moment, while we turn to the "testimony":—"I will put my LAWS into their hearts, and in their minds will I WRITE THEM." (Heb. 10: 16.) Will the objector please notice that these "LAWS" are not written with "INK," or on "TABLES OF STONE"; consequently, the christian can observe a Sabbath law, which was not written on "tables of stone," or with "ink"; but with the "Spirit of the living God"—"in the heart." 2 Cor. 3: 3. "THOUSAND YEAR REIGN OF CHRIST."

When Christ descends with men to dwell,
And all creation makes anew;
What tongue can half the glories tell,
Or eye the matchless wonders view?

Zion, the desolate, shall sing,
The wilderness with roses bloom;
Carmel and Sharon both shall bring
Their spices and their rich perfume.

The weak are strong, the fearful bold,
The dumb shall sing in anthems sweet;
The lame shall walk, the blind behold
Their God, and worship at his feet.

Celestial streams shall gently flow,
The wilderness shall joyful be;
Lilies on parched ground shall grow,
And gladness spring from every tree.

The wolves with lambs in meadows go,
The tiger's harmless as the kid;
The lion shall no anger show,
But with the calf shall tamely feed.

Thus kings and slaves shall meet in love,
Old pride shall die, and meekness reign;
When Christ descends from worlds above,
To dwell with men on earth again.

PARADISE.

In the conversation between Christ and the thief (Luke 23: 42, 43), we find that the kingdom of Christ and Paradise are the same. The thief calls it "Thy kingdom"; Christ calls it "Paradise," as meaning the same. Thus we find that, according to the Scriptures, the "kingdom of Christ," "the third heavens," and "Paradise," are the same. Now if we can find the locality of either, and when, in the order of events, either is to be revealed, we have found them all.

In 2 Pet. 3: 5–7, we read, "By the word of the Lord the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water, whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished; but the heavens and the earth, which are now (evidently not the one that was then), by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment." 10th verse;—"The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." 13th verse;—"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

We think we have found the third heavens, and that they are yet in the future. The first heavens and earth were destroyed by a flood of water; the second is to be destroyed by a flood of fire; the promised "new heavens and earth" are the third, which are to endure for ever. Isa. 65: 18, 19. Thus we find that the third heavens, paradise, and the kingdom of Christ, will all appear when the "new heavens and new earth" appear. Then will Christ come into his kingdom. 2 Tim. 4: 1. Then will the penitent thief be with him in paradise; and not only the thief has the promise, but "all them that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 8.

It rejoices my heart to know that the coming of the Lord is near, even at the door: praise the Lord! "Our life is hid with Christ in God; and when He who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." He will "change our vile bodies, and fashion them like unto his most glorious body"; fit us for the kingdom, and fit the kingdom for us.

"Oh! glorious hope, oh! blest abode,
We shall be near and like our God."
Children of the heavenly King,
"Come, let us anew our journey pursue,
And never stand still till the Master appear."

WHO AND WHAT IS A JEW?

The next thing that presents itself to my mind for consideration, is the declaration contained in the title, "King of the Jews." This naturally leads to the inquiry, who and what is a Jew? for some man might incline to expatriate himself, be naturalized and become a lawful subject of this "King Jesus," provided he can learn what constitutes a Jew. The word is a contraction from Judas or Judah, either of which signify, "the praise of the Lord," and it would seem to have been an appellative rather than patronymic; for the name Judah, or Jehudah, was conferred on the fourth son of Jacob, as indicative of character, as may be learned from Jacob's blessing. Gen. 49: 8. "Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise." When the children of Israel went out of Egypt, there were of Judah's tribe 74,600 arms' bearing men. When Palestine was divided among them, the southern portion, next to the desert of Kadesh and Edom, fell to Judah's tribe; but in the proposed resubdivision of the land in Ezek 48: 7–23, it will be seen that Judah is to have his portion to the north of the city and next to it; while God is to have Judah's former location enlarged. "Blessed be he that enlargeth Gad." After the return from "the captivity," the entire Hebrew nation was by some means indicated by the appellative Judæi, Jews, or descendants of Judah, and here the term, for the first time, so far as I can trace it, is used patronymically.

But we shall find it necessary to go farther back, to get at the root of the subject; for not every one is a Jew, who is distinguished by the appellative. For instance, we have here in America, as elsewhere, a class styled Jews who are not, even by descent. They are physically distinguishable by the olive-tinted complexion, kinkey hair, elongated eye, nose slightly flattened, and lips rather thick and protuding. These are literal descendants of the Idumeans or Edomites, who were conquered by John Hercaynus under the reign of the Macabees, and had the alternative of circumcision or expatriation proffered to them; they chose the former, and identified themselves with the Jewish nation; but are no more Jews than Anglo-Saxons are American Indians, because they live on this continent, "wear a blanket" and "smoke the weed."

Herod the Great was one of that Edomitish race, and made friends with Pilate to crucify "the King of the Jews;" nevertheless we find in the above, what is necessary to constitute one a Jew nominally, and that is circumcision in the flesh; and in this law of circumcision, who and what constitutes a Jew; and consequently what an alien must do to become a legalized subject of King Jesus of Nazareth, and be entitled to all the rights and immunities of a home, natural or freeborn citizen. In Gen. 17: 8–14, when God made a covenant with Abraham, he said, "every man-child among you chall be circumcised, . . . he that is born in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed, . . . must . . . be circumcised; and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant, and the uncircumcised man-child whose flesh . . . is not circumcised, that soul shall be CUT OFF from among his people; he hath broken my covenant."

Again, in Ex. 12: 43–49, after the Lord's passover had been instituted (3–11), the ordinance or law of the passover was given thus; "There shall no stranger eat thereof; but every man's servant that is bought for money, when thou hast circumcised him, THEN SHALL HE EAT THEREOF. A foreigner and a hired servant shall not eat thereof. . . . And when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the Lord, let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one that is born in the land; for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof, ONE LAW shall be to him that is home born, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you. Thus did the children of Israel, as the Lord commanded. . . . So did they," and as the Lord commanded, so may we go and do likewise.

Is he a Jew, then, who is circumcised in the flesh only? Nay, verily. See Rom. 2: 28—"He is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Jew who is one "inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in [or by] the spirit, and not in [or by] the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God." "Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping the commandments of God."—1 Cor. 7: 19. "Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin."—Rom. 4: 8. "We say that FAITH was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. How? . . . When he was in . . . uncircumcision, and he received the SIGN of circumcision, a SEAL of the righteousness of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised." Now let us see if "water baptism" takes the place of circumcision, and whether God "counts the believer righteous" before he is immersed or not. Eph. 1: 13, 14. "In whom [Christ] ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, (i. e.) the gospel of your salvation; in whom also, (i. e.) after that ye believed, ye were SEALED [what by, water? nay, nay; what then? circumcision? nay, but] with that HOLY SPIRIT of promise, which is the earnest [pledge, guaranty] of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession."—1 Cor. 12: 13. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of HIS."—Rom. 8: 9.

LONGING.

Longing for rest;
Yes, longing to be
From sin, and temptation,
And sorrow set free.

Longing for rest;
Yes, longing to share
The glory of Jesus,
And a crown to wear.

Longing for rest;
This world is so drear,
That time moves but slowly
While traveling here.

Longing for rest;
When trials are o'er,
And redemption we'll sing
On Canaan's fair shore.

Longing for rest;
O! when shall I see
The King in his beauty,
Who died on the tree?

Longing for rest;
When saints shall all sing
Hallelujah to God!
And hail him as King.

Longing for rest;
When the city shall come
Down from heaven to earth,
For the saints a sweet home.

SABBATH ARGUMENTS EXAMINED.

"THE COMMANDMENTS."

To prove that the seventh day Sabbath is enjoined on christians, various texts are quoted containing the phrase, "the commandments," with the claim that the ten commandments are meant, and consequently that the Sabbath commandment is included. But this claim that the phrase, "the commandments," refers to the original ten, no more nor less, is a false claim, as will be seen by the use made of it by the Savior. "And behold one came and said unto him, Good master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him, . . . if thou wilt enter into life keep THE COMMANDMENTS. And he saith unto him, Which? [Which commandments?] Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Matt. 19: 16–19.) Here Christ quotes one commandment that was never on the tables of stone among the ten, and he pronounces it a "commandment," among "THE commandments,"—thus annihilating the claim that the phrase "the commandments" has reference to the ten, no more nor less, and that consequently the fourth commandment is in this way enjoined. Five of these commandments were from the tables of stone, and the other was from Lev. 19: 18.

The fact that Christ himself, in telling what he himself meant by "the commandments," includes those that were never among the ten, is utterly subversive of the claim that just ten commandments are meant by the phrase. Either Christ was wrong in his use of the phrase, "the commandments," or it is wrong to insist that this phrase has exclusive reference to the ten commandments, and thus insist that the Sabbath commandment is made binding on christians. If Christ used the phrase correctly, it is folly to claim that it has reference only to the ten commandments, in the absence of a particle of proof, and in opposition to Christ, simply to make it appear that the seventh day Sabbath is enjoined upon us. "The commandments," both from the "tables" of the law, and from the "book" of the law, so far as congenial to the gospel plan, are quoted and sanctioned as being in harmony with the principles of the gospel; but never has the seventh day been thus represented as coinciding with the gospel arrangement. Those commandments enjoining the observance of days are never referred to as being in harmony with the "law of Christ."

"The commandments" that now receive divine sanction, omitting those of a ceremonial cast in the former age, include the following: "And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ" (1 John 2: 23), and God "now commandeth all men every where to repent" (Acts 17: 31), together with the Savior's "new commandment"; none of which were ever written on the tables of stone, and all of which belong to "the commandments" of this dispensation, in which catalogue the seventh-day Sabbath is never found. So this argument is unavailing. It is one thing to assert that the phrase "the commandments" refers only to the ten on the tables of stone (and the assertion, as we have seen, is contradicted by Christ), and quite another thing to prove the assertion. The commandments of the law include the ten, with the others; but the commandments of the gospel include all that are in harmony with the New Covenant principles, by enjoining them; but the seventh day is not thus included.

"THE LAW OF GOD."

Texts of Scripture containing the expression, "The law of God," are quoted, with the claim that reference is made to the writing on the tables of stone, in contradistinction to the "Law of Moses,"—that the ten commandments are the "Law of God," which can never be abrogated, while the balance of the law was the "law of Moses," and ended at the cross. The claim that this decalogue is an endless law, and adapted to the future world, as well as this, we have examined, and exposed its fallacy. If only the ten commandments were recognized as the "law of God," and if it were true that this law could never be abolished, then it would follow that the seventh day Sabbath, as an ingredient of this law, would still be obligatory; but upon the other hand, if something beside the ten commandments is included in the "law of God," and that law can never be abrogated, those ceremonial ingredients would also still be obligatory. There is no escape from this conclusion. Then it is a matter of interest to learn what is included in the "law of God," seeing the claim is made that it signifies the decalogue, in which the seventh day Sabbath is enjoined, and that the "law of God" can not be abolished. If the "law of God" can not be abolished, all of its component parts must still be observed, whether Sabbaths, sacrifices, or ceremonies. As we proceed we shall not only learn what is included in the "law of God," but also learn that the same thing which is styled the "law of Moses," is also styled the "law of God." "They spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the BOOK of the 'law of Moses.' . . . So they read in the BOOK of the 'law of God.'" (Neh. 8: 1–8.)

Here a certain "book" is mentioned, which is not only called the 'law of Moses,' but is plainly called "THE LAW OF GOD"; and now, if "the law of God" can never be abolished, the entire catalogue of requirements contained in this "book" are still in force; for there is no evading the fact that it is called "the law of God"; and among other things, "they found written in the law . . . that the children of Israel should dwell in booths in the feast of the seventh month." This law, which is called "the law of God," speaks of building "booths," and keeping "feasts," none of which things are written on the tables of stone—yet they are to be found in "the law of God," thus proving that something beside the tables, or ten commandments, is recognized as belonging to the "law of God"; and furthermore, if the "law of God" can never be abolished, these "feast" days and the building of "booths," with the other ceremouies, are still to be continued, and nothing is left to be nailed to the cross, for the entire "law of Moses" is called "the law of God," as we have proved, just as really as the ten commandments.

In 2 Chron. 31: 3, we read concerning "the morning and evening burnt offerings, and burnt offerings for the Sabbaths, and for the new moons, and for set feasts, as it is written in the law of the Lord." Nothing can be found on the tables of stone concerning the "burnt offerings," or "new moons," or "set feasts"; yet it is all "written in the law of the Lord," which proves that something is included in "the law of God" aside from the ten commandments; and moreover, if the "law of God" could not have ended at the cross, and been succeeded by a new law, these "burnt offerings," and "new moons," and "set feasts" are still to be adhered to.

Not only is the book of the law indiscriminately called the "law of Moses," and "the law of God," but the tables of the law are just as really called the "law of Moses" as the "law of God": "Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded him in HOREB for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments." (Mal. 4: 4.) Here the law which God made in "Horeb" is plainly called the "law of Moses." What law did God give in "Horeb"? The day thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in HOREB . . . he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone. And the Lord commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments. (Deut. 4: 10, 12, 13.)

Here we have the law brought to view which was given in "HOREB," and also the "statutes and judgments." Here are two things mentioned,—first, the law given in "Horeb"; secondly, the "statutes and judgments," which include all the ceremonial features of the law. This law given in Horeb, and written on the "tables of stone," is called "the law of Moses." No other law was ever given in Horeb aside from the decalogue, and the "statutes and judgments," which are also often styled the "law of Moses," but are not here referred to under that name, as they are distinctly mentioned in contradistinction to that which is here called the "law of Moses"—"with the statutes and judgments." So there is no evading the fact that the decalogue is styled the "law of Moses." This destroys the claim of two distinct laws, one styled the "law of Moses," and ending at the cross; the other styled the "law of God," and continuing in force,—for we have seen that the book of the law, and the tables of the law, are indiscriminately styled the law of God, and the law of Moses—being simply different departments of one law, which has been succeeded by a new law.

"THE LAW."

This phrase is played with amusingly by the advocates of the two-law system. Quote to them the statement that we are "not under the law, and this is disposed of by saying that reference is made to the ceremonial law; quote another statement concerning the phrase "the law," and it is applied to the moral law. Thus "the law" is sometimes made to mean one thing, and sometimes to mean another, just according to the necessities of an unscriptural theory. But the Scriptures apply the phrase "the law" to both departments—the moral and ceremonial—one law; and inspired men, in quoting from "the law," quote from the book and the tables in the same breath. Paul refers to "the law" in this manner: "He that loveth another hath fulfilled THE LAW. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet: and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself; . . . therefore love is the fulfilling of THE LAW." Rom. 13: 8–10.) Here Paul, in quoting from THE LAW, quotes from both the tables and the book,—thus establishing the fact that they both belong to "the law," and destroying the idea of two distinct laws. "The law" says, "Thou shalt not kill. . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "THE LAW," as far as founded on a prohibition of moral evil, although it had served its time out at the cross, is sanctioned as being in harmony with the gospel, and thus enjoined in this dispensation, being so far pronounced "holy," "just," "good," and "spiritual"; but those appendages pertaining to the observance of days, are not enjoined in the new arrangement. This is true both of the tables of the law, and the book of the law. The advocates of the seventh day theory deride the idea of having a law end, and after that incorporating a part of it into a new arrangement. This is true both of the tables of the law, and the book of the law. The advocates of the seventh day theory deride the idea of having a law end, and after that incorporating a part of it into a new arrangement, and think it absurd. But they find themselves involved in precisely the same dilemma, if indeed it is a dilemma. Let me fairly state their position:

1. They claim two laws in the Mosaic age.
2. They claim that the law of God was written on the tables of stone.
3. They claim that the law of Moses was written in a book.
4. They claim that the law of Moses ended at the cross.

Now Christ affirms that "the great commandment in the law" is this: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart. . . . And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Matt. 22: 36–39.) Now here are two "commandments of the law," and all admit they are now ingredients of the "law of Christ"; but they never belonged to the decalogue, and consequently, if there are but two laws, they belonged to the law that ended at the cross. When we are inquired of, Why do away with nine good commandments, to get rid of one bad one, and then enjoin the nine again? We inquire, Why do away with the whole Mosaic law, which contained "the great commandments," and then enforce these great commandments again? Thus they are caught in their own trap. According to their own claim, the Mosaic law ended at the cross; yet these "commandments" were in it. To dodge this point it is said, The spirit of these commandments was on the table of stone. This dodge cannot be allowed, for when the lawyer inquired, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Jesus replied, "What is WRITTEN in the law? How READEST thou? And he answering, said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, . . . and thy neighbor as thyself." And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right." (Luke 10: 25–28. Mark! these commandments were "written in the law," and could be read. They were never on the tables, but were recorded in Deut. 6: 5, and Lev. 19: 18. Beside all this, I deny that even the spirit of these commandments was ever on the tables of stone. A man may not love God with all the heart, and still omit to make idol gods, omit serving them, omit swearing, omit Sabbath breaking, omit to dishonor father or mother, omit stealing, omit committing adultery, omit coveting either his neighbor's wife or property; still not have a particle of love to God in his heart, being simply a moralist. Many moral Universalists may lay claim to all this. A man may neither make or worship images, nor swear, lie, steal, murder, nor covet his neighbor's wife or property, and still not love his neighbor as he does himself. A man might keep the decalogue strictly without the spirit of these "great commandments," which are "written in the law," that ended at the cross, and are now ingredients of the gospel scheme, though the law to which they once belonged is now extinct. So with a part of the decalogue. The gospel contains principles that once belonged to both departments of the law. The entire old law arrangement has been succeed ed by the "law of Christ," which embodies some of the principles of the former law, but never embodied the seventh day Sabbath commandment. W. SHELDON.

LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE.

The Savior represents his followers as the light of the world. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house." What an impressive lesson we should learn from this beautiful comparison of the Lord, "who spake as never man spake." From this we not only see the importance of walking in the light, but of reflecting it all around us. Jesus says, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father in heaven."

Let us watch unto prayer, that we may show forth the praises of Him who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light. As we grow in knowledge of the truth, may this light shine brighter and brighter unto perfect day; and "follow on to know the Lord, who is as the morning light." Let us live in the Spirit, and "through the Spirit . . . mortify the deeds of the body." Let us strive to be humble, out of self, suffering patiently, making Christ our example, following his steps: "Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: Who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself (Mar. or committed his cause) to him that judgeth righteously:" Let us, "be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble." If thus clothed, we may be the means of winning souls to Christ; and thereby, "hide a multitude of (our) sins." "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me by thy free spirit; then will I teach transgressors thy ways," etc.

This is the great object, in letting our light so shine that we may be a means of winning others to Christ; that the spirit of our blessed Master should govern all our actions and words, and at the revelation of God's glory we may be able to enter that city with its golden streets; into which, no unholy thing shall enter.

For the World's Crisis.

PROPHETIC.

We are standing on an isthmus between death and heavenly rest,
And only one step further is the kingdom of the blest;
Nations are in trouble and peril of the sword,—
Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Perplexity of nations, anxiety of mind,
Looking for those things that are coming from behind;
The curtain of the future revealed in his own word,—
Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord.

The stars have been falling like fruit from off the trees;
There is trouble on the land, and trouble on the seas;
The sun has hid her face, and loud the sea has roared,—
Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord.

With songs and everlasting joy to Zion we will go,
Sickness and pain and sorrow, we never there shall know;
The saints shall have th' inheritance promised by the Word,
Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord.

For the World's Crisis.

"MINISTRATION OF DEATH." "Ministration of the Spirit."—No. 5.

SECOND. We now introduce the apostles as witnesses. What is "the law and the testimony" in this case, and that of the primitive church?

WHAT WAS "THE LAW"? Answer. TO THE APOSTLES CHRIST GAVE EXPRESS AUTHORITY TO REGULATE THE FAITH, THE INSTITUTIONS, THE ORDER, AND THE WORSHIP OF THE CHURCH, declaring to them that, WHATEVER THEY SHOULD TEACH, OR ORDER, SHOULD BE BINDING. Proof: "And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church: and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven."—Matt. 16: 18, 19. And again:—"Verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven."—Matt. 18: 18.

This was previous to Christ's death. But afterwards (John 20: 21, 22), on the evening of the day of his resurrection, Christ gave to the apostles their commission to the apostolic work in these emphatic and ever memorable words:—"AS MY FATHER HATH SENT ME, EVEN SO SEND I YOU." And when thus investing them with apostolic authority, "he breathed on them, and saith unto them, receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained."

Here, then, we have "the law." Hence, under the Spirit's guidance, the apostles could go forth to the work to which Christ had assigned them; and thus order all the affairs of the church, prescribe her institutions, direct her order and her worship. In proof that they did exercise this power, the following will show. 1. Paul says:—"But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.—As we said before, so say I now again. If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."—Gal. 1: 8, 9. The reason he assigned for this was,—"For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." ver. 12. 2. With equal authority they pronounced the judgments of God as bold and presumptuous transgressors. Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5: 1–10) were smitten dead for lying against the Holy Spirit. See also the pointed rebuke of Simon Magus (Acts 8: 18–24) for thinking the Holy Spirit could be purchased with money. Elymas the sorcerer was struck blind (Acts 13: 8–11) for his wickedness, by the apostle Paul, being "filled with the Holy Spirit." The incestuous person delivered to satan (1 Cor. 5: 3–9) for the destruction of the flesh, etc. Hymeneus and Alexander, for their heresy (2 Tim. 2: 18) for saying that the resurrection was past already, etc., were "delivered unto satan," 1 Tim. 1: 20), "that they might learn not to blaspheme." 3. The apostles, in the same manner, ordered all the affairs of the church. They directed in the choice of its deacons (Acts 6: 3), and appointed them to their office. They "ordained them elders in every church" Acts 14: 23.) It "pleased the apostles and the elders with the whole church" (Acts 15: 22–29) to condemn "certain" men which "went out" from them, and "troubled" the brethren "with words, subverting" their souls, "saying, ye must be circumcised and keep the law." But to those "troubled" brethren, the apostles said:—"It seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well." They "set in order the things that" were "wanting,"—or left undone, margin—(Tit. 1: 5), and attended to their various duties "with all authority" (2: 15.) They corrected abuses, and prescribed the proper mode for observing the "Lord's Supper" (1 Cor. 11: 18–29.) They gave directions for the proper manner of conducting the worship of God (1 Cor. 14: 23–40) so as to avoid confusion," and said, "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." And let all Judaizers remember this language of the apostle:—"If any man" think himself to be "spiritual," let him "ACKNOWLEDGE that the things that I write unto you ARE THE COMMANDMENTS OF THE LORD." And then the apostle adds, "If any man be ignorant"—(that is, determined to be ignorant)—"let him be ignorant." Hence the apostle said,—"Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle." And "We command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us."—2 Thess. 2: 15, and 3: 6. And Peter also adds (2 Pet. 3: 2),—"Be mindful of the words which were spoken by the holy prophets, and of the COMMANDMENT OF US the apostles of the Lord and Savior."

Beyond all dispute, then, it is settled that the power to "bind" and "loose," conferred by Christ upon the apostles, was the power to teach, and to order all the affairs of the church "with all authority." And thus we repeat:—Here, then, is "THE LAW."

CHANGE OF DAYS FOR THE SABBATH.

Now to the question, What is "the testimony"? In the exercise of the power conferred upon the apostles, did they authorize a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week? If they did, then the change is as binding as if made by Christ himself. The "testimony" is of two kinds, that of the Scripture record, and that of authentic ecclesiastical history. 1. What, then is the Scripture record? The apostles and early disciples were in the habit of meeting together, at stated times for public worship. None will deny this,—"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is." Sometimes "the whole church" (1 Cor. 14: 20) would meet at "one place." The exercises of their meetings were prayer, and various kinds of religious instruction (See 1 Cor. 11: 1–20; 14: 23–40); exhortation (Rom. 12: 8; 1 Thess. 5: 11; Titus 2: 15; Heb. 3: 13); singing (Eph. 5: 13; Col. 3: 16); and for the observance of the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 11: 20–34). Such meetings were not always held in private houses; but in places of public worship; for it is said, "What? (1 Cor. 11: 22, 34) have ye not (private) houses to eat and drink (your ordinary meals) in?" "If any man hunger, let him eat at home," in his private house, and not come to your places of public worship, to turn the Lord's Supper into a common meal, or a place of riot! At the meeting at TROAS (Acts 20: 7), "when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached," etc. From such considerations, it is evident that the meetings for the observance of the Lord's Supper were public meetings, in public places, held regularly for the benefit of the church. The question now arises,—What day of the week did they observe for their PUBLIC STATED MEETINGS? Was it on the seventh, or was it on the first day of the week? What is "the testimony?" 1. The old seventh-day Sabbath is not named in the New Testament, as a day for the assembling of christians, after the resurrection of Christ, only as a day when Paul met with them. And why he met with Jews on that day, is explained in 1 Cor. 9: 20, to be for the express purpose of gaining the "Jews." In Col. 3: 16, the Sabbath is named, but sabbatarians will not admit that this refers to the seventh day; although many able critics so understand it.

2. The phrase "The first day of the week," never occurs in the Bible until AFTER the resurrection of Christ. Now why did the old familiar seventh-day Sabbath cease to be named, except in connection with Paul's accommodation meetings; and the new term, "first day of the week" (sabbaton), came into use, unless there was a CHANGE OF DAYS? There was a change made from the seventh day of sabbaton ("week"), to the first day of sabbaton ("week"); so far as language is concerned, surely. And why this change of language, unless the day was changed for holding their religious meetings? And be it ever remembered, that it was the "Sabbath," as an INSTITUTION, that was sanctified, as mentioned in the decalogue; and not the seventh day. And this seventh day was the seventh after six working days. And the only other seventh day that was ever sanctified, was the seventh, after the six working days of creation; and so we read (Gen. 3: 3),—"And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it." "Remember," God did not bless ALL of the seventh days and sanctify them; but he blessed "the seventh DAY and sanctified IT. But when the Sabbath was given to man, as found in the decalogue, then it was the Sabbath (Ex. 20: 4) that was sanctified; and that was not the seventh day from the beginning of the creation, for there could be but one seventh from that point; but it was the seventh, after six days of labor. And again let us "remember" that the word Sabbath does not occur in Gen 2: 2, 3. This is the Hebrew Shahvath, meaning, "he rested." The word "Sabbath," Hebrew Shab-bahth, is not found in the Bible until Ex. 16: 23; showing that no written precept, or command, was ever given to man for the observance of the Sabbath, for more than two thousand five hundred (2500) years from creation. During this long period, the old patriarchs most likely had a law in their hearts (Rom. 2: 12–15; 13: 20), which led them to observe a Sabbath. They did not need a law written with "ink;" for Adam alone could be a teacher of the people for almost a thousand years, for he lived "nine hundred and thirty years," and he receievd the words directly from the mouth of God. So christians, although they have had no law written with "ink," yet they have observed the first-day Sabbath, for about eighteen hundred (1800) years, according to the teaching and practice of the apostles and early christians.

But another fact. While Moses was with the Israelites in the "wilderness forty years," the Sabbath as an institution is named. Then we pass another period of about five hundred (500) years (2 Kings 4: 23), before the Sabbath is again named. And again from David to Elisha, a period of about one hundred and fifty (150) years more the Sabbath is not named. Then from Ezekiel to Malachi, about one hundred and seventy-seven (177) years more, the Sabbath is not mentioned. Then from Malachi to Christ, three hundred and ninety-seven (397) years more; making in all a period of three thousand seven hundred and twenty-four (3724) years, that the Sabbath is not named in the Old Testament times, if we follow the chronology as affixed to our common version of the Bible. This leaves us only about two hundred and eighty years (280) in which mention is made of the observance of the Sabbath, for the first four thousand (4000) of our world's history. In view of these facts, why should "seventh-day" Sabbath-keepers be so very particular in regard to a "law" written with "ink," in the New Testament for the observance of the first-day Sabbath? "Consistency is a jewel."

The Sabbath which was "made for man," was the seventh-day following six days of labor. Hence, the "LAW," which is written in the heart, can, and does, direct to the first day of Sabbaton ("week") as the Sabbath now "for man," and not the seventh day of Sabbaton. Therefore, it is clearly proved that the seventh-day Sabbath of the old "dispensation of death" is "done away"; and the seventh-day (first day) Sabbath of the "dispensation of the Spirit" has been virtually in force since the resurrection of Christ.

But says the objector, "It is not the law that is written in the heart; but it is the new covenant." Hold a moment, while we turn to the "testimony":—"I will put my LAWS into their hearts, and in their minds will I WRITE THEM." (Heb. 10: 16.) Will the objector please notice that these "LAWS" are not written with "INK," or on "TABLES OF STONE"; consequently, the christian can observe a Sabbath law, which was not written on "tables of stone," or with "ink"; but with the "Spirit of the living God"—"in the heart." 2 Cor. 3: 3. "THOUSAND YEAR REIGN OF CHRIST."

When Christ descends with men to dwell,
And all creation makes anew;
What tongue can half the glories tell,
Or eye the matchless wonders view?

Zion, the desolate, shall sing,
The wilderness with roses bloom;
Carmel and Sharon both shall bring
Their spices and their rich perfume.

The weak are strong, the fearful bold,
The dumb shall sing in anthems sweet;
The lame shall walk, the blind behold
Their God, and worship at his feet.

Celestial streams shall gently flow,
The wilderness shall joyful be;
Lilies on parched ground shall grow,
And gladness spring from every tree.

The wolves with lambs in meadows go,
The tiger's harmless as the kid;
The lion shall no anger show,
But with the calf shall tamely feed.

Thus kings and slaves shall meet in love,
Old pride shall die, and meekness reign;
When Christ descends from worlds above,
To dwell with men on earth again.

PARADISE.

In the conversation between Christ and the thief (Luke 23: 42, 43), we find that the kingdom of Christ and Paradise are the same. The thief calls it "Thy kingdom"; Christ calls it "Paradise," as meaning the same. Thus we find that, according to the Scriptures, the "kingdom of Christ," "the third heavens," and "Paradise," are the same. Now if we can find the locality of either, and when, in the order of events, either is to be revealed, we have found them all.

In 2 Pet. 3: 5–7, we read, "By the word of the Lord the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water, whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished; but the heavens and the earth, which are now (evidently not the one that was then), by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment." 10th verse;—"The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." 13th verse;—"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

We think we have found the third heavens, and that they are yet in the future. The first heavens and earth were destroyed by a flood of water; the second is to be destroyed by a flood of fire; the promised "new heavens and earth" are the third, which are to endure for ever. Isa. 65: 18, 19. Thus we find that the third heavens, paradise, and the kingdom of Christ, will all appear when the "new heavens and new earth" appear. Then will Christ come into his kingdom. 2 Tim. 4: 1. Then will the penitent thief be with him in paradise; and not only the thief has the promise, but "all them that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 8.

It rejoices my heart to know that the coming of the Lord is near, even at the door: praise the Lord! "Our life is hid with Christ in God; and when He who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." He will "change our vile bodies, and fashion them like unto his most glorious body"; fit us for the kingdom, and fit the kingdom for us.

"Oh! glorious hope, oh! blest abode,
We shall be near and like our God."
"Come, let us anew our journey pursue,
And never stand still till the Master appear."

WHO AND WHAT IS A JEW?

The next thing that presents itself to my mind for consideration, is the declaration contained in the title, "King of the Jews." This naturally leads to the inquiry, who and what is a Jew? for some man might incline to expatriate himself, be naturalized and become a lawful subject of this "King Jesus," provided he can learn what constitutes a Jew. The word is a contraction from Judas or Judah, either of which signify, "the praise of the Lord," and it would seem to have been an appellative rather than patronymic; for the name Judah, or Jehudah, was conferred on the fourth son of Jacob, as indicative of character, as may be learned from Jacob's blessing. Gen. 49: 8. "Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise." When the children of Israel went out of Egypt, there were of Judah's tribe 74,600 arms' bearing men. When Palestine was divided among them, the southern portion, next to the desert of Kadesh and Edom, fell to Judah's tribe; but in the proposed resubdivision of the land in Ezek 48: 7–23, it will be seen that Judah is to have his portion to the north of the city and next to it; while God is to have Judah's former location enlarged. "Blessed be he that enlargeth Gad." After the return from "the captivity," the entire Hebrew nation was by some means indicated by the appellative Judæi, Jews, or descendants of Judah, and here the term, for the first time, so far as I can trace it, is used patronymically.

But we shall find it necessary to go farther back, to get at the root of the subject; for not every one is a Jew, who is distinguished by the appellative. For instance, we have here in America, as elsewhere, a class styled Jews who are not, even by descent. They are physically distinguishable by the olive-tinted complexion, kinkey hair, elongated eye, nose slightly flattened, and lips rather thick and protuding. These are literal descendants of the Idumeans or Edomites, who were conquered by John Hercaynus under the reign of the Macabees, and had the alternative of circumcision or expatriation proffered to them; they chose the former, and identified themselves with the Jewish nation; but are no more Jews than Anglo-Saxons are American Indians, because they live on this continent, "wear a blanket" and "smoke the weed."

Herod the Great was one of that Edomitish race, and made friends with Pilate to crucify "the King of the Jews;" nevertheless we find in the above, what is necessary to constitute one a Jew nominally, and that is circumcision in the flesh; and in this law of circumcision, who and what constitutes a Jew; and consequently what an alien must do to become a legalized subject of King Jesus of Nazareth, and be entitled to all the rights and immunities of a home, natural or freeborn citizen. In Gen. 17: 8–14, when God made a covenant with Abraham, he said, "every man-child among you chall be circumcised, . . . he that is born in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed, . . . must . . . be circumcised; and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant, and the uncircumcised man-child whose flesh . . . is not circumcised, that soul shall be CUT OFF from among his people; he hath broken my covenant."

Again, in Ex. 12: 43–49, after the Lord's passover had been instituted (3–11), the ordinance or law of the passover was given thus; "There shall no stranger eat thereof; but every man's servant that is bought for money, when thou hast circumcised him, THEN SHALL HE EAT THEREOF. A foreigner and a hired servant shall not eat thereof. . . . And when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the Lord, let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one that is born in the land; for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof, ONE LAW shall be to him that is home born, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you. Thus did the children of Israel, as the Lord commanded. . . . So did they," and as the Lord commanded, so may we go and do likewise.

Is he a Jew, then, who is circumcised in the flesh only? Nay, verily. See Rom. 2: 28—"He is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Jew who is one "inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in [or by] the spirit, and not in [or by] the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God." "Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping the commandments of God."—1 Cor. 7: 19. "Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin."—Rom. 4: 8. "We say that FAITH was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness. How? . . . When he was in . . . uncircumcision, and he received the SIGN of circumcision, a SEAL of the righteousness of the faith which he had, yet being uncircumcised." Now let us see if "water baptism" takes the place of circumcision, and whether God "counts the believer righteous" before he is immersed or not. Eph. 1: 13, 14. "In whom [Christ] ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, (i. e.) the gospel of your salvation; in whom also, (i. e.) after that ye believed, ye were SEALED [what by, water? nay, nay; what then? circumcision? nay, but] with that HOLY SPIRIT of promise, which is the earnest [pledge, guaranty] of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession."—1 Cor. 12: 13. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of HIS."—Rom. 8: 9.

GERRITT SMITH ON FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

The lettered and liberal Gerritt Smith has a world wide fame for his Abolition principles and labors, but his religious views I conclude are not so generally known. He is a Congregationalist, and has built a meeting house of his own, in Peterboro, N. Y., where he resides. Though not an ordained minister, he sometimes preaches, or lectures, being independent in his own house, while differing from his brethren in some important points of doctrine. He has published some of his lectures in the New York Tribune, from one of which, published in 1859, I take the following extracts, to show how great and sympathetic minds feel as to the doctrine of eternal misery.

"An eternal hell! Then must sin be an eternal disturbing force in the universe. For manifestly when sin shall have ceased, punishment will cease also. Eternal hell! Yes, it is to be suffered by men of the loveliest character, provided they were not able to subscribe in this life, to certain ecclesiastical interpretations of a book.

Putting people into an eternal hell! Why the worst of men would not thus serve their worst enemies. How much less would God! Orthodoxy makes God infinitely more malignant and cruel than the most malignant and cruel men.

Eternal hell! No man does and no man can believe it. It is untrue if only because human nature is incapable of believing it. Moreover, were such a belief possible it would be fatal. Let the American people wake up with it to-morrow, and none of them would go to their fields, and none to their shops, and none would care for their homes. All interest in the things of the earth would be dead. The whole nation would be struck with a paralysis, and frozen with horror. Even the beginnings of such a belief are too much for the safety of the brain; and every step in that direction, is a step toward the mad house. The orthodox preacher of an eternal hell would himself go crazy did he believe his own preaching. Did he see his wife, or children, or friends, or neighbors, in danger of falling into it, he would be overwhelmed by the sight. He saves his sanity only through his insincerity. To be sincere in preaching he must first be insane.

The little influence of their religion on its professors is often wondered at. But why should it be? They do not believe their religion; and they cannot, so long as an eternal hell is a part of it. Since their belief of this part is at the most but a dreamy and forced one, there can hardly be a real, earnest, and deeply influential belief of any part. Their conscious, or unconscious distrust of the truth of this part, necessarily begets a similar distrust of the truth of every part. The enormous draught at this point upon their staggering faith, cannot fail to cast in their view an air of unreliability over the whole of their religion. But it is held that these things, which are so at war with nature and Providence, are affirmed by the Bible. I do not admit that they are. Certainly they are not by the Bible as a whole."

In this last statement, Mr. Smith doubtless had in view those parts of the Bible which tell us that "God is love,"—that "he will not hold his anger forever"—that "His mercy endureth forever"—"Restitution of all things"—"the last enemy shall be destroyed,' etc., etc. He briefly refers to such parts of the Bible in a paragraph preceding the ones I have quoted, and which I will extract to show he plainly holds to restoration.

"When we are told that God has prepared an eternal hell—a place of endless and inconceivably exquisite tortures—for a large share of his children, we are sure that this shocking picture finds no counterpart in creation and Providence. These tell us of a Father, and not of a fiend; of love, and not of hatred; of forgiveness, and not of revenge. These tell us that in all ages God has made "his sun to rise on the evil and on the good," and has "sent his rain on the just and on the unjust;" and these bid us hope that in other worlds, as well as in this, he will still be the Father and Friend of men. We are bound to believe that he is as ready to afford his children opportunities in one stage of being as well as in another, for the improvement of their character; and that he is ever intent, as much in one world as in another, to do them good and not evil. And why should we doubt that God is as forgiving in another life as in this? Would Jesus have told us to set no limits to the time of forgiving our brother, had he believed that the exercise of God's forgiving Spirit is confined to this first brief stage of human existence? Would he have told us to be so much better than he believed God to be?"

From these extracts, we see Mr. Smith takes for granted the common, but unfounded doctrine, that all men are immortal. He also gives a prominent example of the tendency of our age to restorationism, and the cause of it—both in the church, and among the thoughtless men of the world. Being taught by all sects but two,—Universalists and Adventists, that the Bible teaches endless torture, multitudes lay it aside and taking reason for a guide—become heedless about religion. As Mr. Smith wisely remarks, even professors are not deeply influenced by the truths of the Scriptures, because one doctrine is doubted, and shocks their sense of justice, and goodness in God.

Plainly seeing, by long observation, this state of things, should brethren wonder, or complain as some do, that I should make the life and death question the best end of our points of reform? While nineteen out of twenty, or forty-nine out of fifty, among us, dwell chiefly on the prophecies, when new views are preached or written upon, I trust they will be satisfied to "give the fiftieth the right hand of fellowship, to go unto the Gentiles," and sound the alarm—that men are mortal—under the sentence of eternal death, and must "repent and be converted," or lose life and glory, at the soon coming of Christ,—to "cry aloud, and show the house of Israel, the church, their sins, in teaching endless misery,—to proclaim a jubilee—a day of release to millions of God's dear people, who are in sad bondage to gloom and fear, caused by a false doctrine.

Fifteen years ago, when God in mercy delivered me out of a forty years' bondage, I dedicated my time, energies and means to this work, while God gave me life and powers to act—I "vowed unto the Lord, and must perform my vows." Thanks be to my Master, that so far he has encouraged, comforted and given means, by raising up friends, to pursue my work. And though passing through persecutions and toils, it has been the happiest part of my life.

"What shall I render to my God,
For all his kindness shown;
My feet shall visit his abode,
My songs address his throne.
Yes, in His church I leave my vows,
And his rich grace record;
Witness ye saints who hear me now,
If I forsake the Lord."

A GOOD WORK.

We are glad to see our Brn. and Srs. awaking to the wants of the Freedmen at the South. This is a movement in the right direction,—the great field for missionary labor. There has none opened since missionary societies were formed, where so much could be accomplished in so short a time with so little means. They seem to be as greedy for truth, light and knowledge as they are destitute. Let us all do what we can to relieve their physical, intellectual, and spiritual wants. That field is all white for the harvest. Who will help gather in the sheaves? Now is the time. If we do not occupy the field, some one else will. If christians do not take hold of the work, Satan will devise means to sow tares. The children of the Lord now have a rich opportunity for doing much good with small means, and doing it too, where it will be appreciated and improved. We can never expect another so favorable. Who will help? We think we hear a thousand voices echo—"I will."

HOAG'S VISION.

In compliance with a request, we republish this week Hoag's vision, seen in 1803. Those of our readers who have not seen it, will be interested to read it; and those who have read it once, will find in it enough of interest to pay for a second reading.

When in Philadelphia, we learned from Sr. Jolliffe an interesting fact relative to the last part of this vision, which has not been published to the world. Sr. J. tried to obtain the manuscript, or a copy of it, but the Quakers were not willing. They claimed that what they had omitted to publish was only Mr. Hoag's opinion; whereas it was as much a part of the prophecy as that which is published. The substance of that which they kept back, and did not publish, was as follows:—The monarchical power will not continue long, for Christ will come and set up his kingdom.

The reason why the Quakers withheld this last part of the prophecy was because they did not believe in the literal coming of Christ to set up a kingdom; hence they claimed that this must have been Mr. Hoag's opinion, instead of coming from the same source as the rest of the vision. The fulfillment of the vision thus far is certainly remarkable, and we are looking for the next event very soon.

WAR DECLARED.

A new war has begun,—another Fort Sumter has been saluted by the batteries of the enemy, and an earnest conflict may be expected, that may not result in the temporal death of any, but the eternal death of millions. We refer to the new movement among Spiritualists as developed at their late convention, held at the Meionaon, (Tremont Temple Building,) Boston, May 30th, 31st, and June 1st, and 2nd.

In their published call for the meeting, we find one prominent object of the convention expressed in the following language:—

"Can any plan be devised to secure the co-operative action of Spiritualists for educational purposes, especially to bring our children under the influence of spiritual teachings, and thus to guard them against the demoralizing tendencies of POPULAR THEOLOGY?"

We were in to several of their meetings, and found the speakers very bold in denouncing the schools and especially the Sunday schools, now established in our country. No Roman Catholics would have been more in earnest about establishing a new system of schools for their children. And they have fully decided, with one voice, to carry it into effect. Hence they have openly declared war against the moral bearing of "POPULAR THEOLOGY," claiming in the most bold, out-spoken manner, that it is "DEMORALIZING," and so much so, that the Spiritualists are unwilling to send their children to their schools any longer.

We are hoping that this movement may open the eyes of some of our orthodox friends to see that the Spiritualist viper they have been cherishing in their bosoms begins to show signs of life; and that they have more to fear from its poisonous bite than from every other source of danger. They may be assured that a storm is rising of no ordinary magnitude, that is well calculated to scatter moral desolation in all directions, as effectually as the rebellion has spread political and financial evil.

When this new movement of the Spiritualists is seen in its true light, it will be found to be a combined effort of demons, operating through their mediums, against christianity, God and the Bible. It is anti-Christ at war with Christ and his truth. Said one of the prominent speakers in the convention:—"Nothing is true because Jesus said it; nor true because it is in the Bible. I receive nothing as true from any being in the universe outside of my own soul. I acknowledge no judge or God but my own soul."

Men who talk thus, rise up against the Bible and its defenders, and say they are "demoralizing" the world so much, that the time has come for what they call the "new dispensation" of Spiritualism, which must be "put into new bottles." They say "the old and the new cannot go together."

It was advocated by their most able speakers that "organization is absolutely essential to carry out their purposes;" and that Spiritualism is to be "the power of the world—a power to be feared."

We proposed some questions for consideration; and it was frankly admitted by an eloquent speaker, that those holding our faith were the only class worth noticing; all others were exploded; and that we "sustained ourselves, if the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures be admitted."

It was advocated that a system of religion that teaches rewards and punishments is "demoralizing;" hence, of course it follows, according to their premises, that the christian religion, as taught by Jesus and his apostles, was "demoralizing!" Yet this "new dispensation" claims to be "ancient christianity revived." It seems as though every one might see through the "Deceiver's" gauze, and behold his horrid deformity. Spiritualism is as far removed from christianity as Belial is from Christ, as sin from righteousness.

CYRUS.

It has been thought by some that the Cyrus who issued "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem" was not the one mentioned in the first chapter of Ezra. This point, we think, is forever settled by "the great inscription of Darius at Behistun." "Behistun is situated on the western frontier of the ancient Media, upon the road from Babylon to the southern Ecbatana, the great thoroughfare between the eastern and the western provinces of the ancient Persia. The precipitous rock, 1700 feet high, on which the writing is inscribed, forms a portion of the great chain of Zagros, which separates the high plateau of Iran from the vast plain watered by the two streams of the Tigris and Euphrates. The inscription is engraved at the height of 300 feet from the base of the rock, and can only be reached with much exertion and difficulty. It is trilingual: one transcript is in the ancient Persian, one in Babylonian, the other in a Scythic or Tatar dialect. Col. Rawlinson gathers from the monument itself that it was executed in the fifth year of the reign of Darius."

The following are some of those old inscriptions, as translated by Mr. Rawlinson:—

(1) I (am) Darius, (2) the great king, (3) the king of kings, (4) the king of Persia, (5) the king of the (dependent) provinces, (6) the son of Hystaspes, (7) the grandson of Arsames, (8) the Achæmenian.

(1) Says Darius the king—(2) This (is) what (was) done by me after that I became king. (3) (A man) named Cambyses, son of Cyrus, of our race, he was here king before me. (4) Of that Cambyses (there was) a brother, Bardes was his name; (5) of the same mother, (and) of the same father with Cambyses. (6) Afterwards Cambyses slew that Bardes. (7) When Cambyses had slain Bardes, it was not known to the people that Bardes had been slain. (8) Afterwards Cambyses proceeded to Egypt. (9) When Cambyses had proceeded to Egypt, then the state became wicked. (10) Then the lie became abounding in the land, both in Persia, and in Media, and in the other provinces.

(1) Says Darius the king—(2) Afterwards there was a certain man, a Magian, named Gomates. (3) He arose from Pissiachada, the mountain named Aracadres, from thence. (4) On the 14th day of the month Vayakhna, then it was that he arose. He thus lied to the state:—(5) "I am Bardes, the son of Cyrus, the brother of Cambyses." (6.) Then the whole state became rebellious. (7) From Cambyses it went over to him, both Persia, and Media, and the other provinces. (8) He seized the empire. (9) On the 9th day of the month Garmapada, then it was he so seized the empire. (10) Afterwards Cambyses, unable to endure, (?) died.

(1) Says Darius the king—(2) The empire of which Gomates, the Magian, dispossessed Cambyses, that empire from the olden time had been in our family. (3) After Gomates the Magian had dispossessed Cambyses both of Persia and Media and the dependent provinces, he did according to his desire: (4) he became king.

(1) Says Darius the king—(2) There was not a man, neither Persian, nor Median, nor any one of our family, who would dispossess that Gomates the Magian of the crown. (3) The state feared him exceedingly. (4) He slew many people, who had known the old Bardes; for that reason he slew them. (5) "lest they should recognise me that I am not Bardes, the son of Cyrus." (6) No one dared to say anything concerning Gomates the Magian, until I arrived. (7) Then I prayed to Ormazd; (8) Ormazd brought help to me. (9) On the 10th day of the month Bagayadish, then it was, with my faithful men, I slew that Gomates the Magian, and those who were his chief followers. (10) The fort named Sictachotes in the district of Media called Nisæ, there I slew him. (11) I dispossessed him of the empire. (12) By the grace of Ormazd I became king: (13) Ormazd granted me the sceptre.—Rawlinson's Herodotus, vol. ii. pp. 490–494.

TEMPERANCE TRACTS.

We wish to commend to our readers the "temperance tracts," published by Bro. Geo. Trask, Fitchburg, Mass. We think them most pithy, pointed, soul-stirring,—the best temperance tracts published. And do not fail to get a lot of his "anti-tobacco tracts." They are just the things to scatter every where, among all classes. Send him all the money you can spare for the purpose, and be assured you get its value in the tracts returned.

Read the following from his stirring pen:—

"Deadly drinks and drugs are fast gaining upon us'—vitiating morals, arming assassins, and ruining young men by thousands. We need something besides pulpits, prohibitory laws, and temperance societies for this crisis. We need the press which carries on all other causes, the popular newspaper and short scathing tracts by millions, which will be read in gin-palaces and find their way into the very purlieus of sin and depths of iniquity.

We publish such tracts. We sell them at common prices. We send them gratuitously to those who are unable to buy them. We call no man master. We constitute our own society. We are free to tell wine-bibbers, 'temperate drinkers,' rumsellers and lordly distillers just what we think in fearless style.

Gentle reader, if blessed with money, send for a generous quantity of these tracts; give them to your schools, and those dear youth will spread them as snow-flakes over your place. If you are poor, but long to snatch 'brands from the burning'—send for them,—you can have them 'without money and without price.' GEO. TRASK.

Temperance Depository, Fitchburg, Mass."

Come, Brn. and Srs., let us help Bro. Trask in his good and earnest work against a great evil.

CORRECTION.—In a few numbers of the last Crisis the article headed "Parian Chronicle" is credited to "Josephus' Wars," b. 6, c. 1, s. 5, which is a mistake. The "Parian Chronicle" is from Dr. Hales' Chronology; and the extract from Josephus is headed "FIGHTING SOULS."

PANTHEISM.

What is Pantheism? "The doctrine that the universe, taken or conceived of as a whole, is God; the doctrine that there is no God but the combined forces and laws which are manifested in the existing universe."—Webster.

Pantheism is derived from the two Greek words pan, all, and theos, God. A Pantheist does not believe that God exists as a being, but only as a principle in every thing. The ancient heathen held this doctrine, and the same is now taught by the spirits. The Pantheist would not say that every thing is God; nor that God is every thing, but like attraction, exists as a hidden principle in all things. Pantheistic views are spreading rapidly; indeed, a large number of church members are drifting into it, and all the Spiritualists, so far as we know, hold the doctrine.

The following article was clipped from Zion's Herald, published in Boston:—

"Pantheism is the form in which infidelity prevails on the continent of Europe in the present day; and by its illusions it satisfies many of those appetencies of the mind which would shrink from gaunt and grim Atheism. It pictures a fantasy with which the imagination may hold communion, and not of such a holy brightness as to drive back the spirit with oppressive sense of demerit. Indeed, sin can be regarded as no barrier in the way of intercourse with the divinity of this system, for the evil is just one of his own developments. Ample and accommodating, it professes to embrace within it all religions, and actually embraces all dead religions; and like the ancient Roman superstition of the days of the emperors, it is tolerant of all religions, always excepting a living and uncompromising scriptural religion which refuses to enter into alliance with it; just as the emperors erected temples to the grim divinities of Egypt and of the other nations that they conquered, and yet virulently persecuted the christians. Its fantasies may delude for a time the minds of the rich, the idle and the refined; but meanwhile there will be a feeling of emptiness and want in the depths of their bosoms; and the great mass of practical men will scorn the delusion which would be practised upon them, and rush to a real infidelity or a real superstition, recollecting only one lesson learned in the school of Pantheism, and that is a fatal habit of excusing moral evil as a step towards good, or as a necessary part of a beneficent development.

Looking to the present state of the continent of Europe, it might seem as if infidelity, under its various forms, were for a time to be predominant. France is not now the only nation in which it has taken possession of the thinking minds, which are always the most influential minds; it prevails to a greater or less extent in the majority of the continental countries. If less sanguine and boyant, if less confident and bold, than immediately before the first French revolution, it is more cautious and calculating, for it has learned some prudence and policy from its reverses. Working silently, and under cover of a respect for all religions as alike true, that is, alike false, it is working all the more surely; and its scattered forces will at length come to a head, and it will openly proclaim itself, and enter upon the death-struggle for which it is preparing."—McCosh.

A CORRECTION.

BRO. GRANT:—In the article on "The Resurrection of the Dead," copied from the Harbinger into the Crisis of the present week, there are inaccuracies of statement which, for the truth's sake, should not pass uncorrected. The writer, in allusion to Acts 24:14, 15, says: "The original word rendered hope occurs just thirty times, and is rendered confidence eighteen times, and hope twelve. In every instance where it is rendered hope it may be rendered expectation, and express the complete sense of the inspired penman. The sense is true of the Greek word Elpis." The last of these three sentences seems to imply that "Elpis" is not the word which is rendered "hope" in Acts 24:15. But "elpis" is "the original word" for "hope" in that passage. More than this, the word occurs not "just thirty times," but fifty-four times in the N. T.; and, if I mistake not, it is in every instance but one translated "hope" in the common version. It is never rendered "confidence." An examination of the places of its occurrence should satisfy any intelligent person that it generally (I believe always) in the N. T. means hope. "Expectation" is therefore a word that would not give "the complete sense of the inspired penman."

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—We were much comforted on Friday evening in the reception of a letter from Italy, from the mission there. It was from the hand of our dear and faithful Bro. M. B. Czechowski, and in it was a letter from a dear sister there, who has received the truth since he went there. It was written in French, but translated by interlining, by our brother, it may be. I am impressed to give you an extract as a "first fruits" of our mission, to encourage all our hearts.

Sister Catherine Revel says: "Very dear sister in Jesus Christ, I have learned with much pleasure that we have a sister in America who loves us and prays for us. My dear sister, how sweet it is to love each other as brethren. I have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with you, and we shall never see each other in this world; but if we persevere in the faith, we shall rejoice together through the ages of eternity. Dear sister, believe me, that I love you tenderly, and all the brethren and sisters of America; and I thank you that you have been so good to us, as to send us one of your faithful pastors, our dear M. B. Czechowski. Praise be to God for this blessing. My dear sister, God has inclined my heart to receive the truth. But I have much opposition. . . . Pray for me that I may bear all without murmuring.

My heart is pained to see that there are so few of our friends here who have the truth; our number is small. Pray for us, and we shall have the victory."

In Bro. Czechowski's letter, he says: "I recommend this dear sister to your special prayers, also her unconverted husband. She has done us all the good she could since her first acquaintance with us."

He further says, "We are more and more convinced that our call to come here was of God. Still we must have much faith, prudence, patience and perseverance, as emigrants to a new country, who must break up land, drain swamps, etc. . . and wait long for the reward of their labor; so here in wicked Europe, where true faith in God and obedience to the requirements of his word are almost unknown, we cannot expect a large harvest at once; but must labor and wait, trusting in God. Could we have a little printing press, type, paper and ink, so that we could commence at once the publication of tracts, etc. . . . as I wrote to the Crisis, not long since, much good, I believe, might be accomplished in this part of the Lord's vineyard."

Beloved brethren and sisters, if any of you failed to read that article in the Crisis, of April 25th, headed "Italian Mission," I beg of you to give yourselves the pleasure, and then comply with his earnest entreaty in these words: "Dear brethren and sisters, please join with me in prayer that I may be free to preach to them the everlasting gospel, and labor to bring some of them to a knowledge of the truth that they may be saved. There is no hope of them in the present state but, . . my heart's desire is that they may be saved."

AN APPEAL.

My beloved brethren and sisters, do we realize that this Italian Mission is emphatically OUR MISSION, as believers in the soon coming of our Lord? I confess with shame, that I am just waking up to the fact. I am glad to know that many noble souls are alive to this work, and I pray that with ourselves many more may be awakened to a sense of our responsibilities as a people to sustain this mission. God has raised up this brother in whom an excellent spirit, knowledge and understanding are found; and the interpreting of many different languages which is so indispensable in that country; and who himself was once in the same "gross darkness" of this same people, with whom he is now laboring, which fact must give him a key to their dungeon which none others can have. Shall his "large family" be sustained and he left free to work for God? I am daily praying to God to give me some money to help get that printing press. How much better I shall sleep when I know it is on its way, and doing its work. O that those dear souls may have the precious truth that so cheer our own hearts. Yours in the "blessed hope,"

E. S. WILLARD.

ASTRONOMICAL CONSIDERATIONS.

When two authors clash concerning an important point, it becomes those who are required to "prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good," to inquire as to the truth of the matter. Hence, on learning that Daniel, the prophet of God, and Ptolemy, the famous Egyptian astronomer, were at variance, differing forty-eight or fifty years, as to the time of the reign of Cyrus, king of Persia, I resolved to know the truth; and finding that Ptolemy's advocates claimed that his canon was supported by astronomy, I saw that astronomy must be the means by which the truth is to be ascertained; and after spending many years in examining the subject, I concluded that our fathers were mistaken, in supposing that astronomy supported Ptolemy, for it appeared to me that, instead of favoring him, it proved that he was incorrect, and established fully the truth of the word of God; and that all, without being dependent on my say so, might be furnished with the means of knowing for themselves that my calculations were correct, I proposed to furnish gratuitously tables arranged on a plan so simple that common people could soon know as much about the correctness of my chronology as the most learned astronomers; but finding that our brethren manifest but little desire to go into the investigations for themselves, I shall now resort to another means of satisfying all as to the incorrectness of the chronology which contradicts the word of God. In order to which, call to mind in the first place, that all tables make those eclipses which occur at the present day too near the truth for any serious error to be detected. Now stick one pin here, for our object is to make the subject so simple and plain, that all may see that Ptolemy's Canon is proven incorrect, and that the true Bible chronology is forever established.

In the second place, bear in mind that no tables, however exact they may be in making eclipses at the present day, can be relied on in computing those which occurred eighteen hundred years ago. Hence, all astronomers, as Prof. Hudson will observed, say, "we must not prove the eclipses by the tables, but the tables by the eclipses." Stick another pin there. Remember, this is not the mere opinion of Prof. Hudson, or the say so of William Thurman; but all astronomers, as with one voice, declare the same thing; that is, that we must first prove our tables by the eclipses, before they can be relied on to make those ancient eclipses. To use the words of Prof. Hudson, who has given us so much valuable information on the subject; or, to use the words of those learned astronomers whose language he quotes, "This is the received doctrine of the relation of the tables to old eclipses, given us in history generally reliable." He adds, "If an eclipse is recorded as accurately as reliable historical events generally are, then it becomes a standard; and the tables will come nearer and nearer to it, as they are made more and more accurate"

Now, dear reader, since we want the truth of the matter, do not hastily run over, or forget this. Remember, that though the tables be large enough to contain volumes, or the equations ten thousand, it is still just as necessary and indispensable to prove the correctness of the tables by the eclipses. We only allude to complicated tables, arranged on a large plan, because Prof. Hudson seems to suppose that the larger the tables, and the greater the number of the equations, the better. But all astronomers are aware that the simpler the plan on which correct tables can be arranged, the better, for making those ancient eclipses. For example, the tables as used by Prof. Hudson's so called "Oracle," are no doubt correct in making eclipses for the present day; but in running back eighteen hundred years, they are considerably in error. In proof of which, Ptolemy, the Egyptian astronomer, informs us that the moon was eclipsed six digits in A. D. 137; and that the middle of the eclipse was four hours after midnight; but the tables used by Prof. Hudson's "Oracle" eclipsed but four digits and five-tenths, and makes the middle only three hours and one minute after midnight.

Now as it is too absurd to suppose that an astronomer could have made a mistake of one hour as to time, and two digits as to quantity, in an eclipse, both seen with his own eyes, and calculated by himself, this is positive proof of the incorrectness of the tables by which Prof. Hudson tries to establish a chronology conflicting with the word of God. But since he admits that we are to correct our tables by the eclipses, he must get his "Oracle" to correct his, before he can have any further confidence in calculations made by them. And when his tables are thus corrected, they will make all of those eclipses which we have offered in proof of our Bible chronology, but will not make those which contradict the word of God. WM. C. THURMAN.

REMARKABLE LATTER DAY PROPHECY.

The following very remarkable prophecy has accidentally come into my hands; and, thinking it would be interesting to the readers of the Crisis, I herewith enclose the prophecy and what particulars I am able to get. The Philadelphia Press published this vision, or prophecy, of Joseph Hoag some years ago, and states that it is so remarkable in the accuracy of its details, that were its authenticity not attested by living witnesses, they should hardly credit it.

Joseph Hoag was an eminent minister of the gospel in the society of Friends. At the date of his subjoined vision, in 1803, this society was a unit, the division not having occurred until 1827. After the separation, Hoag affiliated with the Orthodox branch, in which connection he continued until his death in 1846, at the age of eighty-five. His ancestors were among the early settlers of New England, and lived for several generations in the State of New Hampshire, although he was born in Duchess Co., N. Y., but was early in life removed to the home of his ancestors. In his services as a minister, he traveled extensively throughout the United States, and is well remembered by a large number of the elder members of the society of Friends as a very gifted and spiritual-minded minister of the gospel. Those who knew him best say that he was a man of great piety, and very correct in life and conversation from his youth; also, that his spiritual perceptions were very clear, so much so, that he was often favored with a sense of the condition of other people without outward knowledge, and in many instances, known to persons still living, foretold circumstances which occurred long afterwards, and of which he could have had no knowledge when he predicted them. A journal of his life exists, in which the author says, "Hoag was a man of good understanding, retentive memory, and a mind seasoned with grace. His conversation was truly instructive. He appeared most conspicuous in the gift of the ministry, and the spirit of prophecy." The following is transcribed by his daughter,—who is still living,—in the year 1805, since which time many duplicate MS. copies have been made, and preserved by members of the society, as a curious, interesting, and, as the sequel has shown, an amazingly premonitory document.

"In the year 1803, in the eighth or ninth month, I was one day alone in the field, and observed that the sun shone clear, but a mist eclipsed its brightness. As I reflected upon the singularity of the event, my mind was struck into a silence the most solemn I ever remember to have witnessed, for all my faculties were low and unusually brought into deep silence. I said to myself, What can all this mean? I do not recollect ever before to have been sensible of such feelings.

"And I heard a noise from heaven, saying, 'This which thou seest is a sign of the present coming times. I took the forefathers of this country from a land of oppression; I planted them here among the people of the forest; I sustained them, and, while they were humble, I blessed them and fed them, and they became a numerous people. But they have now become proud, and have forgotten me, who nourished them and protected them in the wilderness, and are running into every ambition and evil practice of which the old countries were guilty, and have taken quietude from the land, and suffered a dividing spirit to come among them. Lift up thine eyes and behold!' And I saw them dividing in great heat. The division began in the churches on points of doctrine. It commenced in the Presbyterian Society, and went through the various religious denominations, and in its progress and close its effects were the same. Those who dissented went off with high heads and taunting language, and those who kept to their original sentiments appeared exercised and sorrowful. And when the dividing spirit entered the society of Friends, it raged in as high degree as in any I had noticed or before discovered; and, as before, those who separated went off with lofty looks and taunting, censuring language. Those who kept their ancient principles retired by themselves. It next appeared in the Lodges of Free Masons; it broke out in appearance like a volcano, inasmuch as it set the country in an uproar for a time.

"Then it entered politics throughout the United States, and did not stop until it produced a civil war. An abundance of blood was shed in the course of the combat; the Southern States lost their power, and Slavery was annihilated from their borders. Then a monarchical power sprang up, took the government of the States, established a national religion, and made all societies tributaries to support its expenses. I saw them take property from Friends. I was amazed at beholding all this, and I heard a voice proclaiming: 'This power shall not always stand, but with it I will chastise my church until they return to the faithfulness of their forefathers; thou seest what is coming upon thy native land, for their iniquities, and the blood of Africa, the remembrance of which has come up before me.'

"This vision is yet for many days. I had no idea of writing it for many years, until it became such a burden that for my own relief I have written it."

This was truly a wonderful vision, and it is a solemn warning for this people to humble themselves before God. We have but to look to past events to see how accurately it has been fulfilled thus far. The "monarchical power" is yet in the future, with which God is to punish his people for their unfaithfulness, until they return to the faithfulness of their forefathers." Let us as a people bow in humble submission to God's will.

For the World's Crisis.

WHO IS A CHRISTIAN?

That person who obeys God. It is the province of the Creator to command. Ours is to yield implicit obedience to his requirements. Some are half persuaded to be christians, and seem to act as if they were intent on making an experiment how little they can do and be recognized as such. But in reality we begin the christian life by obedience, we continue it by obedience, and we must go on in obedience to its close. Repentance, faith, baptism, prayer, and any requirement of the gospel, are but successive steps in the great work of christian obedience. Some believe and repent sincerely of all their sins, and there they come to a halt. They scruple, they question the propriety of this and that command. They would pray if they thought it would enlarge their enjoyment; they would be baptized if they thought they could feel like it; and they would join the church if they thought every one of its members was just what he professed, upright in life, and devoted and diligent in duty.

As a christian, I have no right to entertain a doubt concerning the commands of Christ, stop to debate which of his directions are not essential or proper for me to perform, nor stand back from organization, though there might be a half dozen Judases in full connection. With the Bible in my hand, and the spirit of personal, unqualified obedience in my heart, a desire to yield a ready and willing service will prompt me to decided action. Christ came to save sinners; but they must open the door of their hearts and let him come into them and sup with them, and they with him, before they can be benefited and blessed. The means prepared are abundant, but they must be made use of. The philosophy of the better life must be wrought out by earnest entreaty, noble endeavor, and actual submission to the claims of the gospel. It is what we do for ourselves, after all, that makes us happy and useful, and makes our calling and election sure.

There are a few plain conditions of salvation enjoined upon all. As rational creatures we should study the principles of the word of God with a prayerful disposition to know what they are, that we may perform them. Salvation by Christ is always presented with conditions, stated or implied. In order that man can be saved, he must lay hold of salvation, use the means that God hath given, practise the precepts he has laid down. Christ has promised to save, and he is ready and willing to save all that come unto God by him. But where in the gospel is held out a single hope to those who will not come. False hopes there are; but they are built on the sand. Such is the hypocrite's hope, but it shall be destroyed. The true hope is set in God, based on implicit obedience to his word; this makes us steadfast in Christ, so that we cannot be moved away from the faith. Who so weak in intellect that he does not know that he ought to obey God?

To become a christian is to let this knowledge make way for personal action. By disobeying the commands of God, we became guilty, sinful rebels; brought disgrace upon ourselves, and misery and death into the world. By complying with the principles of his great moral government, we redeem our character, enter into happiness, and insure eternal life. And thus you see it is as reasonable as it is honorable to become a christian. The only cause why you are not christians is because you will not be. The will is not in your way, as some suppose and preach, and as you will find by consulting the seventh chapter of Romans. But it is this little not that needs eliminating; this removed, and you will be christians. Now as you read these lines, you will know whether you are christians or not. For religion is a matter of knowledge as well as of faith and obedience. If you are, God grant you the courage to go on to perfection. If not, I pray that you in Christ may be reconciled to God. Obedience is better than sacrifice or sin. Obey God, become a christian, and be forever blest. A. A. LARON.

For the World's Crisis.

AN APPEAL.

From the Advent Christian church of Waterbury, to their brethren throughout the United States and Canada, greeting:—

Brethren, in view of a new field of labor opening in the southern portion of our country, and the pressing need and desire of the people for Bible truth, we suggest that an effort be made by the brethren generally for the salvation of this people, by sending laborers, to be supported by our united contributions, until the mission becomes self-sustaining. Can we not therefore cordially unite in a common effort for their preparation for the coming and kingdom of Christ?

REUEL F. SANFORD, Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. Cordray.

Bro. Grant:—I feel it duty to inform you and the readers of your excellent paper, (the Crisis), how I came by this new faith, as it is called by many. And truly it was new to me; for I never heard of it until I came to the State of Indiana, six years ago; though when a boy I had heard of a sect of people called "Millerites," that taught that the world was to come to an end on a certain day; and can remember well that it was said of these people, that they were crazy, etc., and often helped to laugh at the idea, particularly after the time passed, without any change in the world's history. When I came to Indiana, I was in faith and practice with the United Brethren, so called; and would have been a full member of that church, had it not been, that after a free and full investigation of the Scriptures of truth, in regard to the immortality of the soul, the final destiny of the wicked, the literal, personal coming of Christ to judge the world, etc., I was obliged to let go of error, and embrace the plain, immutable declarations of the word of God.

These subjects were first introduced to me by Bro. J. Rupel, of Sumption's Prairie, while at work putting up his barn. One day while we were talking in regard to the different churches, he stated that there were some things taught in the Methodist, and other churches, generally, that he could not indorse. I inquired what they were? He stated among other things that the immortal-soul theory and eternal misery were not taught in the Bible. I was startled, shocked, to think there were any but heathen and infidels who would talk so. He then asked me whether I would candidly and honestly investigate these subjects, and take the word of God as the man of my counsel? I consented, and went to work. I read and studied night and day, and tried my best to find one positive text in proof of what I considered truth, and taught upon every page in the Bible; but to my astonishment, I could find none. I could find positive assertions among the teachings of men; but not where I expected to find them, in the Bible. The question then came up, what shall I do? the answer was, "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto men more than unto God, judge ye." I yielded to the teachings of the Bible, viz., that "life and death" is set before us, that "the soul that sinneth it shall die," that "the dead know not anything," that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest," that "in the day thou eatest thereof" (Heb.—dying) thou shalt surely die," that "if Christ be not raised . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished;" and a host of other passages that might be given, but I forbear. It is enough. But Oh! the persecutions I had to endure. No sooner had I come out on the side of truth, than the cry was heard, "You have lost your religion." False reports were sent back to Ohio, my native State. Some thought me crazy; others that I was an infidel, and would not believe anything in the Bible. I could no longer associate and worship with those I formerly did. My name was cast out as evil. Believe me, it was a trial for so young a convert; but thank God, my feet were upon the rock. My faith was unshaken in God's eternal truth. I was made to triumph over all opposition. Bless his name. And now I am determined, by the grace of God, to find a home in the kingdom, which I believe is soon to come. May the Lord help us all to be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord." In love, yours,

Lakeville, Ind. E. Cordray.

From Bro. N. H. Reed.

Bro. Grant:—Thinking that you and others might wish to hear from one who has made a liberal purchase in books and tracts (over $100 worth), and the distribution of them, I shall endeavor to give you a short sketch of my travels and success. On the 27th of April I left my native Hillsburgh and those I loved in the cause, and as the Lord would direct I took an eastwardly course towards the Annapolis valley on my way to Bridgetown. I made but few calls, as there were some scattered brethren and sisters who were endeavoring to let the light of truth shine around them.

At Bridgetown I made some sales of Bro. Thurman's Chronology, with other books and tracts. From thence I crossed over the mountain near Chute's Cove. There I found Bro. Ingham laboring earnestly for the salvation of souls. The Lord's day previous he baptized three. I found that a number here though poor in this world were rich in faith, and I trust heirs of the kingdom soon to come. I had many prayers offered on my behalf and the success of truth. Here the people having access to the Crisis and books and tracts from the office, I made but few sales or distributions.

From Chute's Cove I drove back over the Mt. to Annapolis valley, traveling eastward, sometimes north and sometimes south of the Annapolis river. Here I might say that from Chute's Cove to Winson I have been some twenty days, traveling from five to eight miles per day, not passing a district or village without leaving some fruits of my labor, and was blessed with meeting with some good brethren and sisters waiting for the return of the Master from heaven, and endeavoring to let their light shine before men. Upon the whole I found much opposition. Many hard struggles I had in contending for the truth. Some would deny the inspiration of some parts of the Bible, rather than yield to the truth. Some would confound Spiritualism with Bible. Others would conclude by saying that they did not know what to believe, since there are so many different teachers gone out into the world. I found it of but little worth to tell some people of the Lord's coming, who believed that death brought the Lord, and they would get their reward then.

Some of the clergy, to whom I presented Bro. Thurman's Chronology, said they had no fellowship for such works, and would make many heinous remarks upon those that have written upon prophecy. O that the truth may prosper and some poor souls saved out of their errors and wait for the Son of man from heaven the second time. I found that the cause of Christ languished fearfully especially among the richer parts of this country. It seemed that the majority of the clergy and people are seeking after pleasure and worldly gain.

I feel strong in the Lord, and mean to continue my love and labor, with the Lord's assistance, toward my fellow men; and as I have made distribution and sales of nearly all of the books and tracts I received at the Crisis office, I would here enclose $14.00, which you will please send me the value of in books and tracts to Halifax, Nova Scotia. Your Bro., waiting for Christ from heaven,

Nelson H. Reed.

Winson, Hants Co., N. S., May 31st.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—Permit a few words from your aged Bro., who both sees and feels the worth and the needs of the cause of Bible truth. In my labors I come in contact with all kinds of men and of minds, of views, and tenets, and need much heavenly wisdom to know how to meet all these varieties so as to benefit them. There is a growing interest in all this region of country to hear and investigate the subjects connected with the Advent. Doors are open every where, and men are wanted to preach the peculiar doctrines held by the Adventists. And there are many whom I know personally, who are capable of expounding Bible truths, and need encouragement to go forward in this duty. Let me say to them, it is not so expensive a work as many imagine. If my experience is worth any thing, it will teach that a man with small means may sustain himself in this cause.

It appears to me that there is not all that economy used which should be by Advent preachers. Now do not be tried, brethren, while I point out what I think is wrong management. Your labors are too scattering. I often know instances of preachers going a hundred miles for one day's labor, probably at the expense of twelve dollars going and returning. Well, perhaps they would get five dollars, and come home complaining that the church did not sustain the preachers, and speak of them as covetous and worldly-minded. Now let a feeble brother recommend a course which I have always followed. Suppose you are to go a hundred miles to a certain place. Go on foot, be twenty days in going, that would be only five miles a day; most any man can do that, have a meeting every evening on the route, and visit as many families as possible. There would be twenty discourses, and many visits, and no expense of money. Then return the same way, preaching every evening, visiting many families, reproving, rebuking, exhorting, comforting and instructing; that would give forty meetings in forty days, and no expense of money; and I venture you would come home satisfied with the liberality of the brethren, and with many scrips and widows' mites. In this way the gospel of the kingdom might be preached to all the world in a very few years.

Brethren, you who feel the fire burning in your bones, and long to speak that you may be refreshed, go forward, trust in the Lord, lean upon his arm, do duty, and God will bless you, and you will be a blessing, and have many as stars in the crown of your rejoicing in the great day. Try it, and if my experience is good for any thing, you will not lack any good thing; you will find hospitable homes and friends, fathers, mothers, brethren and sisters every where. Your Bro.,

Cornville, Me. B. Spaulding.

From Bro. L. C. McKinstry.

Brn. and Srs.:—It has been so long since you have heard from Bro. McKinstry, that it may be some of you are wondering whether he is still striving for the kingdom. I can say to-day that the truth is still precious to me, and I love the appearing of Jesus. O! I want to be ready. It does seem as though Jesus would scarcely find faith on the earth when he comes. How cold and dead people are! but few are heeding the cry. O! do not get to sleep; but be intensely awake, and let the truth permeate and thrill your whole being. How glad I am that I have learned a better way than the nominal churches have found. I see them conforming to the world more and more, playing checkers on prayer-meeting night at the place of meeting, and deferring the meeting till another time; holding political offices, and calling these earthly governments their governments. I am a fifth monarchy man. I want a citizenship in the Mountain kingdom,—that everlasting one. How good it will be to be there. God help us to be faithful, and bring us there safely. Amen. Your Bro. looking for Jesus,

Dearly Beloved:—Through the goodness of our heavenly Father I stand and rejoice in the hope of the soon coming of the King of Israel, who shall reward all according as their works shall be. There is a glorious prospect just ahead,—life for the weary pilgrim. A little from this we shall see the Lord of life and glory. The desert will then blossom as the rose, and all the waste places will be as the garden of the Lord. Cheer up, pilgrim, fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man.

Bro. Addison Wheeler writes from Washington, D. C.:

"I am here teaching contraband children, and I hope to be able (by the blessing of the good Lord) to do some good besides teaching the children. I desire the prayers of all my brethren and sisters in Christ that I may be a blessing to these poor colored people. I desire to have some communication with those of my acquaintance, and as many others as will please to write me, directing as below.

A free subscriber in Maine writes:

"I am very thankful to you for sending me the Crisis free so long. I am poor, but I hope soon to be a paying subscriber. I am doing what I can for the Crisis, and have obtained one new subscriber, whose name I now send you with $2.50 for one year." s. c.

Obituaries.

Kenney. Died in Blackstone, April 16th, of consumption, Mrs. Catharine Kennedy, aged sixty-two years.

This inestimable woman, after great and severe suffering, is led a captive in the chains of mortality and the habiliments of slavery to the king of terrors. She successfully solved the problem of life, by attaining unto that higher christian life, which became replete with priceless virtues; tractable and yielding in their relations to the world, in which she agonized, and brightened her pathway to the grave, till it shown with lustre borrowed from the face of God. She leaves behind children who have walked with her the pilgrimage of life, and have kept watch and ward together in its vicissitudes and trials. They still remember her in scenes to which the world was not witness, and where the better feelings of humanity were exhibited without disguise. The memory of her virtues still linger in their remembrance, and will reflect their lustre beyond the portals of the tomb. This earthern vase, though broken, hath lost none of its precious fragrance. In this lesson of life, may her children learn wisdom, that, in the triumph over death, they may realize a happy reunion on the banks of the river of life, invested with all the virtues of a divine individuality. C. G. Carre.

Gilman. Died in West Farnham, C. E., May 8, 1865, my brother, Charles A. Gilman, youngest son of Wm. Gilman, of Melbourne, C. E., aged thirty years.

Death for the first time has entered our family and snatched away an affectionate son and brother. He was confined to his house the greater part of the winter, and to his bed for about two months before he died. His last sickness was painful, but while prostrated with disease he sought for the forgiveness of his sins, and found peace with God, and is now sweetly sleeping in Jesus, we trust.

The funeral was in Waterloo, where a large congregation assembled to pay respect to his memory, and listened to an excellent discourse by Eld. J. M. Orrock, from Rev. 21:4. S. R. Gilman.

Dinsmore. Died in East Bowdoinham, Me., May 13, 1865, very suddenly, of heart disease, Bro. William Dinsmore, aged sixty-eight years.

At the time of his death, be was reclining on a lounge, conversing with a neighbor on the state of the dead; when raising himself a little, he gasped two or three times and died. Truly there is but a step between us and death. Bro. D. was aware that he had a disease that might terminate his life at any moment, and was trying to live every day as though it was the last he had to live. May God bless the mourning friends. H. D. Reed.

Burnham. Died in Boston, May 22, 1865, Ellen, daughter of Mr. James and Nellie Burnham, aged six months and twenty days.

We endeavored to comfort the mourning circle with the promise that Ellen would be brought again from the land of the enemy. May this dispensation be sanctified to the good of the bereaved, so that they may be brought finally to share everlasting blessedness in the kingdom of God.

A. W. Sibley.

Hamlin. Died in Clinton, Me., Sr. Etta, daughter of Jesse M. and Mehitable Hamlin, aged twenty-three years.

She was beloved by her friends and all christians, and accepted of God. She sleeps in Jesus. Sermon by L. L. Howard. Charles Stratton.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool May 20th, Londonderry 21st.

The Paris correspondence of the Morning Herald asserts that the news of the opening of recruiting offices for Mexico in New York and Washington, created an immense sensation. The Paris Moniteur refrains from any allusion to it. The general impression is that Napoleon will not stand it, and will direct the French squadron to intercept any reinforcements for Juarez.

The Paris correspondent of the Times also says this matter makes the Empress regent and ministers long for the return of the Emperor from Algeria.

Strange rumors were current on the Stock Exchange in London on the 19th inst., but though unconfirmed had a depressing effect. The most prominent was that Napoleon had been urgently recalled to Paris in consequence of the prospect of American aggression on Mexico; also Maximilian had been shot. The Paris Bourse was comparatively steady, and it was believed that the stories were concocted by speculators. Mexican securities were decidedly lower.

Liverpool May 24th, Queenstown 25th.

The news of the Mexican emigration schemes in the United States attracts attention.

The London Daily News remarks that if Mr. Johnson intended to give France cause to declare war he would not now be disbanding armies and selling ships. It is probable, however, that the throne of Maximilian may be endangered by the help which Juarez may get from the American people in ways which Napoleon will have no right to remonstrate against.

The Morning Post says reliable information leads to the inference that, so far as Mr. Johnson is concerned, he has no intention of interfering either in Mexico, or, what is more important, in Canadian affairs.

London, May 25. The London Owl says that the question of the Alabama depredations has reached an unpleasant point, Great Britain having refused indemnity, and the American rejoinder alludes to compulsion.

The Paris Moniteur confirms the revocation of the order limiting the stay of Federal vessels in French ports, and says that France has also announced that she will hasten the removal of all other restrictions as soon as the Washington Cabinet ceases to exercise the exceptional rights, which, as belligerents, it is enabled to claim toward neutral vessels.

The Moniteur states the belief that Johnson will continue the wise and friendly policy of Mr. Lincoln.

DOMESTIC.

New York, June 3. The Times' Washington dispatch says the trial of Davis will take place on or about the 19th. The trial cannot occupy more than three or four days in the impanneling of the jury and presentation of evidence.

New York, June 5. The Tribune's Washington dispatch says it is reported on good authority that Secretary Stanton has resigned, though it is not positively confirmed. It is known that he leaves the Cabinet very soon. It is said that when he was in consultation with the President the latter was obliged to remind the Secretary that he was himself President of the United States.

The differences of opinion between Secretary Harlan and Mr. Usher, his predecessor, is assuming a serious form. The former insists upon changing the huge contracts made by the latter just before leaving the Interior Department. As a result of the complication Judge Otto, Assistant Secretary, leaves the Department, and will be succeeded by John Wilson, Third Auditor.

Washington, June 5. The President has within the past few days received a violently threatening letter, which has been placed in the hands of the proper authorities for investigation. The letter was mailed in this city, and bears the signature "Grape Vine."

A Glance over the World.

The "Israelite Indeed" thus speaks of the condition of the world, and the ending up of this dispensation:

The condition of the Jews strongly indicates that the coming of the King, and the winding up of the history of the gospel dispensation, are near at hand; and many of us may still be in the flesh to witness the ushering in of the great day of the Lord. But there are other strong signs of the times, from which the faithful believer in the Kingdom of God may derive the same conclusions. The whole habitable world is in motion. There is a general agitation among all nations; a roaring, like that of an approaching thunderstorm. The great empire of the middle kingdom is in a state of rebellion; Japan is nearly in the same condition; feud and murder are constant among the princes, nobles, and common people. In India are strong symptoms of another out-break, of a great rising against their English rulers. In New Zealand the war between the natives and the colonists is still raging. Russia is unsettled; the serf affairs are still agitating the whole community; and the ground under the feet of the noble-minded Czar is trembling. The Turk has long since become a man of snow, who gradually melts away; and soon the place where he stood will not be found. And, while the European portions of his empire, where he had long since but a shadow of authority, are, some in open, and some in masked rebellion, the Asiatic portions, the fanatical Syrian Mohammedans, curse him as a heretic, and give vent to their indignation by murdering the christians, and even each other. Austria is obliged to keep not only a watchful eye, but also a well prepared army to hold down the Italians of Venice on one side and the dissatisfied Hungarians on the other. The Italian pot is boiling over on all sides; Rome is the golden apple for which they have so strong a desire; but it is unfortunately watched by the French Cerberus. France, as everybody knows, stands upon volcanic ground. England; why England seems to be at peace with all her neighbors; but, of course, an armed peace, as she knows well that these good neighbors hate her, and look with the eyes of jealousy upon her prosperous state. And America, the free and great America, is now entirely out of joint. In this great republic brothers are arrayed against brothers, and thousands upon thousands fall victims to the unnatural strife. In Mexico, in South America, as well as in the centre of this continent, wherever we look, we behold but strife and trouble among the inhabitants.

Thus a glance around the world shows us a singularly extended state of war, rebellion, disorganization, distress, and uneasiness. Shall we therefore not lift up our heads, and take courage, believing that all these events are forerunners of our glorious King and Messiah, who will soon come to restore order and peace among belligerents? Hasten, O Lord. Come quickly! Yea, come and deliver the world from all the evils which are the source of all tribulation.

Jewish Intelligence.

Jerusalem. The cultivation of cotton has given a new impulse to industry and commerce in these capes. You will be pleased to learn, I doubt not, that manufactures and internal improvements are quite the order of the day in this long desolated land, not only amongst the Frank sojourners, whose influence, by-the-by, is most decidedly in the ascendant, but amongst the stolid Turks themselves. A very fine steam cotton establishment has just been set in successful operation in this city, and several steam silk factories in the mountains, as well as within the suburbs. A steam press has also been lately put in operation by the A. B. C. F. M., in addition to the large hand-printing establishment it has long kept busily employed in this city. A large breakwater is about to be erected by a French company; steam carriages about to be placed upon the new Damascus road; and water brought from the River Lycus, some six or eight miles distant. And it is believed that at last, after so many fruitless efforts to procure a concession from the Sublime Porte, a railway is about to be laid down from Jaffa to the Holy City. But whether the Firman has been granted to Dr. Zimpel or to our English company applicant, I am not informed. Perhaps you are not aware that this very learned, excellent and benevolent brother, albeit somewhat eccentric, whom I had the happiness of baptizing in the Jordan about twelve years ago, has been spending many months, and much money, too, I fear, at Constantinople, endeavoring to procure a concession from the Sultan for this purpose. The Euphratean railway, it is now positively asserted, is actually commenced, despite all obstacles—its entering point being, as of right it ought to be, "at the entering in of Hamath," just under the shadow of Mt. Casius, that ancient landmark of Moses—Mt. Horhor. The telegraphic wire now stretches in three directions from old Berytus, the Beeroth of Solomon, one of its branches running to Egypt via Jaffa and the City of the Great King! Shade of Solomon! Is not this at least "something new under the sun"?—(Extract from a letter of Dr. Barclay.)

Loss of life in the War.—Official returns in the War office show that the deaths in the army since the war broke out, so far as heard from, with the estimate made for those returns not handed in, including starved prisoners, etc., will aggregate about three hundred and twenty-five thousand! These are the deaths alone. When we estimate the wounded in the ratio of three for every one killed —which is less than the usual average—we see at what a fearful sacrifice of life and limb the nation has preserved its existence.

The Crops. From all parts of the States and from Canada, we learn that the growing crops never gave greater promise. The wheat and hay crops in particular are represented to be unusually forward, and the yield is expected to be immensely over a common average.

Notices.

Advent Christian Conference.

The Minnesota Second Advent Christian Conference will hold its annual session at Elliota, Fillmore Co., (near the Iowa Station), commencing on Friday, June 30, 1865, and continuing over the first day. A general attendance of christians is desirable. Come, dear brethren, let there be a general gathering. Come laden with grace to work for the salvation of souls. Inquire for James Bersell, etc. Philip Ramer, Secretary.

Notice.

Bro. Grant:—We wish, through the Crisis, to give notice to the brethren generally, that we have published a work entitled,

"The Truth made Plain: or an Exposition of the Times and Seasons,"

showing that the second personal appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ will take place no later than 1867, and probably in the spring of that year. It contains an exposition of all the periods relating to the time of that event, both in the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation. It contains seven different expositions of Revelation alone, which we think are clear and easily to be understood. The 2300 and 1335 days are shown to terminate at the same time, or together.

We propose to send the work to all who may desire it, on receiving four cents to pay the postage, leaving it to them to pay for it or not, as they shall feel disposed, after reading it. It contains 270 12mo pages, in pamphlet form. The price of the book to those who are able, and may feel disposed to pay for it, after having read it, is sixty cents. To those who are unable to pay, "without money and without price."

All orders must be addressed to Dr. A. Decker, Newark, N. J. S. W. Bishop, A. Decker.

Tremont Campmeeting.

The fifth annual campmeeting will commence at Tremont, Tuesday, July 25th, and hold over the following Sabbath. The Committee will make arrangements for boarding. Bro. Hiram Munger will preside, arrange for the preaching, and give due notice of the same. By order of the Committee.

Notice.

The next annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Manchester, Delaware Co., Iowa, commencing June 15th, 1865, and continuing over the first day. Strangers may call on Bro. Come, brethren and sisters, while it is evident that those who love the Lord will soon see the King in his beauty, let us see to it that we are found faithfully discharging our duty at his appearing. D. W. Griffin, Clerk.

LET IT PASS.

Be not swift to tell of care,
Anger is a foe to snare,
Let it pass.
Brood not lightly o'er a wrong,
Which will all depart ere long,
Rather sing this cheering song.—
Let it pass, let it pass.

Strife corrodes the purest mind,
As the unregarded wind,
Let it pass;
Any vulgar souls that live,
May condemn without reprieve,
'Tis the noble who forgive.
Let it pass, let it pass.

Echo not an angry word,
Think how often you have erred.
Let it pass,
Since our joys must pass away,
Like the dewdrops on the spray,
Wherefore should our sorrows stay?
Let it pass, let it pass.

If for good you're taken ill,
Oh be kind and gentle still.
Let it pass.
Time at last makes all things straight,
Let us not resent, but wait,
And our triumph shall be great.
Let it pass, let it pass.

Bid your anger to depart,
Lay these heavenly words to heart.
Let it pass.
Follow not the giddy throng,
Better to be wronged than wrong,
Therefore sing the cheery song,—
Let it pass, let it pass.

For the World's Crisis.

A LETTER.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—The present seems an opportune moment for stirring up your pure minds to look in a new direction for the exercise of that noble generosity, characterizing those who have given all for Christ, and are waiting for the kingdom of God. Yes, it is a new hand that now raps at the door of our charity for admittance; and shall we fear to open immediately? No, the object is too palpable to admit of any misgivings. For years we have ardently prayed, "Let thy kingdom come," but thank God that old mother earth has continued her daily rounds until the direful stain of slavery has been wiped from her bosom. Inspiration exhorts the brethren of the apostle James to "be patient unto the coming of the Lord," and what could make us wait more patiently for our blessed Savior than witnessing the chains of oppression broken off from four millions of human beings, even if their skin was tinged a little darker than our own? Thank Heaven, that I have lived to see so bright a spot on a planet darkened with sin.

Brethren and sisters, it seems to me that now is the time to let our light shine, by performing good works to Afric's sons and daughters; and do you not think it will glorify our Father who is in heaven, for us to send our mite to aid in enlightening four millions of minds just emerged from the dark yoke of slavery, where generation after generation the law of the land has strictly forbidden them books and letters? Must they not, like the inhabitants of Zabulun and Nephthalim, sit in great darkness? Christ came here to this planet to enlighten such (Matt. 4: 16), and shall not you and I go and do likewise? Christ leaves his children here until his second coming, as his agents, to carry out his plans; and don't we love to practice self-denial to carry out the plans of one who died to save us? Inspiration informs us that we are "laborers together with God;" yes, the God of heaven condescends to work with such poor worms as you and I. Not that he is incompetent to do the work alone; but through a merciful desire to make something of poor insolvent human nature, it is his great plan to take us into company with himself. Now if we work with God, shall we not straightway do something for the Freedmen of the South? Can we not plainly see God's hand engaged in their behalf? As the law of our land was five years since, we could do nothing comparatively; but now we are free to send our ministers and teachers to preach and teach a coming kingdom, without imperiling their lives. Is it not wonderful what incessant victories have followed the Union armies since the late Emancipation act? But does it not exemplify still more striking interposition of Providence, to see these poor men and women, so long kept in impenetrable darkness, evince such a thirst for knowledge? Ah! it is quite apparent that God is in this move, and if we work with him in this matter, we shall receive his commendation and praise. Hasn't God worked for the slave? Yes, he has done what you and I could not; now, you and I can do our part of the work by sending our mite to help them. But says one, How can I help them? Help them by your prayers, help them by your money, help them by your clothing. Can you not give them as much as the widow's mite? One farthing may procure an eulogy from the King of kings; and this is one reason why I would urge all to do their little; that God's blessing may rest upon them.

What I fear is, that some will be deterred from doing because, alas, they can do so little. Now, as you fear God, and believe his word, I beseech you let not this deter you from doing what you can. Look here. If you can give five cents, ask some other brother or sister if they can give five, and let them inquire of some other friend, whether he thinks as you do or not, upon matters of theology (get everybody to do good you can); it may be you can get twenty-five or fifty cents together. "But then I am unaccustomed to writing and sending such a trifle to the "National Freedmen's Relief Association." Well, put it in an envelope with your name, or without, just as you prefer, and direct to Mrs. B. Mathewson, Castleton, Vt., and I will send it to the poor Freedmen forthwith, as I am now engaged in getting up a box of clothing and also collecting what money I can to send them. My brother, Addison Wheeler, has a large school in Washington, D. C., in which he is engaged during the week; and then a Sunday school on Lord's day. I intend to forward to my brother the clothing and money as soon as practicable, perhaps in three or four weeks; and I take this opportunity to solicit donations from the friends in Sandy Hill, Poultney and Rutland, to join us here in Castleton in making out a box of clothing for the poor Freedmen. Any article from an infant's shirt to full sized men and women's garments is solicited. Pins, needles, thimbles scissors, etc., also tracts, if any have them. Perhaps in some of the places mentioned the friends are getting up a box; if so, may prosperity attend them. But if circumstances forbid your making out a whole one, please join us in Castleton in this Godlike work.

But, says one, is this religion to send money and clothes to the Freedmen? I think so. Let us see if Christ does not acknowledge it to be his religion, when he sits on his regal throne, and says, "Come, ye blessed," etc. The reason,—"I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat;" "naked, and ye clothed me;" whereupon, these blessed ones, in astonishment inquire, WHEN did we feed and clothe you? Says Christ, "Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the LEAST of these, . . . ye have done it unto me." I think it will not be denied by those acquainted with the facts, that God has many devoted children among the Freedmen of the South.

Perhaps it may be thought that I have left their mental, to plead for their physical wants. No. I am engaged for both. The place where I send, they have a teacher, but circumstances necessarily render them very poorly clad. Now my friends, whatever you have to spare of money, or clothing, to these poor Freedmen, from one penny to a thousand, or from the smallest garment for children to the size of manhood or womanhood, please forward it without delay. The day may not be distant, when you and I may be confined upon a bed of languishing, for the most healthy and hardy are not impervious against the power of disease; and then we shall desire an efficient hand to make our bed; and if we rightly consider the poor, we have the promise that none less than the God of heaven will make our bed, when worn with disease. What physician can make us so comfortable? Please turn to the 91st Psalm, and read three verses where this promise stands out in bold relief.

Little children should be encouraged to give their pennies to this cause, instead of spending them for candies, etc. A week or two since the subject was brought before the children of our Sunday school, here in Castleton, and they were invited to bring their pennies, and the children have already contributed about two dollars and a half. Will not other Sunday scholars do likewise? Now let me urge it again upon all, not to say, I can't do anything, because incapacitated to do great things. B. MATHEWSON.

Castleton, Vt., May 18th.

P. S. Since writing this, I have learned that the Sandy Hill church have contributed about eighteen dollars in money. God bless them. B. M.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER ELEVEN.

To BRO. C.:—Dear Brother,—I think I can not profit you more, than by giving you some brief extracts of experience touching the subject of our last epistle—"In the mouth of two or three witnesses, shall every word be established." The witnesses that I shall call upon to testify are from the high walks of life, and the low; the private individual, and the pastor and bishop; the educated, and the illiterate; male, and female,—members of various churches.

The first whom I shall introduce was a class leader, so ignorant that he could not read much until quite advanced in life, and unable to write until past sixty years of age, if I remember right. Yet, notwithstanding these disadvantages, he was eminently successful in winning souls to Christ, thus evincing himself "wise" in the highest sense. He had been seeking with all his heart for the endowment of power from on high, and when he came to the point where his faith laid hold on the promise of God, and he exclaimed from the heart, "I shall have the blessing now!" "that moment," he says, "I felt the refining fire go through my heart, illuminating my soul, scattering its life through every part, and sanctifying the whole. I then received the full witness of the Spirit that the blood of Jesus had cleansed me from all sin. I cried out, 'This is what I wanted. I have now got a new heart.' I was emptied of self and sin, and filled with God."—Carvasso.

Benjamin Abbott, a minister in the lowly walks of life, thus testifies: "That moment the Spirit of God came upon me in such a manner that I fell flat to the floor, and lay as one strangling in blood, while my wife and children stood weeping over me. But I had not power to lift hand or foot, nor yet to speak one word; I believe I lay half an hour, and felt the power of God running through every part of my soul and body, like fire consuming the inward corruptions of fallen, depraved nature. In three days God gave me a full assurance that he had sanctified me, soul and body." He was very successful in the ministry.

Bishop Hamlin testifies: "All at once he felt as though a hand, not feeble but omnipotent, not of wrath but of love, were laid on his brow. He felt it not only outwardly, but inwardly. It seemed to press upon his whole body, and to diffuse all through and through it a holy, sin-consuming energy. As it passed downward, his heart as well as his head was conscious of the presence of this soul-cleansing energy, under the influence of which he fell to the floor, and in the joyful surprise of the moment cried out with a loud voice. . . . For a few moments the depth of God's love swallowed him all up; all its billows and waves rolled over him."

Mrs. Hester A. Rogers says: "I was deeply penetrated with his presence, and stood as if unable to move, and was insensible to all around me. While thus lost in communion with my Savior, he spake these words to my heart: 'All that I have is thine. I am Jesus in whom dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. I am thine. My Spirit is thine. My Father is thine. They love thee as I love thee. The whole Deity is thine. He even now overshadows thee. He now covers thee with a cloud of his presence.' All this was so realized to my soul, in a manner I can not explain, that I sank down motionless, being unable to sustain the weight of his glorious presence and fulness of love."

Dr. Upham, Professor of Bowdoin College, a Congregationalist, thus testifies respecting his reception of the baptism of the Spirit:—"I was distinctly conscious when I received it. I was then redeemed by a mighty power, and filled with the blessing of perfect love. . . . There was calm sunshine upon my soul. The praise of God was continually upon my lips. . . . There was no intellectual excitement, no marked joys, when I reached this great work of practical salvation. But I was distinctly conscious when I reached it.

Mrs. Upham says of her reception of the blessing:—"But I had come to the Bible to receive and believe it all, and my eyes fastened on the promise of our Savior, 'Blessed are they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled.' Blessed, sweet promise! my heart swells with emotion while I repeat it. While pleading this promise, kneeling before God with the words upon my lips, I felt a sweet assurance that my prayer was heard; a sensible peace entered into my soul. I arose and returned to my Bible with new emotion. Now I saw and believed. . . . But after this peace or love entered into my soul, nothing moved me."

Mrs. Phœbe Palmer thus expresses her exercises at the time of receiving the gift of power:—"While thus exulting, the voice of the Spirit again appealingly applied to my understanding, 'Is not this sanctification?' I could no longer hesitate; reason as well as grace forbade; and I rejoiced in the assurance that I was wholly sanctified throughout, body, soul, and spirit. O with what triumph did my soul expatiate on the infinitude of the atonement! I saw its unbounded efficacy as sufficient to cleanse a world of sinners, and present them faultless before the throne. I felt that I was enabled to plunge and lose myself in this ocean of purity! yes,

'Plunged in the godhead's deepest sea,
And lost in love's immensity.'"

We have further testimony on this subject, which we will defer to our next.

Yours truly, M. D. W.

For the World's Crisis.

FOOLISH TALKING AND JESTING.

"Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment: and some men they follow after. Likewise, also, the good works of some are manifest beforehand: and they that are otherwise cannot be hid."—1 TIM. 5: 24, 25.

Foolish talking and jesting is a sin. Look at it.

1. Paul in writing to the Ephesians says,—"Be ye followers of God as dear children, and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us; "but fornication, and all uncleanness or covetousness, let it not once be named among you, as becometh saints; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather let there be "giving of thanks." You perceive, reader, that "foolish talking and jesting" stand in the same cluster with "filthiness," "fornication and all uncleanness," as if they belonged to the same family. Paul had seen them in close company. Heathenism shows them associated in fact, as the out-workings of a mind low, sensual, and alien to the life of God in the soul, they are but too much in sympathy with each other, and are altogether uncongenial to whatsoever things are pure and holy. The Scriptures hint to us more than once that our "speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt"—(i. e. wisdom;) that it be sound speech that cannot be condemned," and that we "be without offence," "unblamable," "unreprovable." This use of the tongue is strictly forbidden (Eph. 5; 4;) and in addition to this positive prohibition, the apostle says, "Let it not be once NAMED among you as becometh saints."

2. It grieves the Holy Spirit, as all sin does." "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

3. It grieves God's people. How many, who look upon levity as a sin, are grieved in the house of God and out of it when ministers resort to punning and witty remarks, evidently to show off and excite laughter.

"He that negotiates between God and man,
As God's ambassador, the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should beware
Of lightness in his speech. 'Tis pitiful
To court a grin, when you should woo a soul;
To break a jest, when pity should inspire
Pathetic exhortation; and to address
The skittish fancy with facetious tales,
When sent with God's commission to the heart!
So did not Paul."

4. The example is pernicious. Many precious souls have been led into this folly of saying witty things in imitation of their pastor, or some influential church member. The influence of levity or foolish talking and jesting on the minds and hearts of young converts and inquirers after truth is a leprosy or gangrene to the soul!

5. Levity, or foolish talking and jesting, greatly retards usefulness—destroys our influence for good. How exceedingly incongruous to warn sinners to flee the wrath to come, while in their presence we indulge in levity, or trifling conversation? We lose our hold on the sinner's conscience by this wicked indulgence. Sinners know that levity is inconsistent with the christian character. Who would be likely, on a sick or dying bed, to send for a punning minister to talk or pray with him? A joking minister will seldom have persons coming to him with tears to ask what they must do to be saved. To be successful in winning souls to Christ, our "speech must be always with gravity, seasoned with salt." "Be sober, be vigilant;" "Let your conversation be such as becometh the gospel of Christ."

6. This habit of levity, foolish talking and jesting, evidently manifests a want of a deep, heart-felt, and consistent piety. Who ever knew a decidedly pious, sanctified christian indulge in lightmindedness; aim at witty sayings; say things in a trifling, funny, jesting way, to excite merriment or laughter? How was it with Stephen, Paul, and Barnabas? With such men as Baxter, Wesley, Fletcher, Payson, James B. Taylor? "By thy words shalt thou be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be be condemned." If ever the arch deceiver is transformed into an angel of light, it is when persuading christians to talk nonsense.

Says the learned, refined, and pure minded, godly Fletcher:—

"Nothing is so contrary to godliness as levity. Seriousness consists in the matter of what is spoken, in the manner of speaking, in dignity of behavior, and in weighty, not trifling actions.

Jesting and raillery, lightness of behavior, useless occupations, joy, without trembling and awe of God, an affectation of vivacity and sprightliness, are all contrary to the Spirit of God.

Levity is contrary to contrition and self-knowledge, to watching and prayer, frequently to charity and common sense. In short, it is destructive of all devotion in our hearts, and in those of others, by unfitting the company for receiving any good.

Seriousness is useful to prevent the foregoing evils, to keep grace, to recommend piety and a sense of God's presence, to leave room for the Spirit of God to work, and to check levity and sin in others.

And have we not motives sufficient to seriousness? Are we not walking over enchanted ground, in sight of the grave, and pursued every moment by the enemy of all righteousness?

All who walk with God are serious, taking their Lord for their example, and walking by scripture precepts and warnings.

But are we to renounce all mirth, and be dull and melancholy? Answer. Seriousness and solid happiness are inseparable.

Is there not time for all things? Answer. There is no time for sin and folly. 'Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.' 'If any man among you seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain.'—James 1: 26."

"'Tis not for man to trifle; life is brief,
And sin is here;
Our age is but the falling of a leaf,
A dropping tear.
We have no time to sport away the hours;
All must be earnest in a world like ours."

NUMBER TWENTY-ONE.

VICTORY OF DEBORAH AND BARAK.

Israel had forgotten the promise made at the solemn review of Shechem; had forgotten the commandments of the Lord, and mingling with the bordering nations of heathen, had gone astray into the treacherous path of idolatry. For this they were given into the hand of Jabin, king of Canaan, whose captain—Sisera—oppressed them sorely. The galling power of the heathen master was felt bitterly by the warriors so lately triumphant, and the people groaned with vexation where they so lately drove the foe before them. The song of gladness had ceased from the tent of the shepherd, and the voice of mirth from the grove and vineyard. Twenty long years of slavery came and went, and there dawned no hope of relief. The power of the oppressor grew stronger, and weaker grew the purpose of resistance. Darker and darker lowered the clouds around the hills of the once radiant land, till life seemed intolerable. All this was for the disobedience of the people, who had broken their covenant with God, to serve the senseless gods of Canaan. But as turns repentant to the home of his childhood the prodigal who has wandered many years; so turned Israel at last to the God of the patriarchs. Then deliverance was near, for the favor of Heaven returned, and hope dawned again.

In the quiet of Mount Ephraim, under the shadow of a stately palm tree, dwelt Deborah the prophetess, whom God had inspired to deliver her enslaved country. The quiet of her mountain home was soon invaded, for the people came to her for counsel and judgment. They hung upon her lips with ecstasy, for her prophetic thoughts inspired them with newborn hope that there was salvation still for Israel. She summoned Barak, the captain of the remaining warriors of Israel, and made him acquainted with the will of the Lord to deliver them from the heathen foe. The trumpet was sounded for the assembling of the people, and ten thousand warriors obeyed the summons, and followed the footsteps of Barak and Deborah. From the mountains of Naphtali and the hills of Zebulon the people pressed to the standard that had floated over the victorious fields of former days, when Joshua destroyed the banded hosts of Canaan. On the heights of Tabor Barak gathered his forces. Fired with the poetic words of Deborah, the warriors buckled on their armor with new-found courage, and were expectant of victory when they saw the hosts of Sisera marshalling on the plains below. From the waters of Merom, to the river Kishon, rushed the hosts of king Jabin to destroy the band of Barak.

It was a strange scene, on that eventful morning, when the tribes asserted anew their independence, after two decades of bondage. From the heights of Tabor, the leader and the prophetess of Israel looked through the dewy mists of morning, where Kishon meandered through the plain of Megiddo to the Mediterranean, whose blue waves shimmered like a hazy mist in the far distance, and there, by the "ancient river," reposed the yet sleeping hosts of the oppressor. It was a scene of beauty and grandeur. A plain was spread out here, the hills rose there, and between them, like threads of silver, twined the streams of the valleys; while in the far, dim distance, to the north, faded in dreamy mystery the mountains of Lebanon. As the morning sun arose and bathed the mountain tops with golden sheen, and while the shadows rested upon the vales below, calmly Deborah gazed upon the scene of coming conflict, and shouted to Barak, "Up, for this is the day in which the Lord hath delivered Sisera into thine hand; is not the Lord gone out before thee?"

Down from the heights of Tabor rushed the valiant band of Barak upon the foe encamped in the battle plain of Esdraleon. The proud Sisera beheld with contempt the approaching Hebrews, whom he thought to crush in one terrible hour. His myriads of men blackened all the plain; the air was thick with banners and spears, and terrible was the array of horse and chariot, ready to thunder with death on the foe. But ere this deadly array had time to move, Barak had fallen like a thunderbolt upon them, and the conflict was terrible, for the Lord fought for Israel. The scythe-armed chariots of iron availed not; neither could the mighty host of Jabin withstand the fierce onset; but all fled in confusion, or sought the protecting battlements of the far-off Harosheth; but long ere they reached its shelter, the sword had cut them off; the swollen flood of Kishon had received them in its tumultuous tide, or Thora had lured them into its marshy embrace forever. Thus perished chariot, horse and rider there, "for the earth trembled, and the heavens dropped, the clouds also dropped water."

Sisera only escaped for the time, to meet his death singly at the hands of a woman. In his flight from the field of carnage, he chanced to pass the tent of Jael, the Kenite. The fallen captain gladly accepted the invitation to repose in the tent, to escape pursuit; and, overcome with fatigue, soon fell asleep, when Jael, to avenge the wrongs of her house and of Israel, despatched him by driving a nail through his temples, and he fell dead at her feet. Thus perished the foes of Israel on that day of conflict, when "the stars in their courses fought against Sisera."

They waited long in the gates of Harosheth for the return of Sisera and his spoils of victory. "The mother of Sisera looked out of a window, and cried through a lattice, Why is his chariot so long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariots?" Then the proud woman reasoned within herself, that he was cumbered with spoil, with prey of divers colors to deck the homes of the princes of Canaan; and a multitude of fair Hebrew maidens, the reward of victory. But they watched in vain for the dancing of the banners on the breeze of victory; they gazed long, but never more beheld Sisera, nor the myriads he led so proudly forth; while Deborah and Barak sang the pean of victory, and woke the echoes of Tabor with the chant of their sublime ode.

The conflict over, the oppressor destroyed, Deborah returned to the quiet of her home, beneath the spreading palm tree, in Mount Ephraim; and Barak drew back his forces to Kadesh, to engage once more in the scenes of peace and plenty. ORRIN P. ALLEN.

☞ Condemn no man for not thinking as you think. Let every man use his own judgment, since every man must give an account of himself to God. If you can reason or persuade a man into the truth, never attempt to force him into it. If love will not compel him to come, leave him to God.

THE TRUE CHRISTIAN.

How happy is the true child of God, who feels all his sins forgiven. Place him in any position, or under whatever circumstances you please, and he feels perfectly safe and secure. No matter how adverse those circumstances may be, he can find some promise of God which is applicable to his case, and upon which he can lean for support. Those promises he knows to be true, for he has many times proved them to his own satisfaction. If he be poor in this world's goods, he finds consolation in the fact that God has "chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him."—Jas. 2: 5. And he also has the promise that in this life he shall not want, for his heavenly Father has declared if he seek first the kingdom of heaven "all these things shall be added unto" him. See Matt. 6: 33. If he has to pass through fiery trials, and be sorely tempted, he is not overcome, or the least inclined to give up. And even though the clouds of sorrow and affliction bedim his pathway, he does not murmur; but turns to his heavenly Father for comfort and consolation; and He sounds in his ears the cheering promise—this "light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for" thee "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." See 2 Cor. 4: 17. And although the dread hand of disease be laid upon him, still he is not disheartened, for he knoweth that "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord." And even though the grim monster death stare him in the face, yet he flinches not, but can exclaim with the Psalmist, "Though I walk through the dark valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." He also knoweth that though he lay by this mortal existence, he has a life hid with Christ ready to be revealed at the last time.

How blessed then it is to be a true christian; for he not only has the cheering promises above noticed, but many more of a similar import. Not only has he a promise of something in the future, but he has a present happiness; he has that peace within that passeth all understanding—that which the world can neither give or take away. God grant that you, dear reader, may ever be found a true christian; not a half-hearted one, for they are just no christians at all; but one that is engaged heart and soul in the service of the Lord. In order to become such, you must lay your all upon the altar, consecrate yourself entirely to his service, and follow out his every precept. CHAS. H. SWEET.

THE FRUITS OF VIOLENCE.

BY R. THAYER.

"And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth IS FILLED WITH VIOLENCE through them; and, behold, I will destroy them with the earth."—GEN. 6: 13.

"As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—MATT. 24: 37.

A SONNET.

When violence had filled the land,
And the whole race forgotten God,
The Lord in wrath stretched forth his hand,
And brought upon the earth a flood;
So now on man his brother preys,
Provoking him to deadly strife,
Till he his hand in anger lays
On him—AND TAKES AWAY HIS LIFE!
The world is filled with VIOLENCE,
And human blood like water flows:
Great God, be Thou my strong defence,
Amidst a host of bitter foes;
Nor may I fear the consequence,
Though all the world shall me oppose.

Boston.

TEN THINGS TO BE CONSIDERED.

1. If Jesus Christ has loved us and given himself for us, we ought to love him and give ourselves to him.

2. If Jesus Christ would have "the gospel preached to every creature," it is the duty of every creature to believe the gospel, love it and obey it.

3. If Jesus Christ has called ministers to preach his gospel, he has also called the people to hear it, and one call is as loud as the other.

4. If Jesus Christ has pronounced a woe upon the minister who preaches not the gospel, then he has pronounced a woe upon the person who hears not the gospel; and one woe is as much to be feared as the other.

5. If Jesus "has ordained that those who preach his gospel shall live of the gospel," he has also ordained that those to whom the gospel is preached shall give the preacher a living.

6. If "it costs a great deal to support the gospel," we should not complain, for it cost the Savior infinitely more to give us the gospel, and he did not complain.

7. Much as it costs to support the gospel, it would cost us infinitely more to do without the gospel, both in this world and in the world to come.

8. As you would not, at any price, give up the gospel, or have it wholly taken away from the vicinity, and as you do not wish others to pay for your comforts, you, of course feel it a privilege to do your full share in sacrifices and services to support the gospel.

9. As prayers and alms go up together before God—and a man can as soon walk with one foot, or a bird fly with one wing, as either go alone—to please God you must both pray and give.

10. If you
Pray and give, or give and pray,
Your soul will prosper every day;
And if you give, but do not pray,
You bless mankind another way;
But if you pray, and do not give,
Then man were blest did you not live.

BRINGING A MAN TO PRAYER MEETING.

A member of the Cincinnati conference writes to the Western Christian Advocate, in this way: "I had missed brother Brown and some others from the prayer meeting for several weeks, and my temper was getting lost. I opened two or three batteries Sunday morning from the pulpit, and thought the work done; but lo! after the exhortation, the meetings continued as thin as ever. Mortified as well as surprised, I meditated a new turn. I went privately to see brother Brown. He was wood-chopping, a few rods from home.

"Good afternoon, brother B."

"Good afternoon, brother M."

"All well at home?"

"Quite well, thank you; how are yourself and family?"

"Moderately well, thank you. Somehow I have missed you at the prayer-meetings lately."

"Well, yes, I have not been there. I have got so tired by the time the sundown came, Wednesday night, I could scarcely carry my feet after me."

So we kept up the colloquy for ten minutes or more, when I took Brown's axe and tried it on the beech log before me. He seemed pleased at the size of my chips, and invited me in to see the family. The interview was pleasant and profitable, and brother Brown and wife and the oldest girl were at prayer-meeting the next Wednesday evening. My call had more power than my eleven o'clock pulpit battery.

Those who know how to extract the moral from the foregoing, are respectfully recommended to occupy the floor.

Remedy against Moths.—The following remedy against moths may be useful and timely. An ounce of gum camphor and one of powdered shell of red pepper are macerated in eight ounces of strong alcohol for seven days, and then strained. With this tincture the furs or cloths are sprinkled over, and rolled up in sheets. This remedy is used in Russia under the name of "Chinese tincture for moths," and is found very effective.

Cure for Bleeding and Cracked Teats in Cows.—A gentleman of this city tells me how he completely cured bleeding and cracked teats in his cow. They were so badly cracked and sore that it was with difficulty she could be milked, and she was completely cured in three days by washing the whole udder and teats thoroughly in suds from Castile soap, and then anointing the cracked and bleeding parts with glycerine twice a day.—Maine Farmer.

Horse Wisdom.—Any thing a horse can touch with his nose without being harmed, he does not fear. Therefore the hand, the halter, saddle, harness, umbrella, buffalo robe, or whatever is brought in proximity to him, should be introduced to and touched by that delicate origan. A knowledge of such important facts is the main secret of Rarey's success of horse-taming.

To prevent Mould in Books.—A few drops of oil of lavender will save a library from mould.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

SIGN THE PLEDGE.

We hope all our young readers will carefully consider the following ten reasons for signing the pledge. Also, look over the "objections," and see if they are not fully met with sound arguments. Come, dear youth, let us see your names signed to the temperance pledge in the Crisis. Have your parents write for you, if you are not old enough to do it yourselves. You will never be sorry, if you sign and keep the PLEDGE.—Editor.

TEN REASONS WHY CHILDREN AND YOUTH SHOULD SIGN THE PLEDGE.

1. It will lead them to inquire what ardent spirit, wine and beer drinking does.

2. It will lead them to resolve that theirs shall not be the drunkard's end.

3. It will teach them their moral and free agency, and that they are to be actors for themselves in future life.

4. It will cause them to feel, as they never have felt before, their own responsibility.

5. It will give them a new and permanent interest in the temperance cause.

6. It will preserve them most effectually from the enticements of the wine cup.

7. It will prevent their being urged to drink by others.

8. It will make them good examples for others.

9. It will bring them out and embody them as a temperance army—a Band of Hope.

10. It will make them active and bold to gather in others and extend the cause.

FIVE OBJECTIONS TO CHILDREN'S SIGNING THE PLEDGE ANSWERED.

1. They are too young. Ans. But they are not too young to learn to drink. Many a child has become a drunkard. They are not too young then to be fortified against the tempter.

2. They do not understand the nature of a pledge. Ans. This is the way to teach them. They here form an experimental acquaintance with it.

3. It is destroying their freedom, making them slaves to the pledge, so that they cannot afterwards do as they would. Ans. The same may be said of all contracts and agreements; of all promises of obedience to parents; of love one to another; and of love to their Father in heaven.

4. It will do no good; they can be temperate without it. Ans. It can do no harm and may save them from a drunkard's grave.

4. It is binding them to do what, when they come to the years of maturity, they may not wish to do, and will make them hypocrites. Ans. Rather say it is learning them to do right, so that they will always wish to do right, and never be hypocrites. The Bible says, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Thousands of children have signed the pledge, and not one in a hundred has, probably, ever regretted it, or been the worse for it; while thousands have been kept by it from the way of the destroyer. Let there then be a pledge book in every place, in every school. O, if there were, how few of the dear children and youth would ever be led into the path of the drunkard!

A NOBLE BOY.

Mrs. Syms was a widow and poor. But poverty could not crush her, for she felt that the owner of all things was her Father, and he would withhold no real good.

It took more than a needle, and twist, and wax to degrade her in her own esteem; for for she knew that she was fulfilling, as far as in her lay, her calling, as under the eye of her master, and that a queen could do no more. It was the one desire of her heart to rear up her son to be a good and useful man and to this end she toiled—"stitch, stitch, stitch," often far into the night, to buy his books and keep him at school. In return, Ned did most of the simple domestic work; and for this act of filial love, more than for anything else, he was made a sport and a by-word.

His mother, however, encouraged him to bear nobly all this, saying:

"We must either bend or break under our trials, my boy; this may be the very thing to make a man of you—teaching you to control your spirit, and to love those who hate and despise you. You have God's promise to the fatherless, my son, and that is worth more than all their father's riches. Bow yourself before the storm and it will not harm you."

One day as Ned was walking to school, three of these boys approached, when one called out:

"Hallo, Ned Syms! run up to our stable and tell Patrick to saddle Flash, and be sure to bring him to the school-house by four o'clock."

"I would oblige you, Sam, if I could without being late; but you see there are only seven minutes before the bell rings," he replied.

"You miserable, disobliging fellow; what if you are late? This master don't whip," cried Sam Bent.

"But he expects us to be faithful, replied Ned.

"Faithful," shouted Sam in an angry tone. "Come, go; I want to race round the pond with Bill Hunt here. He says his Clipper will outrun my Flash, and bets his gold pencil on it. Go and I'll give you a sixpence, for I don't want to climb the hill."

"I cannot," said Ned, resolutely: and passing on, he heard Sam cry,

"Why, not go for a sixpence? That would save your mammy an hour's stitching."

Ned felt his ears and cheeks grow very warm at these words; but he set his teeth closely together to keep the unruly member still, lest he might sin against God, and entered the yard, the boys following close at his heels.

"Good afternoon, Betsy! I caught you last night taking clothes off the lines, didn't I?" cried Bill Hunt.

"No!" shouted Ned; "you didn't catch me, for I didn't run. I looked straight in your face as you rode past the house, to let you know that I was not ashamed to help my mother."

"My lord is brave indeed! Are you going to iron the clothes too? cried Sam Bent.

"Yes," cried Ned, turning and facing them, "if mother wishes me to. I have ironed clothes and washed dishes too, and I expect to do both again."

"He gets dismissed sometimes to hang the tea-kettle on," said Bill Hunt, winking at his comrades; but the bell now rang and Sam Bent had only time to say,

"I'll pay you for your impudence to me, you beggar-boy."

This last was almost too much for the brave boy; but he bore it meekly and like a christian.

Years rolled on. These young boys became young men, Ned was blessed and prospered. He was honored and wealthy, and able to provide a comfortable home for his dear mother in her old age. The time came when Sam Bent and Bill Hunt, who had squandered the the property their fathers left them, were glad to receive favors from the man whom in boyhood they had so badly treated. God has honored Ned because he returned good for evil; and he has proved in his experience the truth of the proverb of Solomon, "he that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city," and he has received the blessing promised to those who honor father and mother.

HISTORY OF A LIE.

Bessie was a little girl, not very old. One morning, as she stood before the glass pinning a large rose upon her bosom, her mother called her to take care of the baby a few minutes. Now Bessie wanted just then to go out in the garden to play, so she went very unwillingly.

Her mother bade her sit down in her little chair, placed the baby carefully in her lap, and left the room. The rose instantly attracted the little one's attention, and quick as thought the chubby little fingers grasped it; and before Bessie could say, "What are you about?" the rose was crushed and scattered. Bessie was so angry that she struck the baby a hard blow. The baby, like all other babies, screamed right lustily. The mother, hearing the uproar, ran to see what was the matter. Bessie, to save herself from suffering, told her mother that her little brother Ben, who was playing in the room, had struck the baby as hard as he could.

Ben, although he declared his innocence, received the punishment which Bessie so richly deserved.

Bessie went to school soon after, but she did not feel happy.

That night, as she lay in her little bed, she could not go to sleep for thinking of the dreadful wrong she had committed against her brother and against God; and she resolved that night to tell her mother all, the next morning. When morning came, however, she felt as if there was something in her throat; she could not make up her mind to confess the sin; it did not seem so great as the night before. It was not much after all, her silly heart said. As day after day passed, Bessie felt the burden less and less; and she might have fallen into the same sin again, had a temptation presented itself, but for a sad event. One evening, when she came home from school, she found Ben sick, with a frightful throat distemper. He had been sick all the forenoon. He continued to grow worse, and the next evening he died.

Poor Bessie; it seemed as if her heart would break. Kind friends tried to comfort her. "O!" said the child, "I am crying because I told that lie about him; because he got that punishment which belonged to me."

For a long time she refused to be comforted.

Several years have passed. Bessie is now of woman's size; but the remembrance of that lie yet stings her soul to the quick. It took less than one minute to utter it, but many years have not effaced the sorrow and shame which followed it.—Christian Miscellany.

"BEHOLD HE COMETH."

Time's sun is fast setting,
Its twilight is nigh,
Its evening is falling
In cloud o'er the sky;
Its shadows are stretching
In ominous gloom;
Its midnight approaches—
The midnight of doom:
Then haste, sinner, haste, there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, lingerer, flee!

Rides forth the fierce tempest
On the wing of the cloud;
The moan of the night-blast
Is fitful and loud;
The mountains are heaving,
The forests are bow'd,
The ocean is surging,
Earth gathers its shroud;
Then haste, sinner, haste, there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, lingerer, flee!

The vision is nearing—
The Judge and the throne!—
The voice of the angel
Proclaims "it is done."
On the whirl of the tempest
Its Ruler shall come,
And the blaze of his glory
Flashes out from its gloom;
Then haste, sinner, haste, there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, lingerer, flee!

With clouds he is coming!
His people shall sing;
With gladness they hail him,
Redeemer and King.
The iron rod wielding,
The rod of his ire,
He cometh to kindle
Earth's last fatal fire!
Then haste, sinner, haste, there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, lingerer, flee!

For the World's Crisis.

THE ATONEMENT.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to offer through the Crisis a few thoughts on the subject of the atonement,—a subject upon which much has been said and written, and yet one which, as I think, is very imperfectly understood. All who have been reared in a land where the Bible is read, and where a general assent is given to its teachings, believe that the atonement is in some way connected with the pardon of sin; but the theories respecting it are so various, that those who do not study and investigate for themselves, are at a loss to know how, when and where it is effected. Now it is the duty of all such to disregard utterly the theories and traditions of men, as we shall do at this time, and go directly to the Bible, praying the Lord to give them an understanding of his word upon this important subject.

We are all naturally alienated from God by reason of sin. Now unless we are relieved from this condition, we shall assuredly perish. We must therefore be reconciled to God. But how is such reconciliation to be effected? First, by exercising repentance towards God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. All who will may see that God desires to do them good, from the fact that he withheld not his only begotten Son, but freely gave him up to die for our sins according to the Scriptures. 1 Cor. 15: 4.

But it may be asked, how are we benefited by the death of Christ? Now in order to make the subject as plain as we can, we remark in the first place, that sin entered the world, and death by sin; so that death hath passed upon all men, for that all have sinned, and are consequently liable to suffer the penalty of the law which was pronounced by God, because of disobedience, viz.," Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Now this penalty can never be set aside or abrogated in consequence of anything that we can do. But if the law of God, which requires perfect obedience, is obeyed and made honorable by one connected with the race, God would be justified in giving him eternal life, because the first man had eternal life placed before him as the reward of obedience. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, took upon himself our nature and was made under the law; we being partakers of flesh and blood, he took part of the same. Heb. 2: 14, 15. "And he did no sin, neither was there guile found in his mouth." 1 Pet. 2: 22. Now as the first man, Adam, had animal life in himself, but failed to attain unto spiritual or eternal life, because of disobedience, would it not be just in God to give to Jesus to have eternal life in himself, with power to communicate that life to all who comply with revealed conditions? John 5: 25.

We are now prepared, in the second place, to inquire more particularly into the nature of the atonement; when and where it is consummated. In order to do this, turn with me to Ex. 25: 10 and onward. Here we have a description of the holy place into which the high priest entered once a year with the blood of sacrifice. Compare this with Heb. 9th chapter and Ex. 30: 18. Here we have a type of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man. Now let us endeavor to trace the type to its antitype. The high priest properly attired kills the animal without the camp, and takes the blood into the holy place, where God the Father was represented by the cloud of glory, and Jesus by the mercy seat. We can therefore see that the atonement was not made by the shedding of blood without the camp, but in taking it into the holy place and there presenting it in the presence of God; thus teaching the people that without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. God accepted their sacrifice through their high priest, and the latter, confessing their sins on the head of the scapegoat, sent him away by a fit man into the wilderness—literally into oblivion. All past sins were blotted out. And now we are prepared to look at the antitype. Let us go forth unto Jesus without the camp, bearing his reproach; for there he was crucified and slain. Examine Heb. 9: 11, 12 and onward, and you will observe the same order in the antitype that was found in the type. There in the holy place, heaven itself, he presents his own blood, which speaketh better things than the blood of Abel. There, as our high priest accepted of God, he procures pardon for the penitent sinner. There he reconciles us to God by his own precious blood. There the atonement is completed. Now we have access to God by and through him. Our prayers are presented by him to the Father, and there he procures for us pardon, reconciliation and peace. And when we have truly repented of our sins by forsaking them, endeavoring to sanctify ourselves to his service, purifying as he is pure, and consecrating all that we have and are to his work, he sends the Holy Spirit into our hearts, by which we are enabled to cry, Abba, Father, thus giving us an earnest of our eternal inheritance in his kingdom.

And now, my fellow-sinner, come with me to the Garden of Gethsemane, and behold there His agony in the bloody sweat; to Pilate's judgment hall, and see him mocked, scourged and crowned with thorns; to Calvary, and see his hands and his feet, and his side, out of which gushed the precious blood that cleanseth us from all sins. Hear his prayer, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." Then ground the weapons of your rebellion, come to Jesus Christ and live; for very soon our great High Priest will come out of the holy place to blot out all the sins of his people (Acts 3: 19), raise the dead and give them immortality in his kingdom. But the incorrigible sinner will be raised to shame and everlasting contempt. For saith Jesus, for every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment.

That which is called natural death is a consequence of our origin, and is a law of our common mortality, over which we can have no control; and although all men will be raised to the justification of life (Rom. 5: 18), only those who by a patient continuance in well-doing have received an abundance of grace and the gift of righteousness by Jesus Christ (Rom. 5: 17), shall receive eternal life. Yours in the hope of life in Christ,

QUESTIONS CONCERNING CHRIST'S KINGDOM.

WHEN SHALL THIS KINGDOM BE SET UP?

Daniel says: the kingdom shall be set up at some time during the existence of the four universal monarchies or kingdoms; that is, at some time during the whole period of their existence, beginning with the first or Babylonian kingdom, and ending with the fourth or Roman kingdom.

Further, he says it will be at the time of the destruction of the fourth kingdom, represented by the legs and feet of the great image. Thus, he says, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." (Dan. 2: 44.)

It is therefore a kingdom to be set up on the earth, and at the period when Christ shall come to punish the wicked nations, and to reign with his saints; for the stone cut out without hands (which represents Christ's kingdom) became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." (Dan. 2: 35.)

In the seventh chapter of Daniel we find this more explicitly stated. There we are told that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." (Dan. 7: 27.) "The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever and ever." (Dan. 7: 18. And the period when this shall take place is when "the Ancient of days shall sit, when thousand thousands shall minister unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stand before him; when the judgment shall be set, and the books opened." Then it is that Christ, called the Son of man, shall have the dominion, glory, and kingdom, and all people, nations and languages, shall serve him; and it is declared that his dominion is an "everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." (Dan. 7: 9, 10, 13.) It is therefore at the judgment and at the period of Christ's second advent, that this kingdom shall be set up.

The Lord Jesus Christ himself, in his description of the judgment (Matt. 25), shows when his kingdom is to be established. He there says: "The King will say to them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." The kingdom of Christ is therefore to be set up at the time of his second advent, and his people are then to inherit it, and not before. In strict agreement with this declaration of Christ, is Paul's address to Timothy: "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick (i. e., the living) and the dead, at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word," etc. (2 Tim. 4: 1.) Thus Paul confirms the truth that Christ's kingdom will be established at his appearing, i. e., his second coming, at the period when he shall judge the living and the dead, and then he will receive all his faithful ones to himself, to be partakers of the glory and blessedness of the kingdom, and to whom he will give a crown of righteousness. Thus Paul says, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." It was laid up or reserved for him, to be given him—when? "Which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give me at that day." What day? Surely the day of the second coming of Christ. Then Paul will receive his crown, as well as all others who love the appearing of the Savior. They do not receive their crowns at death, but when the Lord comes in his glory and kingdom; then they shall be made kings and priests, and reign with Christ on the earth.

In the eleventh chapter of Revelation we read: "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." It is then at the sounding of the seventh angel that the kingdoms of this world are to become Christ's kingdom, and not before; and the sounding of the seventh angel is at the period when God's wrath shall come, when the dead shall be judged, and when God will give a reward unto his servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear his name, both small and great, and when he will destroy them who destroy (or corrupt) the earth. (See Rev 11: 18.)

We have the same period foretold in the twentieth chapter of Revelation. There John says, "I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them, and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." (Rev. 20: 4.) That this will immediately follow the second coming of Christ, may be seen by referring to the chapter previous, where his coming is predicted. (See Rev. 19: 11–31.)

The passage quoted above (Rev. 20: 4) represents the resurrection of the righteous dead, at the coming of Christ, and the commencement of the millennium, for it is expressly stated, "This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God, and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." (Rev. 20: 5, 6.) But it is evident that the period when the saints shall reign with Christ is that when Christ himself shall personally reign in Mount Zion, when his kingdom shall be established upon and over all the earth.

The ancient prophets predicted this reign of Christ. Isaiah declares that "the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and before his ancients gloriously." (Isa. 24: 23.) Micah predicts that "the Lord shall reign in Mount Zion for ever." (Micah 4: 7.) Zechariah says, "The Lord shall be king over all the earth." Zech. 14: 4–9.) These predictions will be fulfilled when the Lord Jesus shall come again for the salvation of his people, and the destruction of his enemies, when the kingdoms of the world shall become his kingdom.

The second advent of our Lord is shown to be glorious and terrible in Rev. 19: 11–16, where he is declared to be the Word of God, the King of kings, and the Lord of lords. He will come in his glory. He will come in majesty and power. He will come to punish the guilty nations. He will come to raise the sleeping saints, and change the righteous living. He will then "receive all his people to himself, that where he is, there they may be also."

How earnestly and fervently should we pray for this blessed period to arrive. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven," should be our daily petition. The everlasting kingdom of Christ set up on the earth, Jesus reigning personally and gloriously, and the saints of God possessing that kingdom, is a consummation devoutly to be desired. The curse will then be removed from the earth, and the whole domain shall bud and blossom as the rose.

It was for this glorious period that the primitive christians longed and waited. They, like John, could say, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." They loved the appearing of Christ. They looked for him to come from heaven to change their vile bodies, and fashion them like unto his glorious body, and thus they continued in the patient waiting for the Savior's coming. Should we not imitate them? Have we not the same interest in the coming of our Lord?

His coming will put an end to Satan's power to injure his people. It will be the day of their triumph over sin, and death, and hell. Then they will receive their crowns, the reward of their faith and labors in the service of their Master. "To him that overcometh," saith Christ, "will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." (Rev. 3: 21.) Then the bride, the Lamb's wife—the church of Christ—shall with him celebrate the marriage supper of the Lamb. Then the tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell with them. All tears shall then be wiped away. "There shall be no more death." And in the "place where they shall dwell, there shall be no more sorrow, nor crying, nor pain, for the former things are passed away. And there shall be no more curse, but the throne of God shall be in it, and his servants shall serve him. And they shall see his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever." (Rev. 21: 4, and 22: 3–5.) And Jesus shall reign King of kings and Lord of lords."

"CHRIST IN ME."

BY E. THAYER.

I.

Let others toil from day to day,
In hope that they shall richer be;
For this I earnestly would pray—
That, daily—"CHRIST MAY BE IN ME."

II.

Let others strive for earthly fame,
And boast an honored pedigree;
May holy love my heart inflame,
That, daily—"CHRIST MAY BE IN ME."

III.

Let others boast of hoarded wealth,
And look with scorn on poverty;
May I prize more than all things else—
To feel that—"I HAVE CHRIST IN ME."

IV.

Let others seek for place and power,
That men may bow to them the knee;
Be this my wish from hour to hour—
To feel that—"I HAVE CHRIST IN ME."

V.

Let others spend in idleness
Their precious time—I'll busy be,
SEEKING HOW OTHERS I MAY BLESS—
Thus proving best—"I'VE CHRIST IN ME."

VI.

How pleasant, then, when death shall come,
To meet the Savior it will be;
To feel that Heaven is our home,
As each shall feel—"I'VE CHRIST IN ME."

ONE OF THE PHARAOHS.

"For the scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth."—ROM. 9: 17.

This Scripture affirms that Pharaoh was raised up for this same purpose. What was that purpose? The answer is definite. That God might show his power and have his name declared throughout all the earth. For the same purpose he raises up every human intelligence. Secondly, notice that this purpose could have been accomplished in two ways. 1. If Pharaoh had obeyed God,—which he could have done if he chose to,—then God would have shown the power of his grace in converting and saving the soul, and the children of Israel could have been taken to the land of promise, and all of God's purposes accomplished, without Pharaoh's sins, just as well as with them. 2. Pharaoh rebelled, and God had to carry on his plans in defiance of the transgression, but without making sin any part of his purposes. Therefore, God overruled that rebellion, and raised Pharaoh up in his rebellion, as he rebelled by choice, and not by compulsion, for his own glory. If God be obeyed, he will show forth the power of his grace; if disobeyed, he will overrule that disobedience for his glory in an endless overthrow.

Did not God harden Pharaoh's heart? The Scriptures say that Pharaoh hardened his own heart, and they also say that God hardened it. How, then, is this to be understood? God sent judgments and mercies upon Pharaoh and his subjects. They abused those mercies and those judgments, not of necessity, but of choice. It is an acknowledged fact, that when mercies and judgments are abused, the tendency is to harden the heart. Thus God, who giveth his mercies and sendeth his judgments, hardens the heart of those persons who abuse them. In this way God hardened Pharaoh's heart, and in no other. He never foreordained or predestinated it, because God never promotes a spirit of wickedness in the heart,—he is not the author of sin. "Let no man say when he is tempted I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man."—James 1: 13.

It may be said of Christ that he by the gospel hardens the hearts of those who reject it, for the gospel says, "For we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved and in them that perish. To the one we are the savor of death unto death, and to the other the savor of life unto life." Thus it is frequently said, that sinners are gospel-hardened. When it is thus spoken, it is only meant that they have hardened themselves by rebelling against it. When it is said that the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart, it means that Pharaoh hardened his own heart by rebelling against God. "And Pharaoh hardened his heart at this time also, neither would he let the people go."—Ex. 7: 32. "And when Pharaoh saw that the rain, and the hail, and the thunders were ceased, he sinned yet more, and hardened his heart, he and his servants." —Ex. 9: 34.

This is a correct exposition, or God was fighting against himself. Why does not Pharaoh let the people go? Is it because God has hardened his heart? Is God to be charged with the cause of Pharaoh's refusal? The Bible tells us that this refusal brought out God's mighty power until he caused Pharaoh to let the people go. Did God externally put forth his power, but internally harden Pharaoh's heart? Then it is as clear as the noonday, if this doctrine be true, God was internally holding, and externally driving; that is, God was fighting against himself.

Is it possible that any can be blinded to the deformity of a doctrine that ascribes to God the fearful folly of striving with himself? Can God be really regarded as holding with the one hand, and pushing with the other, and that too in a matter where thousands of lives are sacrificed in the struggle? Can it be believed that internally God directly hardened the hearts of the Egyptians, and turned them against his people, and increased their desperate cruelty; yet at the same time externally appeared to do the utmost to lead them to relent?

If God directly hardened Pharaoh's heart, then it was cruel in an infinite degree. God, then, deceived both Pharaoh and his subjects. How absurd this view of the doctrine, taught by those who would have this absurdity charged upon Bible teaching, that they may reject Bible authority, and thus entirely overthrow the christian system. But such a theory is a failure.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

A SHORT EXEGESIS OF THE PROPHETIC NUMBERS.

And they shall be given into His hand until a time, times and dividing of time. (Dan. 7: 25). Time, in this verse is from gid-dhan, which occurs eight times, all of which are in Daniel. It is the word rendered time Dan. 4: 16–25, and probably means years.

And he said unto me, unto two thousand and three hundred days. (Dan. 8: 14). Days is from two words, giv-gev and boh-ker. These words occur in Gen. 1, and are rendered evening and morning. Gih-rev has nine usages; boh-ker five. I believe these words are never rendered day except in this text; and in this case we think the rendering is not intelligible. These words are not found elsewhere in connection with the prophetic numbers.

And sware by Him that liveth forever and ever, it shall be for a time, times and a half. (Dan. 12: 7). The Hebrew sentence is, moh-gehd moh-gehddan geh-tzee. This last word occurs over 120 times and has six usages; but only three times is rendered part. It occurs in Ps. 102: 24, rendered in the midst of. Zech. 14: 4—in the midst of and half of it shall remove, etc. Dan. 9: 27—and in the midst of the week. I think we may not conclude that the division is just in the middle. Observe, this is not the word rendered "dividing of time" in Dan. 7: 25, p-lag is the word in that verse, and has that single occurrence.

You will observe that the spirit of God has not given us a single measuring line in these texts. The time therefore cannot be the same Moh-ghed occurs Dan. 8: 19; 11: 27; 29: 35, and is rendered, at the time appointed. The LXX. render this word and also gid-dahn kailos (?) The New Testament meaning is a limited period of time; a short season; the right point of time: and we must resort to other data than the terms themselves to ascertain the length of time expressed by them. In fact I regard it as being an impossibility for any man 2000 years ago to have ascertained the length of time spanned by these periods. But now they can be understood. "Whoso readeth let him understand." (Matt. 24: 15). "The wise shall understand." (Dan. 12: 10.)

"From the time the daily sacrifice shall be taken away and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and thirty-five days." (Dan. 12: 11, 12). Days is from yohm, which has fifty-eight usages, as age, day, period, season, year, etc., etc. This is the word rendered day in all the prophetic numbers except Dan. 8: 14. The LXX. render yohm by heemera, its nearest synonym in the Greek; and day is its nearest synonym in the English. These words having such a wide range of meaning, their signification in particular texts cannot be understood without study, judgment and discrimination. But did God intend that the instruction of angels should be understood by men? If not, why give them to his beloved prophet? And if some have deduced wrong conclusions, is it a reason why others should not seek for, and obtain a knowledge of those numbers?

It is clear to my mind, from the twelfth verse of Dan. 12, that the pages of history must be examined in order to understand the time. I have said, The time can now be understood. Why so positive? Jesus, for our instruction and consolation, has given unmistakable signs by which we may know when to expect his coming, and consequently the end of the numbers. Those signs are unmistakably in the past, and we must study history to be profited by the instruction. In fact we are obliged to look there in order to know that there ever was such a being as Jesus Christ. John the Revelator saw the same signs in the same order under the sixth seal, which Jesus said should precede his coming: of which the Rabbi said: When ye [my people] shall see these things, know that the kingdom of God is nigh. The next thing under the sixth seal is the heavens passing away. Now we can look upon the prophetic numbers with all this light in our pathway. We know that Yohm (Dan. 12: 12, 13) cannot mean a literal day, neither can it mean a day of a thousand years, as in 2 Pet. 3. 8. Why? One would have run out the prophetic periods long centuries in the past; the other would be inconceivably distant in the future. The figure in Dan. 12: 12, must mean year, and the 1335 years run out just where the signs compel us to believe that the end is near.

The original in Rev. 12: 14, is slightly different from Dan. 12: 7, kailos being found three times. In this case the time is fixed by the sixth verse to be 1260 years. Now if Jesus is to come in a jubilee, and 1868 brings a jubilee, then Jesus will come in 1868.—G. W. RATHBUN.—Voice of the West.

PRAYER.

"What profit should we have, if we pray unto him?" —Job 21: 15.

How often do we in heart adopt the same language Job says the prosperous wicked use, while living in wealth and pleasure, enjoying everything heart can wish? "Therefore they say unto God, depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways. What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have, if we pray unto him?" Jesus tells us to enter into our closet, and after having shut the door, to pray to our Father which is in secret; and our Father which seeth in secret shall reward us openly. Saying he is more willing to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him, than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children. Oftentimes do we ask in accordance with God's will, when our petition is not immediately granted; and how prone to murmuringly ask, What profit have we praying unto him? forgetting the lesson Jesus intended we should learn from the importunate widow and unjust judge, who refused to avenge her of her adversary for awhile, but afterward said, "Though I fear not God, nor regard man, yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me." And the Lord said, "Hear what the unjust judge saith. And shall not God avenge his own elect who cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you he will avenge them speedily."

We may ask in behalf of others, when the Lord seemingly turns a deaf ear to our petition; we may have marked out the exact way we wish the Lord to answer, and if things are not brought about in just our way, though our kind Heavenly Father may be causing a chain of events to transpire, which alone can produce the desired result, yet because it is not just as we marked, we begin to complain, and cry, All these things are against me. I wonder the Lord bears with us in our folly. It is well for us God is not like man; we should immediately be cut down as cumberers of the ground for our lack of trust in him. May God help us to repent, that even the thoughts of our hearts may be forgiven us.

CHARLOTTE CASE.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PASSOVER FEAST.

"For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us; therefore let us keep the feast."—1 Cor. 5: 7, 8.

That our Lord did not set aside and annul the "passover feast," on that night when he was betrayed, is so self-evident that we shall spend no time in proving it. That it was fulfilled in him so far as the typical representation goes, is equally clear; but that He reinstituted a passover feast in the "Lord's Supper," as a remembrancer of that fulfillment, is undeniable. The only question that should be considered here is, Who may eat of that supper, and when? We have already shown in Ex. 12: 49, that only "one law" was to govern the citizen and the stranger in reference to their admissibility to the table of the "passover," and that law was the law of circumcision. In the next place we proved by Rom. 4: 11, that circumcision was only a sign of the seal, or confirmation, of the righteousness of faith imputed to us before we receive the sealing. Then we proved from Eph. 1: 13, that this sealing under the gospel is not obtained by water baptism, but by "trusting in Christ after hearing the good news of our salvation, and believing the same; THEN we are SEALED in (or by) Christ with the HOLY SPIRIT, and if sealed, then are we circumcised in heart, and if circumcised, "then may we come near and keep it," keep the feast, for "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." Hence, "let a man EXAMINE HIMSELF, and so (in this manner) let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup (1 Cor. 11: 28), for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof." Ex. 12: 48.

But once more. There is "one law" (Ex. 12: 49), and "there is one lawgiver" (James 4: 12), and this lawgiver is the author of the one law, and "King of the Jews," who are his citizens, subjects, friends, and household, and may of right sit down with him to eat and drink at his table, in accordance with the law which himself has established, expounded, filled full and administered in person. Peter saith unto him, "Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me. . . . He that is washed needeth not (to be washed) save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit."—John 13: 8–10. "The foundation of God standeth sure, having this SEAL."—2 Tim. 2: 19. Having what seal? The seal of the resurrection, unto immortality and eternal life. "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit (the seal) that dwelleth in you."—Rom. 8: 11. "The Lord knoweth them that are his."—2 Tim. 2: 19. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, THEY are the sons of God."—Rom. 8: 14. Having "received the Spirit of adoption (which is to adopt) whereby we cry, Abba, Father. . . . and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, . . . waiting for the adoption; the redemption of the BODY."—8: 15, 17, 23. Now who can lawfully eat at their Father's table, if the children may not? "Come, ye blessed."

Admitting the foregoing to be true, what does Paul mean when he says in Gal. 3: 27, "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ"? Undoubtedly he means just what he says; but if any doubt exists as to what baptism he refers, 1 Cor. 12: 13 should dissipate it, for he there expressly declares that "by ONE SPIRIT are we all baptized INTO one body." Should a question arise on the term body, as not being "into Christ," the preceding verse will dispose of it: "For as the body is one, having many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ"; consequently no person can be baptized by that "one Spirit" into that "one body" without being "baptized into Christ," as a part and parcel, or individual member, of Christ's body, and become subject to the "one law" of the "one lawgiver," and "eat and live for ever." And that is as long as any reasonable man should ever desire to live. There is, says Paul (Eph. 4: 4), "one body, one Spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism"; and by this "one Spirit" are we all baptized into the "one body." Then it follows that we are not baptized into the "one body" by water baptism. Then why are we to be baptized, rather immersed, in water at all? Because the "one lawgiver" has enjoined it upon us. Special baptism is a gift conferred, while water immersion is a duty to be performed.

The ordinance of baptism, like that of the "Supper," clearly, distinctly and definitely sets forth the faith and the hope of christian believers. By eating of that "one bread" and drinking of that one cup, we declare to all the world our "living faith," that "Christ died for our sins" according to the Scriptures, and our hope in his "coming again" for our salvation. These two events are inseparably linked together by our Lord, in Matt. 26: 26, when he says of the broken bread, "This is my body." Paul adds, "which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me."—1 Cor. 11: 24. There is his crucifixion; then taking the cup, he said, "This is my (life) blood of the new testament"; there is his death and life—resurrection. "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom."—28, 29. There his second coming is promised, linking the cross to the crown. That this is the true signification of the words in verse 29, is evident from 1 Cor. 11: 26, where Paul says, "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show (make manifest) the Lord's death till he come."

Some undertake to apply those words of the Savior to the "cup of his suffering and pouring out his blood unto death," alluded to in Matt. 20: 22; while others claim that it was fulfilled when the apostles "ate and drank with him after he rose from the dead," mentioned by Peter in Acts 10: 41. But Matt. 19: 28, 25: 34; Luke 17: 22, 19: 11–15, 22: 28–30; Heb. 9: 28; 10: 37; 12: 27, 28; Rev. 22: 12; and 1 Cor. 11: 26, all prove the reverse, and with trumpet tongue proclaim the event still future, and unquestionably it will have its accomplishment at "the marriage supper of the Lamb." Rev. 19: 9.

"OUR FATHERS, WHERE ARE THEY?"

"For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers."—PAUL.

How many times within the last few months have we been reminded of the foregoing Scripture, as we have looked out over the church in its present state with its conflicting opinions of Bible truth, and subjected as it is to such a variety of influences from without.

Many there are, who, professing to bear a message from the Lord of Hosts, are ready to "run" with every new idea that enters their minds, regardless of the effect produced on the flock thereby, and who with assumed authority presume to dictate articles of faith to the church of God. Too many, alas, there are, who by their influence, divide, distract and weaken the hands of the little ones, instead of gathering and building them up. There are enough who can show up the differences of opinion that exist, can enlarge and multiply them to the terror of the weak and ignorant, and to the sorrow of the faithful, while but few endeavor to remove difficulties, harmonize conflicting elements, promote union, provoke to love and good works, thus following "after the things that make for peace and things wherewith one may edify another." Apparently, some are trying to build up a name for themselves, unmindful of the sacrifice or expense by which it is to be accomplished. All this under a profession of zeal for God and the honor of his cause, and while preaching "the Lord at hand."

Fathers we have had in the church, and, blessed be God, some remain to us yet, whose heads have whitened in the service of their Master, whose lives have been devoted to the upbuilding of the church, who have toiled, and sacrificed, and suffered cheerfully and patiently, with many prayers and tears for the good and interest of the flock, who in all the afflictions of the church have borne a part, and who have faithfully observed the exhortation of the Apostle to "warn the unruly, comfort the feeble minded, support the weak, and be patient toward all men." Their ranks are fast being thinned, while other men have entered into their labors and are reaping the fields they have sown,—in too many instances, forgetful of the instructions and example of those who have preceded them.

God forbid that we should say aught against new laborers entering the field while the call is so great, and the ripening harvest invites the reaper's hand. No, the more the better, if they are fitted for the work and competent to perform it,—if they only be indeed "laborers together with God," co-workers with he faithful, gathering precious souls into the fold of Christ. Nevertheless it is a truth too serious to be trifled with,—too important to receive nothing more than a passing notice, that in many places the cause of Christ today suffers more from its professed friends than from its open enemies. In making this assertion, we know whereof we affirm and do testify of what we have seen and heard, and many there are who can bear witness to its truthfulness.

How sad has our heart been made as we have heard old and tried brethren condemned as being "behind the times," "backslidden," or in danger of being "run off the track" by some who have far more zeal than knowledge, and who in their rash excitement would ride over everything that comes in their way. We tremble when we hear the young and inexperienced advised to break away from the older, unless they will conform to their ideas of right in the management of church affairs, or at least to go ahead regardless of the opinion of others, while the injunction is, "ye younger submit yourselves to the elder," "be clothed with humility," "in honor preferring one another," "submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God." "And above all things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness."

To the laxity that prevails among us in regard to order and system, no doubt much of this evil may be attributed, but we believe much might also be prevented, were the church fully aware of the injury the cause of truth sustains from the class of persons referred to. By no means would we intimate that in every instance, or even in a majority of cases, there is no honesty of purpose, or christian character, but simply this, that there is, judging from from results, a total unfitness for the great work among many who take upon themselves the office of shepherd or teacher, and on the part of the church a lack of caution in encouraging those who do not possess the requisite characteristics according to the word of the Lord, which is explicit on the subject.

We would not be understood to encourage a spirit of proscription as to matters of faith or an expression of the same, either among the ministry or membership, and if truth honestly believed and preached in the spirit of Christ, causes division (and to the truth of this our own experience and past history attest), those holding truth are not responsible for the result, but we are commanded to "mark them that cause divisions contrary to the word and avoid them." If "he that backbiteth with his tongue, and doeth evil to his neighbor, or "taketh up a reproach against his neighbor," is not considered worthy to "abide in the tabernable of the Lord" or "dwell in his holy hill," how can he be a fit person to "feed the flock of God" or be an "ensample" to them? We are taught to pray that we "may be delivered from wicked and unreasonable men," and we have need to do so, for the perils of the last days are upon us. Doth it not become us to "be sober" and "vigilant," that we be not deceived by any, or misunderstand our calling or duty in the church.

The old adage is a true one, "An ounce of love is worth more than a pound of light," and while we seek for an increase of light on the word of God, and keep our minds open to conviction, let us also labor for the unity of the Spirit, for "without the Spirit of God" whatever be our profession, we are none of his. The Lord bless his people and save his heritage from reproach.

THE DISCUSSION OF THE SABBATH QUESTION.

In the Advent Review of May 9th, Eld. M. E. Cornell says:

"We have publicly accepted Eld. P.'s challenge for discussion of the question of the Sabbath, and shall be ready when time and place are agreed upon."

The acceptance of the challenge above referred to, was first declared in Manchester, N. H., in a public meeting on the evening of April 17, 1865. But Eld. C. did not see fit to state in the Advent Review, the conditions on which he proposed to discuss the Sabbath question with me, as he had stated in his meeting of April 17th. If I have been correctly informed,—which I have no reason to doubt,—the Elder proposes preliminaries which are quite novel, and we think betray some fear in regard to the result of such a discussion. We will not attempt to use his precise language, but the substance was this: "I will not discuss the question with Eld. Preble in this city, or in any other place where he and I, and our views of the Sabbath questions, are so well known as they are here. But if Elder Preble will consent to go into some place which I will select, and let me give several lectures beforehand, so as to have my views fairly understood before we commenced the discussion, I will meet him on these conditions."

Now, I will just say to Eld. Cornell, that if he claims for his side of the question, such advantage as he thinks his proposition will give him, I will agree to it, provided, he will grant me the following favors:

1. He must act the part of a christian gentleman, in selecting a suitable place for the discussion, so as to give me a fair opportunity with him in regard to traveling, and other expenses,—other things being equal,—and the place of meeting must be within the limits of New England.

2. He must notify me of the time of his preliminary discourses, so that I can attend as one of his hearers,—if I shall desire to do so,—and the discussion shall commence immediately on the close of his extra lectures.

3. He must allow me to have a voice in regard to the arrangements for the time when this meeting shall take place.

I will now add, that if Eld. M. E. Cornell shall finally back down from having a discussion with me, he may have the privilege of choosing a substitute; and I will, by the blessing of the Lord, "be ready when time and place are agreed upon." T. M. PREBLE.

THE SPIRITUALIST'S PLATFORM.

The recent convention of Spiritualist's held in Boston adopted the following resolutions:

"Whereas, The present systems of civil polity, ecclesiasticism, trade, commerce, education, social life, science and philosophy are radically defective in ignoring the elements and principles now being unfolded in the light of the congregated intelligence of the eternal world; therefore,

"Resolved, That the time has come, amid the revolutions now agitating our country, when Spiritualists, and all who can cooperate with them, should come into council to discuss the best methods of action or organization whereby these elements and principles may be effectually applied and carried to the reconstruction of church, state and society in every department, and to the adoption of new systems, to take the place of 'old earth and old heavens,' destined to pass away.

"Resolved, That Spiritualism adopts and re-publishes all that is true to the religion of the Indian, the Egyptian, the Hebrew, the Mohammedan and the Christian, and demonstrates again and anew the brotherhood of the race, the immortality of the soul, and the actuality of spirit intercourse.

"Resolved, That science, not 'theology,' interprets the nature and constitution of the mind, the health and beauty of the body, and fittingly translates the wealth and nature, the poverty of the ages, and the best methods for making reform sure, charity practical, and civilization humane.

"Resolved, That we recognize in works like those of Colenso, Renan, and other theological agitators, both in Europe and America, and in the improving tone of literature in every department, signs of encouragement in the great cause of ecclesiastical freedom.

"Resolved, That individual conscience, under the quickening and illuminating influences of angel intelligence, is the only reliable guide of faith and life; and Spiritualists, therefore, ignore the authority of sects and institutions, in seeking to erect arbitrary standards of creed and discipline."

However else Spiritualists may be divided, on one point they are unit: the Bible must be put down. The attacks of some are open and avowed, those of others covert and insidious, and made under the guise of friendship. But the assaults of both classes will fail, and by the Book which they have labored so industriously to destroy they will be judged in the last day.—Ex.

WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING.

We are frequently asked when the great campmeeting at Wilbraham will commence. We would say it is now purposed to have it begin Monday, Aug. 21st, to continue one week. As in former years, we also expect to have a goodly number of tents up the Saturday before, and have a meeting on the ground Aug. 20th. We shall expect a large gathering this year, and hope it may be the best we have ever held. Let there be much prayer offered that it surpass all others in the amount of good that shall be accomplished.

VISIT TO THE INDIANS.

In the summer of 1855, we made our first visit to the Shinnecock Indians, at Southampton, Long Island, N. Y. Our visit this year was the ninth that we have made, having been absent but two years from their annual meetings since 1855. Our journey there this year was very pleasant over the Shore Line Railroad from Boston to New London, thence by the fine steamer "Sunshine," Capt. Bates, to Sag Harbor, a distance of thirty miles on Long Island Sound. At the Harbor, we were met by Bro. James Bunn, one of the Indians, with whom we had a pleasant ride of fourteen miles to their settlement on Shinnecock Bay. We found them all well, and as full as ever of genuine hospitality, flowing out of honest hearts.

We were glad to find them bestowing increased attention to agricultural pursuits. Most of them have very comfortable dwellings, occupied by good housekeepers, who make one feel at home in their company. The whole tribe numbers about two hundred, half of whom are probably away from home. Many of the young men go on whaling voyages, and the young women obtain the best situations as domestics in the families of the rich. Many of them are of beautiful forms, modest and amiable in their manners, and if they had the advantages they deserve, would grace any parlor occupied by the refined and intelligent.

At these annual gatherings, which always take place the first Lord's day in June, the absent ones return to visit their parental homes, where they find a feast prepared as in New England at the Thanksgiving supper, in autumn. It is quite a holiday for the gay, the proud and the fair; and a religious festival for those who meet to worship the God of their fathers. There are two churches among them, one is Congregational, and the other of our faith, which began about 1842, and they are still holding fast to the "blessed hope." Eld. James Lee, one of the tribe, preaches to them, which is about all they have, excepting at their yearly meetings.

They have a neat, pleasant and convenient chapel, which was crowded during the day with attentive listeners composed of the natives and their surrounding neighbors, among whom the truth is spreading. We could say with others, it was good to be there. We visited one old Indian sister, ninety-seven years of age, who loves the appearing of Jesus. She said she had been in the service of the Lord some fifty-five years, and she did not believe he would leave her now. It was a privilege to be with such an one, and hear her talk of the Lord's kind dealings with her, and witness her faith in his promises. She is nearly blind, but quite healthy, and may yet live to see the event signified by the darkening of the sun in 1780.

In the evening, we gathered around the communion table, and enjoyed a very heavenly season in commemorating the death and sufferings of our Savior. We were cheered by the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit, and strengthened in faith, hope and love. While seated around the table, all spoke of Jesus and his coming, expecting to be at the marriage of the Lamb in a little while. That last interview with those humble followers of the Lord will be long remembered with pleasure and gratitude. It was characterized by a calm, heavenly influence rarely enjoyed in this life. It seemed like the antechamber of heaven, where we might soon expect the appearance of him whose sufferings we were commemorating. We could truly sing,

"Come and reign, come and reign,
Jesus, on thy throne."

DESCRIPTION OF ANGELS.

In "Genesis Elucidated," by J. Jervis, on pp. 113, 114, we find the following:—"With respect to the nature of angels, the doctrine of the ancient Jewish writers is, that they were corporeal and material," They were said to resemble "men;" were liable to carnal sin, by which some have been defiled." They were "thought to eat and drink," and were "identified with the fallen angels alluded to by the apostles Peter and Jude."

2300 DAYS.

Where do the 2300 days and seventy weeks begin? We think there is very little room to doubt that they commenced together, at the beginning of the vision mentioned in the eighth chapter of Daniel; and that they begin with the first event in the vision, which was the "pushing" of the ram, when no living soul could stand before him. As the vision covers the whole history of the civil governments of this world, in its present state, it is very evident that we have not yet reached its end; and, consequently, the 2300 days (years) are not yet run out. If they began earlier than B. C. 435, they would have ended before the present time. It is said by some that they began in the 20th year of Artaxerxes, which, according to Ptolemy's Canon, was B. C. 445. Had they begun there, they would have ended in 1855, a period now ten years in the past. This either proves Ptolemy's Canon wrong, or that a wrong event has been chosen for a starting point, and perhaps both. Whoever adheres to Ptolemy's Canon must give up the twentieth year of Artaxerxes as the starting point for the 2300 days; and whoever adheres to the twentieth of Artaxerxes as the year to commence the 2300 days, must give up Ptolemy's Canon. This point is too clear to need further remarks; hence, any system of chronology based on Ptolemy's Canon, so far as the 2300 days are concerned, must of necessity be erroneous. But all modern systems of human chronology have been founded upon Ptolemy's Canon, excepting the one by Bro. Thurman, who has called the Canon of Ptolemy in question, because it conflicted with the Bible; and has most clearly demonstrated that it is in error some forty-eight years in relation to the reign of Cyrus. We are fully satisfied that all efforts to sustain the entire correctness of the Canon will be as useless as an attempt to stop the waters of the Niagara.

We think it impossible to arrive at a correct understanding of the 2300 days and seventy weeks, if we adhere to the Canon of Ptolemy; and consequently the sixty-nine and sixty-two weeks cannot be correctly applied, so long as his Canon is the standard. Hence it follows that the prophetic periods in Daniel must be sealed up till some other data are obtained for understanding them, aside from what Ptolemy affords, and the chronology which is based on his system of dates. We are glad to know that these things are receiving a thorough examination, from which we may expect additional light on the subject. The signs of the times clearly indicate that we are near the great day of the Lord; but before it comes, we think the time of the Lord's coming will be understood by the church. Let us all watch and be sober, keeping ready for the glad day.

FABLES OF INFIDELITY.

We would call the attention of all to our advertisement of NEW TRACTS. We consider them to be the best ever written on the subject of Infidelity. Dealing principally with the more modern phases of error, they are just what every Christian should have and use, as a sort of "small arms," at "short range," against the tide of scepticism which is rapidly rising. The arguments are sound, the appeals are made to facts;—they are eminently common sense tracts.

Send in your orders, scatter them like the leaves of autumn, give us the means to buy more, and so keep the ball rolling in the name of the God of truth.

"A TRACT FOR THE TIMES."

The above is the title of a new tract by Bro. Wm. Shepherd, of Newark, N. J. It contains forty pages, and is designed to awaken the unconverted and backslidden to the importance of a speedy preparation for the great day of the Lord. It is a good tract to put into the hands of those who do not love Jesus. Price, single copy 10 cts., 3 copies 25 cts., 6 copies 45 cts, 12 copies 85cts., $7.00 per hundred.

Address Wm. Shepherd, Newark, N. J., or Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

BE KIND.

Those who wish to have success in convincing the erring in doctrine, or practice, must approach them with kindness, whether by conversation, or writing. As soon as we mingle bitterness with our words, they become powerless for good. No reformer can expect to succeed, any further than he conforms to the law of kindness. For want of this, many waste all their efforts for good. Instead of helping on the cause of truth, they are really a great hindrance to its progress. Let us all remember that we must be meek and kind to those who oppose us, if we would correct them successfully.

RATHER THREATENING.

The following late news looks as though a new storm might soon arise. Although the cloud may be no larger than "a man's hand," yet it looks quite ominous of a coming political tempest. We shall watch its progress with interest:

NEW YORK, June 8. The Herald's Washington special dispatch has the following items:

"A formal demand has been made on the Spanish Government for the surrender of the rebel ram Stonewall.

It is not the intention of our Government to abandon or abate its demand upon England for damages upon our commerce by pirates. Enough of our armies will be retained to enforce any demands upon foreign governments.

It is understood that preliminary measures have already been taken to enforce the Monroe doctrine, and a notification has been sent to Napoleon that he must not only send no more troops to Mexico, but that he must withdraw those he has there, and leave the people of Mexico to decide for themselves whether they will have a Republic or an Empire."

It will be observed that Spain, England and France, three important governments, are involved in the demands made by the United States, and they are of such a character as to awaken a spirit of opposition in the governments upon whom the "demands" are made. Neither individuals nor governments are willing to be driven to do any thing in these days of boasted "independence," and will fight against a righteous measure, which their own conscience approves, because some one attempted to force them to adopt it.

WHAT NEXT?

As the war of the rebellion is now apparently at an end, the inquiry comes forth, what is the next event of interest to transpire? As this is an age of rapid progress, shall we now look for better or worse times? The prophet has spoken on this point, and we may be sure that his word is truth. He says, "This know also, that in the last days . . . evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse." Hence whoever looks for a better state of things before the coming of Jesus will be disappointed in his expectations. But "what next?" In what way will evil manifest itself? We think the enemy of all righteousness has chosen SPIRITUALISM as the great antichristian system with which to deceive the church and the world, and lead them to utter ruin, if they follow its teachings. This is Satan's grand attack upon christianity. By means of this he intends to revolutionize the whole world, socially, morally, and politically. Let us keep entirely clear from the whole thing, as an abomination in the sight of the Lord, if we expect to be saved.

WHAT A CHANGE!

The following extract from a Richmond, (Va.) correspondent gives the reader a little idea of the state of things at the South. It must be a very bitter cup indeed. The correspondent says:—

"We can devise no greater punishment for secession than what it is now enduring. Think of whole communities, great and proud States, disorganized and broken down in their social system, dashed in all their expectations of political supremacy, ruined in property, so that the richest are now poorest, and the master sinks below his slave in the means of comfort and advancement. Think of a city like this, where every house is one of mourning, and every hand is grasping for something to subsist upon or an occupation to live by, and can we devise anything more painful or mortifying? I heard a man in gray, a rebel officer I suppose, say in the streets to-day: 'I am willing to do anything but curry horses; that is a business I always abhorred.' Their labor and their capital have both been swept away by a single blow. The great means of recuperation, is the cultivation of the soil with their own hands, and if that is confiscated the Government must provide for a third of its people the same as for beggars, or they must starve."

INQUIRY.—J. Douglass wishes to know of some good, common-sense work on Medicine, and to have it noticed in the Crisis.

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

THE NEW TERMS, ETC.

In compliance with the earnest wishes of the friends of the Young Pilgrim, as expressed in the responses received (a few of which are given below), the Business Agent has determined to continue its publication semi-monthly the ensuing year, at the following rates:—

For a single copy,—Fifty Cents; and at the same rate for any number of copies under ten.

Ten copies, or any number of copies under fifty, when sent to one address,—Forty Cents for each copy.

Fifty copies, and any number of copies over fifty, when sent to one address,—Thirty-five Cents for each copy.

To Canada subscribers,—at the same rates, with no extra charge for American postage.

All subscriptions for the coming year must be made at the above rates.

The friends will understand that these advanced terms are necessary to make the paper self-sustaining. Should the expenses of publication another year be less, and the circulation advanced so as to warrant a lower price, the terms will doubtless be decreased accordingly. It is hoped, therefore, that all, in the mean time, will bear this slight advance in their expenditures cheerfully, and help the Young Pilgrim on his way with a free and liberal hand.

The call for donations to the Sunday School Fund, to make up the past year's deficiency, is withdrawn.

We shall send the July numbers of the new volume to all of our present subscribers, and hope to hear from every one before the 1st of August. After that, no more will be sent, except to those who have renewed their subscription.

Responses.

FROM THE SANDY HILL, (N. Y.) S. SCHOOL:

All whom I have talked with want the Young Pilgrim to continue semi-monthly, and will pay 50 cts. a year. E. D. FISK.

FROM THE RUTLAND (VT.) S. SCHOOL:

The Rutland S. School has voted to pay a higher price, and have the paper sent, as now, twice a month. H. F. CARPENTER.

FROM THE ATHOL (MASS.) S. SCHOOL:

Our Sabbath School by vote prefer to have the Young Pilgrim the same as now—once in two weeks. GEORGE STOCKWELL.

FROM BRO. GEO. A. STREETER, NO. DANA, MASS:

In my travels I find the general desire is to have the Young Pilgrim come twice a month, certain. Let us have it twice a month, if at all. We must have it. The children need it; the cause demands it. "Feed my lambs," was the command of the Master. Let us not fail to do it.

FROM BRO. L. ANDREWS, W. WINSTED, CT.

I enclose 56 cents for the Young Pilgrim the next year. If each of its 5000 subscribers will send in 50 cents for the coming year (which is little enough), it would enable the office to meet expenses and perhaps pay a portion of the deficiency. A few cents each from its friends will place it on a permanent basis.

FROM BRO. H. J. BALDWIN, NEW PRESTON, CT.

We profess to believe that the Lord is soon to come. If we do believe it, let our acts correspond with our belief. Let the paper be sent out at least twice a month. Let the price be fixed high enough to cover the expense; and, if it brings in more than that, all the better. Let every brother and sister who has a child, send for, and pay for, the paper. There are but few who are unable to pay for it. But in order to have the thing sure, let every one who can, send from ten cents upwards, to help those that cannot pay for it themselves. In this way the children will be getting information, and we shall show that our faith and works agree. I am not willing to believe that this people who profess to believe in a clean Gospel, and in the soon coming of our blessed Lord and King, will fail to sustain a paper for their little ones.

A FREEDMEN'S MISSION.

There are special reasons why, as a people, we should establish among the Freedmen South, missions of our own, rather than expend our beneficence, as many now do, through the agency of other societies. The special reasons are these:

1. Our Lord's commission: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." This is his general commission to all, and to us no less than to others. To do our part, then, in carrying the gospel of salvation to the millions to whom it has never yet been preached in its purity and fullness, and who have been forbidden to learn to read it for themselves, is our christian duty; and this work we can do better by sending forth our own laborers, and supporting them from our own funds. But we have a special commission. The Great Head of the church has specially committed to us the "gospel of the KINGDOM;" and this is to be "preached in all the world" before the end come. To us, then, there is a special work, and a special call to send forth, from ourselves, teachers and missionaries who shall preach to the Freedmen that gospel, so that, while they christianize, they shall christianize them into the truth, and thus prepare a benighted people for the coming and kingdom of Christ, and make them missionaries of the same gospel to their own race.

2. Their readiness to receive the glad tidings of a coming Redeemer. The bitter trials of their earthly lot have prepared them to look beyond this suffering state, and long for a happier life in a better world to come. Hence they have always been peculiarly fitted to receive with gladness the good news of the World's Great Jubilee at hand, when the rod of the oppressor shall be broken, and slavery and scorn and wrong shall be suffered and felt no more.

3. Their views on baptism. The great mass of unsophisticated blacks at the South, who have any knowledge of christianity, are, it is said, such decided Baptists in practice, that those who sympathize with them in their religious convictions on this point, have a great advantage over all others in their influence upon them. If, for this reason, the Baptists of New England have felt it their duty to establish missions of their own among them, the same reason appeals with equal force to us.

4. It is often said of us,—"You are not evangelical; you take no interest in missions; your doctrines have a tendency to paralyze missionary effort, and create an indifference to the great work of evangelization." How much reason or unreason there may have seemed to be in this opinion of us heretofore, it is not worth while here to say; but this is certain,—God has now opened, at our very doors, an inviting opportunity to prove it a slander. And our action or inaction, now, will very soon show to the world whether it is true or false.

What, then, shall we do; and how shall we do it?

Organize a Freedmen's Mission Society in every church. Appoint your officers,—President, Secretary, Treasurer, and Soliciting Committee, to oversee and direct the work. As far as practicable, fill these offices, or a portion of them, with Christian women—they will work more successfully than men, especially on the soliciting committees. Form sewing circles for the Freedmen. Collect clothing, books, papers, and little articles of domestic comfort and use, for their benefit, and monies for the support of teachers and missionaries. Do this at once. And then, when you all come together at the next annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, on Mount Wilbraham, in August next, organize a Second Advent Missionary Society, for general missionary operations,—but having for its special work, the physical, mental, moral and religious improvement of the Freedmen South. Let this Society embrace the Middle and Eastern States and the Canadas, with its headquarters at Boston; and, let another Society, for the same purpose, be formed in the West, centering at Buchanan.

No great work of this kind can be accomplished well, without associated action and organized effort. Its magnitude, and the shortness of time to do it in, demand of us to adopt the wisest and most effectual means,—that no labor may be expended for naught.

God give us wisdom, and zeal, and promptness of action, that "this gospel of the KINGDOM" may soon be preached where it has been little heard of before, until every hill and valley of the sunny South shall echo to the cry,—"Behold! He cometh!" W. B. H.

A REQUEST.

I am requested to inquire, if any of our brethren at the east will soon come west? In the event of their coming, I would invite a call to this place. Our town is almost on the direct line of railroad from the east to the far west. A competent man, who understands his business, would get a fair hearing. None other would be welcome. There is already enough of error and sectarianism in this sect-ridden place. I think a few lectures would show how much impression the truth would make. I would do all I can to sustain. Though poor, and without influence, still I have a home to rest the weary limbs of those who love Jesus. If Bro. Grant, Hastings, or any other preacher of notoriety, would make his way through, probably much good might be accomplished in this new field, where little effort has been made. J. N. SNYDER.

THE PRICE OF THE PILGRIM.

It has been decided to advance the price of the Young Pilgrim. The terms hereafter will be as follows: Single copies 50 cents. In packages of 10 or more, to one address, 40 cents each. Packages of 50 or more, 35 cents per copy. Canada subscribers will receive them post paid at the same rates.

Our reasons for this decision are:—

We want the paper to live, and pay its way, and not be a beggar.

We know that many of its readers are able, as we trust all are willing, to pay the cost of the paper, and many would be unwilling to receive it at less than it actually costs.

We want to give the Pilgrim to those who are really poor, and if we send it to the rich cheaper than we can afford to, of course we cannot give it to the poor. But if those who are able send full pay, then we can give it to others who are too poor to pay for it.

We do not want any poor little girl or boy to do without the paper because they cannot pay for it, and we want such children to write us word how matters stand, and send us what money they can spare, if they can spare any, and then we will try in some way to supply them with papers, money or no money.

Those who have had papers below cost the last year, may wish to give something to pay for papers for the poor next year; and if so, let them send it right on with the pay for their own papers.

Some have lately sent us on 30 or 40 cents for their papers; they will please send us the balance to make up the amount of their subscriptions at the new rates. And if there are children or schools, in new places at the West, or among the Freedmen at the South, who want Pilgrims, and are not able to pay for them, let them write us word about it, and we will try to help them. Let such letters be directed to "The Editor of the Young Pilgrim, Boston, Mass." All other letters containing subscriptions or orders for the paper, should be, as usual, addressed to "The Young Pilgrim, Boston, Mass." Let us all be workers together in this good work, to benefit those around us.

If any are not satisfied with this arrangement, I will tell them how to get the Young Pilgrim cheaper. Take 50 copies or more, and so get them at 35 cents per copy. This is nearly as cheap as ever they were singly.

Some of our friends do not wish the price raised at all. They can avoid it in this way. Let individuals or schools make a contribution of five dollars, and then get subscribers at 30 cents a year, as before, and the five dollars will pay the extra cost.

We wish to hear from all interested at once, as we only send the Pilgrim till the subscriptions expire, and then wait till we hear from subscribers. This is the reason why some fail to get their papers. They have not paid up in advance. Let us all be prompt. The time to subscribe is now, as the half volume begins with July 1st. H. L. H.

MORE ASTRONOMICAL CONSIDERATIONS.

All astronomical tables make the eclipses correctly at the present day; and why? Because they have been properly arranged for doing so; and if properly arranged for making the ancient eclipses, they must make them as correctly. The great error of the "Oracle's" tables is not as to the moon's mean lunation, but the moon's anomaly, which we prove by comparing his calculations of the eclipse of A. D. 136, with the one of A. D. 134, and this accounts for the error as to time; that is, for his errors being so much greater in some eclipses than in others. As Pingre's tables have been approved by the astronomical society at Paris, and as he has calculated all of the ancient eclipses, we may suppose they are not far from the truth; but taking nothing on trust, we had better first test the correctness of his tables, which we can easily do by noticing the time which he gives for the eclipse of A. D. 136; and we find that he falls only nine minutes short of the time given by Ptolemy; hence his tables must be not far from the truth, as to time.

We will now compare his tables with those of Prof. Hudson's "Oracle." The first eclipse we will notice in his catalogue, as published by Prof. Hudson, in the Crisis of May 2nd, was the eclipse of the moon, Sept. 1st, B. C. 720, which he makes at 6 hours and 51 minutes in the evening; but Pingre has it at 10 hours and 17 minutes. Now, if Pingre, the French astronomer, is to be regarded as of sufficient authority, we have discovered an error of three hours and twenty-six minutes in the tables used by Prof. Hudson's "Oracle"; therefore, if my tables be correct, they ought to make the eclipse B. C. 457 about three hours later than his.

In the Crisis of May 2nd, he says Mr. Thurman has "made the time of the new moon almost three hours later than himself." Thus it will be discovered that the argument that Prof. Hudson uses to prove the incorrectness of my tables, falling in the opposite scale, are really proof of their correctness. If Prof. Hudson, rather than admit the correctness of my tables, would try to make it appear that the celebrated astronomers of Paris are not reliable, we will call in another witness. By reference to the list of eclipses in Ferguson's astronomy, it will be seen that Struyk gives us 10 hours and 18 minutes for the middle of this eclipse; which is only one minute later than Pingre, and THREE hours and TWENTY-SEVEN minutes later than Prof. Hudson's "Oracle."

Let us now inquire as to how Pingre's tables and mine correspond. By reference to page 234 of the "Book of Daniel Opened," it will be seen that I have the eclipse of B. C. 457 put down at 9 hours 15 minutes, for longitude 28 degrees 10 minutes. Pingre, for the longitude of Paris, has it at 7 hours 30 minutes, to which add 1 hour 43 minutes, the difference in longitude, and we have 9 hours 13 minutes. Thus it will be seen that my tables make this eclipse but two minutes later than Pingre's. So I am found in good company, while the "Oracle" wanders alone about twenty-seven hundred miles, or three hours out of time. This accounts for his being unable to discover that total eclipse, which all correct tables make at Celæne, the 16th of December, B. C. 457.

Now for three reasons Pingre's tables ought to be regarded as good authority.

1st. Because they make Prof. Hudson's test eclipse of A. D. 136 within nine minutes of the truth, as to time.

2nd. Because they make all of the ancient eclipses.

3rd. Because they have been approved by the astronomical board of France; and by the same three reasons we discover that the tables used by Prof. Hudson's "Oracle" are not reliable; and if not, how can he by them prove that Daniel is wrong, and Ptolemy right? or weaken the hands of God's people by telling us that he "was desired to take particular pains with the eclipse of 437 B. C.," and that he "could not make any eclipse at all at Sardis, or at least a very small one, if any, while Mr. Thurman makes a total one."

The reason why he was unable to make a total eclipse there is, that his tables were in error as to the time of the new moon. We have noticed that Pingre's tables made the time of the new moon within two minutes of the same time with mine; and his tables make the eclipse B. C. 457 within a few seconds of total; thus proving, as we before observed, that correct tables will make all of those eclipses by which we prove the correctness of our Bible chronology.

The error of "Oracle's" tables is clearly proven again by the eclipse of B. C. 431; for he makes the size of that eclipse seven digits and seven-tenths, thus covering but a little more than one half of the sun's disk, which could scarcely be seen with the naked eye. This is positive proof of the incorrectness of his tables, for Thucydides declares that this eclipse was so dark as to cause the stars to shine out. The smallest eclipse that I have ever known made on the 3rd of Aug. B. C. 431, by any tables claimed to be correct enough to make those ancient eclipses, was 9 digits; which, says Mr. Smith, "could by no means exhibit the remarkable darkness recited by Thucydides." We ask, if an eclipse of 9 digits "could by no means exhibit the remakable darkness," how can one of only about seven digits cause such a darkness?

WM. C. THURMAN.

For the World's Crisis.

ASTRONOMY AGAIN.

ELD. THURMAN'S ERRORS.

My criticism of Eld. Thurman's book began full s[illegible] months ago,—not with its astronomy, but its history. I reserved any remarks I might have to make upon its astronomy, partly because this was not its least important feature, and partly because my own astronomy was a little rusty. Though I might brag of one or two inventions in mathematics, and of illustrations from them, which got me some credit in my college days. So something may be left after the rust is rubbed away.

But I suppose not a few readers of the Crisis are wearying, as well they may be, of a six months' controversy. And I am willing to see the end of it. Whatever more, therefore, I might be able to say, and whatever may seem to me open to reply, I hope to be done with the astronomy in the present paper, which may help to account for my doubts whether Eld. T.'s astronomy is "truth testing." Let us briefly point out some of his errors.

1. In page 33 of his book, he says of the eclipse of July 16, B. C. 523, "This is the first eclipse of the moon which has the appearance of being one of those recorded at Babylon." Yet he had said on p. 32, "We learn by calculation that a total eclipse of the moon occurred on Mar. 19, B. C. 721;" which is as Ptolemy records it, and Eld. T. mentions no objection against this item in the record. So the wholesale remark in p. 32 looks as if the assertion outran the argument.

2. In p. 34 he says, "This gives for the moon's latitude in eclipses 55m. and 57s." In eclipses. But why is the plural number used? The moon's latitude in eclipses varies all the way from zero to 63 minutes and 45 seconds. Beyond this latitude it can not be eclipsed. And unless there is an absolutely exact cycle, in which each eclipse is accurately repeated from the previous cycle, probably no two eclipses occur at precisely the same latitude. The number of points in 45 minutes and 57 seconds is mathematically infinite, and the chances of two eclipses occurring at the same point are as few as the chances of lightning striking twice at the same place within the thousandth part of an inch.

To speak of one "latitude in eclipses," then, is inaccurate and unscientific. I have seen no such expression in any other work on or about eclipses.

3. In the same sentence, p. 34, Eld. T. finds a small eclipse at the distance from the node of 19 degrees and 19 minutes named in the previous sentence. But 12 degrees and 24 minutes from the node is the limit, beyond which an eclipse of the moon is impossible. Here, then, is a manifest error. It is one of two that were pointed out by me during the week of the discussion. It is also one of those had in mind in a previous article, when I spoke of Mr. T.'s errors, "whether of the pen or of the press.' To this remark the editor replied that they had been shown to be errors of the press. I wondered, when I saw this, when, where, how, by whom, and to whom they had been "shown" to be errors of the press. Eld. T. acknowledged this error when I pointed it out. Two or three days after I requested him to furnish the correct statement at his convenience. About six weeks after he said he had looked at the passage, and found the 19 degrees, etc., correct, and this would bring the moon within the limit. I, of course, could not see how 19 degrees would be only 12 degrees or less, and despairing on this point, asked about another matter.

Some time after this the "oracle" I have referred to, whom we will call Mr. X., called on me. He said he had also inquired about the 19 degrees, after the time, he thinks, that Eld. T. tried to explain the point to me. Eld. T. then tried to explain by saying he meant 19 degrees, etc., from the opposite node. This, of course, would not help the matter. But Mr. X. guessed what Eld. T. was driving at, and saw what the case required; and he suggested the phrase "5 signs, 19 degrees," etc., which would bring the moon within 11 degrees of the opposite node, and within eclipsing distance. (A sign, the reader will understand, is 30 degrees; and 180 degrees is a half circle, or the distance from node to node.) The explanation thus furnished to Eld. T. is given by him in the Crisis soon after. It appears that he himself did not explain the point for full six weeks, and he did not explain it then until an astronomer told him how to do it. Algebra consists largely in finding the value of a term called x, at first unknown. I think Mr. X. should be little valued just here. When, I ask again, was the error shown to be one of the press?

4. Another error which I pointed out during the week of the discussion was one which must be either on p. 34 or p. 37. I need not point out the precise nature of it, further than to say that it concerned one of the phrases, "north, ascending," or "north, descending." Eld. T. saw that there must be an error. But when I asked for the corrected phrase, six weeks after, he changed both terms, leaving the difficulty precisely the same; on the same principle that changing the signs of two factors in Algebra leaves the result unchanged; or as two negatives are equal to an affirmative. Rusty as my own astronomy was, I saw at once that Eld. T. overdid the work of correction. Mr. X. informed me that the phrase "north, ascending," on page 37, should read "north, descending,"—only one term being changed.

5. On pp. 39, 40, Eld. T. "revises" the Canon of Ptolemy on the ground that it is "absurd" to suppose that the Jews began to build the temple in a sabbatical year. I do not see the absurdity. I find an express law against sowing or reaping in a sabbatical year, but not one word against building synagogues or temples. Mr. Stevenson would reason in just the opposite way from Mr. Thurman. Such a sacred enterprise, he thinks, looks as if the sacred year had come round. Be that as it may, we ask what a Hebrew might do during that twelvemonth? Could be only eat, drink, talk, go to synagogue, and to sleep? Whatever the facts may be, it seems to me an error in Eld. T. to "revise" the canon so readily.

6. Leaving many things unsaid about the Xerxes eclipse, which Eld. T. assigns to B. C. 457, Mr. X. informed me that when Eld. T. showed him his "projection" or diagram of this eclipse, he saw at once that Eld. T.'s results did not correspond with his diagram. If the diagram was correct, the eclipse was not total at Celænæ. And if the eclipse was total there, there were two errors in Eld. T.'s computation of it, one error correcting the other. But two such errors of course contain no demonstration.

In support of this eclipse, the Crisis has adduced the list of eclipses computed by Mons. Pingre, about one hundred years ago, approved by Le Monnier and D'Alembert, and published in the "Art of verifying dates." I have only to say that if this list of 10,000 or 12,000 eclipses is to be relied on as accurately computed, it annuls the assertion of Eld. T., repeated by the Crisis, that no tables can make certain eclipses of the Canon which Eld. T. regards as incompatible. M. Pingre finds all Ptolemy's eclipses; and he finds them by one set of tables too, those of Halley, using also the cycles of 18 years and of 521 years. This authority, then, confirms the Canon quite as much as it supports Eld. T.'s eclipse of B. C. 457.

But M. Pingre does not pretend to be very exact. He expressly says that he thinks the actual time of any eclipse will vary not more than half an hour from his computation. And his endorsers also notice this statement. Half an hour allowed for time. Allow a corresponding margin for errors in the place of an eclipse, and how much is M. Pingre's immense list worth to prove that Eld. T.'s eclipse was total at Celænæ, and did not go 100 miles north of that place?

But Mr. X. also informs me that Professor Airy says, in one of his papers, that all computations of eclipses previous to the year 1810 are "worthless," for the imperfection of the older tables. Now Ferguson's tables, on which Eld. T. defends, are among the oldest of the older tables. And Professor Airy, the Astronomer Royal of England, has been cited as good authority by the Crisis.

I may also add, here, that seven of Ptolemy's eclipses, including some of those which Eld. T. pronounces incompatible, have been carefully computed by Mr. Ideler, in a paper published in the Berlin Transactions, 1814–15. By the best tables then known, Ideler finds the eclipses not far from Ptolemy's record of them. Using older tables, which were already criticised by astronomers, he failed to find one or two of them. But he did not think of rejecting them by reason of poor tools or defective tables.

Ptolemy's eclipses have also been all computed by Dr. Zech, and with very great care, in a prize essay which I have not seen, and therefore can not give his precise results. But it is alluded to in his later work in such a way that there seems no reason to doubt that he found the eclipses.

In conclusion, I will propose two questions, which I have already asked of Eld. T. in conversation. In answer to the questions I might give another lesson in Astronomy. But I will resign the lecturer's chair in favor of Eld. T., simply desiring him to tell what replies he made to the questions when I proposed them to him. They are as follows:

1. Suppose two eclipses of the same body, sun or moon, occurring at the same distance from the node. Must they be of the same dimensions?

2. Suppose two eclipses of the same dimensions. Must they be of the same duration?

With one more paper, on the practical bearings of some matters in controversy, I hope to close my part in this discussion.

For the World's Crisis.

THE MAN WHO FELL AMONG THIEVES.

The restraints imposed upon men by the war are loosed. Worldly men will now open their arms wide, and embrace this world to their utmost capacities. The many avenues to wealth, honor, and position, in this present world, will be thronged with eager votaries. But, to the children of light, this bright prospect is the last great shining bait which, if swallowed, will seal destruction. They, too, see a shining future, but it is not the glitter of gold and silver. It is the shining grain already ripe for the harvest that invites them on. They long to be reapers there. They know they will receive wages, and gather fruit unto life eternal. John 4: 36.

The Lord our God has the honor of ripening this field; and now, at his bidding, his children lift up their eyes and see; and enter into it with all readiness of mind. Their hearts bound with joy at the very prospect. Every move in that direction fills them with inexpressible gratitude. Their language is, truly there is something yet to live for. The lingering, weeping Marys can here find employ. Their ascended Rabboni speaks in his own sweet tones, "Go to my brethren,"—go to these Freedmen, and tell them I am coming back. Tell them to prepare to meet me. Tell them that I have broken their heavy yoke from off them, and now I want them to "take my yoke" upon them, "and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly of heart;" and they "shall find rest" unto their souls. "For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." O what a sweet employment at the bidding of our Lord. Our last great work for him. A native to educate and christianize.

This call in "convention" too, of women professeng godliness, is timely. It is the well-known voice of Jesus,—"Mary," "Go." It is to endue her with power from on high to obey this call of her Lord, and go. They long to be at the work. "Here am I, send me," is their cheerful response. Now what wait we for but thy blessing? "Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God until that he have mercy upon us" in this great work, and open our way to its accomplishment.

Here lies the man that went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves, who stripped him of him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed leaving him half dead. We hasten to the work of the good Samaritan, cheered on by the words of our Lord: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Your sister, E. S. WILLARD.

For the World's Crisis.

FEAR THE LORD.

"Lord, if thou thy grace impart,
Poor in spirit, meek in heart,
We shall, as our Master, be Rooted in humility."

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." "The fear of the Lord is instruction and before honor is humility." If the fear of God is the first step in the path of the just, and the beginning of wisdom, how much more should we who have professed for a long time to follow in the steps of the meek and lowly Jesus, partake of this spirit of humility and fear of disobeying the commandments of God. How great the responsibility resting upon us.

There are many precious promises to those that walk in the fear of God; not slavish fear, for that hath torment, but that shuns to disobey the law of the high and holy Being that inhabits eternity. Tremble, thou earth, at the presence of the Lord; for he cometh to judge the world with righteousness and the people with his truth." Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him. Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord; that walketh in his ways. May we keep humble, low at the foot of the cross. We must be as little children before we can enter the kingdom.

Plymouth, O. N. M. WELLS.

Correspondence.

From Chloe Lankton's Pastor.

To whom it may concern:—By your favor, I this day (June 4th) have the pleasure to receive a valuable package of publications, relating to the coming of Christ, the state of the departed, etc., etc. A glance at their captions and their pages has led me to conclude that they are as ably written, as the subjects treated are important. Desirous of learning the truth, and grateful to all who seek by study to learn it, I thank you for placing in my hands the package which has come to hand. Respectfully yours,

New Hartford, Ct. J. B. CLEAVELAND

From Bro. Israel Rice.

BRO. GRANT:—As I have to mail a letter to the office with an order for the Crisis, believing there are brethren scattered abroad that would like to know how the cause prospers in Nova Scotia, I will improve this opportunity. I can say there is an increasing interest to hear about the coming of the Lord, and Bible doctrine in general, and a Bible preparation to meet the Bridegroom when he will return.

The rumor of war begins to trouble us in N. S. There have been letters from our government to our militia officers to renew their drill exercise, and "become accomplished in duty, for real service," for it was "no longer children's play." Well, if "a whirlwind" is to go up from the coast of the earth, and the slain of the Lord are to be from one end of the earth to the other, Nova Scotia will have to drink her portion of the cup. What can be the duty of those who have possessions, and want to be saved, with the words of Jesus before them, and the signs of a speedy change in financial matters of this life? There seems a very slight chance for christians of wealth to possess it long, if they try.

Hillsburgh, N. S. ISRAEL RICE.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

BRO. GRANT:—Our conference in Ohio has closed, and the good results of the meeting time alone will determine. It being a hurrying time of the year, but few were out, aside from brethren and sisters, in the daytime, till Sunday. Evenings we had a good hearing, for a country place. On Lord's day, we occupied a barn forty by eighty feet. The congregation was large and very attentive. A deep feeling seemed to pervade the minds of most. Our brethren and sisters enjoyed the meeting very much indeed. They were ready to work for Jesus, and I trust their testimonies will yet speak for the glory of God and the good of souls. We were disappointed in not seeing Eld. S. A. Chaplin at our meeting. Sickness in his family was the probable reason why he was not present. But while we were disappointed in this direction, we were agreeably disappointed in another. A choir of good singers, numbering six, headed by Bro. Jonas Wendell, made their advent among us on Friday, direct from Norwalk, Ohio. Their coming was like the coming of Titus,—joyous, refreshing, rendering us material aid during the meeting. Bro. Guffin, a minister of the word from Indiana, was also present to cheer us by his counsel, prayers, and exhortations. Bro. G. remained over Monday to preach, and attend to the ordinance of baptism. There are many in this new field who are almost persuaded to be christians; but, as yet, stand still for fear of reproach, or some other cause, best known to themselves. May the Lord help them to come out from the world, and put on Christ, and identify themselves with the body of Christ, and thus become members of the royal priesthood, and heirs of the world to come. How much better it would be for themselves, their children, their neighbors, and the world at large. What peace of mind; what unwavering consolation, would flow into their souls as the result of such obedience to God.

Come, then, dear sinner, in the name of Jesus, come. We urge it upon you, knowing it will be for the glory of God, and the salvation of your souls. God and Christ says come; the Spirit says come. Yes, all heaven is interested in your everlasting salvation, and we ask again, why will you not come and receive the Spirit of adoption and start for glory?

Obituaries.

SAUNDERS. Fell asleep in Compton, C. E., April 25th, 1865, of congestion of the lungs, Susan S., daughter of John and Laura J. Saunders, aged twenty-two years and eight months.

The subject of this notice was a very amiable young woman, always obedient to her parents, kind to her brothers and sisters, and tender-hearted to all. She sought the Lord and obtained a hope in Christ awhile before she died. During her sickness, which was brief, she was patient, encouraging her parents to hold on to God, and warning her brothers and sisters to meet her in the kingdom. A discourse was preached at her funeral by Eld. S. W. Thurber, from Col. 3: 4.

NORMAN STEVENS.

DOLE. Died in Albany, N. Y., May 27, 1865, Bro. Albinus S. Dole, aged forty-six years.

Another of our number has left us. Bro. Dole embraced the faith of the speedy coming of the Savior, and was baptized by Bro. Grant, at Bristol, Conn., May, 1855. He has resided at this place the past six years, and adorned his profession by a well ordered life, until he fell asleep in Jesus. He suffered much during the past four years, which he bore with christian resignation. Bro. M. Bachelor, of Rutland, gave a discourse on the occasion, from the words, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?"

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool May 27th, Queenstown 28th.

The Paris Patrie states that letters from the Sultan had been handed to the Emperor, accepting the decision of Napoleon, in his quality as arbitrator upon the Suez Canal question.

The French Emperor was still absent in Algiers.

Prince Napoleon has resigned. The London Post says the Prince resigned in consequence of the letter of the Emperor. The Globe says the Prince was censured for his democratic views generally, but more particularly for uttering hostile sentiments on the Emperor's American policy.

Napoleon will not return to Europe until about the 10th of June. He had declined an invitation of the Queen of Spain to return via Spain.

DOMESTIC.

New York, June 7. The Tribune announces that the President will soon issue a proclamation restoring the privilege of the habeas corpus, and ordering a general clearance of military prisons.

It is not now probable the trial of Jeff. Davis will take place until September. The Supreme Court will adjourn to-morrow (Thursday), and it is not likely a special term will be held during the summer.

Nashville, June 9th. At about 2 P. M. to-day the extensive building, used for quartermasters and commissary stores, on the corner of Summer and Broad streets, known as Taylor's depot, took fire from sparks, which fell into the cellar from a locomotive which was on the track running lengthwise with the building, and about one half of it destroyed. The other part was saved by the exertions of the fire department. Several dwellings near the scene of the fire were also destroyed. Two or three of the employees of the quartermaster's department are supposed to have perished in the flames.

LATER.

The destruction of Government property at the great fire to-day is now believed will reach from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000. Within the walls of the quartermaster's buildings were stores sufficient to supply an army of 80,000 men two years. The quantity of rope alone consumed was valued at upwards of $1,000,000. The building was the largest in the country—800 feet front and 200 feet deep.

New York, June 10. The Herald's Texas correspondence says Forts Manhasset and Griffin, defending Sabine Pass, were surrendered on the 26th. The rebel troops had all evacuated the works before the arrival of the national forces.

The Times Washington dispatch says: "We can say authoritatively that the Government has positively determined that Jeff Davis shall be tried by a civil tribunal. The question was decided in a Cabinet meeting, held within the past week. Where the trial will take place has not been decided.

Washington, June 11. Official news from Acapulco, dated the 9th of May, embraces the following intelligence, which was suppressed in the despatches sent through French sources from Havana:

Gen. Regules, with a part of the 1st division of the Central National army of Mexico, attacked the city of Tacambaro, in the State of Michoacan, on the 11th of April and took it by storm, capturing all the garrison, including 200 Belgians, together with ammunition, artillery, etc. A few days before the National forces captured a train with supplies and ammunition sent from Morelia to Pascuxco, and defeated the French forces at Bernandio, Cristo and Zinapearo, all in the State of Michoacan. Gen. Ortega, Commander-in-Chief of the Center, has taken the field, having recovered from his wounds.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.—Washington, June 3. The Secretary of the Treasury has published a correct statement of the public debt as it appears from the book of the Treasurer's returns and requisitions on the Department on the 31st of May, 1865.

A recapitulation shows the amount outstanding, bearing interest in coin, to be $1,108,113,842, the interest being $64,480,489 50; the amount bearing interest in lawful money is $1,053,476,371, the interest being $60,158,384, 52; the debt on which interest has ceased is $786,270; the debt bearing no interest is $472,829, 270 57. The total indebtedness is $2,635,205, 753 50. The interest in gold and paper being $124,638,874. The amount of legal tender notes in circulation is $659,163,569; these include $432,687,966 of the new issue and $160,143,620 of the compound interest notes under act of June 30, 1864. The uncalled for requisitions are $40,000,000, and the amount in treasury notes is over $25,000,000. The amount of fractional currency is $24,667,000.

IMPORTANT POSTAL CHANGES. The new postal law, which has gone into effect, makes several changes of special importance to business men. Letters but partially pre-paid are now to be forwarded, the balance to be collected upon delivery, at single, instead of double rates as heretofore; but letters wholly unpaid are sent directly to the dead letter office, so that care should be exercised not to omit the stamp, or vexatious delay will follow. The fee for advertised letters is increased to two cents, while at offices where there is not a free delivery by carriers, drop letters require only one cent stamp to each half ounce.

☞ Mrs. Lydia H. Sigourney, the poetess, sometimes called the "Hemans of America," died at her residence in Hartford, Conn., on Saturday, in the 74th year of her age. Her published works in all, number nearly fifty volumes.

☞ The number of letters now being received at the dead-letter office, sent there under the new law, which makes prepayment compulsory, amounts to more than 15,000 per week.

☞ The great Mount Cenis Tunnel beneath the Alps, which is to be 13,500 yards, or seven and a half miles in length, is being pushed forward with energy from either end. About one-third of the whole distance is now accomplished.

☞ A reliable burglar has informed one of the Hartford police officers that a great increase of burglary in cities and towns may hereafter be expected. His story is that the thieves and burglars have completed an extended organization over the country.

☞ While a corps of West Point cadets were drilling the other day their muskets were knocked from their hands by a flash of lightning, and some of the men were so stunned that they went reeling round for several minutes. One was knocked senseless, but was resuscitated.

☞ Since the war began 61,000 men have enlisted from Maine; 153,486 from Illinois; 80,000 from Michigan; 165,314 from Indiana; 211,500 from Ohio. These figures include the re-enlistments.

☞ The depopulation of Canada goes on to an extent which greatly alarms our neighbors across the line. Some villages are nearly deserted by emigration of families going to the Western States, and most of the young men are leaving.

☞ The coal miners in Schuylkill and Carbon counties, Penn., are on a strike because their wages have been reduced from seven to six dollars per day, and it has been necessary to send troops to the locality to preserve the peace. There is also a strike among the coal miners near Massillon, Ohio.

☞ The receipts of the first week of the Northwestern Sanitary Fair at Chicago were over $100,000. Every department is doing well.

☞ The anti-rent troubles are reviving in Western New York, and soldiers have been sent to enforce the legal rights of Van Rensselaer.

Notice.

BRO. GRANT:—We wish, through the Crisis, to give notice to the brethren generally, that we have published a work entitled,

"THE TRUTH MADE PLAIN: OR AN EXPOSITION OF THE TIMES AND SEASONS,"

showing that the second personal appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ will take place no later than 1867, and probably in the spring of that year. It contains an exposition of all the periods relating to the time of that event, both in the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation. It contains seven different expositions of Revelation alone, which we think are clear and easily to be understood. The 2300 and 1335 days are shown to terminate at the same time, or together.

We propose to send the work to all who may desire it, on receiving four cents to pay the postage, leaving it to them to pay for it or not, as they shall feel disposed, after reading it. It contains 270 12mo pages, in pamphlet form. The price of the book to those who are able, and may feel disposed to pay for it, after having read it, is sixty cents. To those who are unable to pay, "without money and without price."

All orders must be addressed to Dr. A. Decker, Newark, N. J. S. W. BISHOP, A. DECKER.

Tremont Campmeeting.

The fifth annual campmeeting will commence at Tremont, Tuesday, July 25th, and hold over the following Sabbath. The Committee will make arrangements for boarding. Bro. Hiram Munger will preside, arrange for the preaching, and give due notice of the same. By order of the Committee.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. T. Ongley—All right. It was only a transposition of the figures in the acknowledgment. Wood, $2.73 and Moses $2.23. J. Root is paid to No. 527, which is beyond the end of the volume.

J. H. Leirnton—Map of the Holy Land, elegantly engraved, 20 by 28 inches, lined with fine muslin, mounted on rollers, and colored and varnished, $1.25. One on paper, 14 by 22 inches, 20 cents. The price of "Know Thyself" is 15 cts. Received, 5 cts.

C. J. Brown—Received.
E. Cordry—Received.
J. A. Libby—It was not received.

To H. L. HASTINGS' CORRESPONDENTS.

To B. P.—I can furnish Sunday School books, new and old. Have bought over 500 volumes the past week. Can furnish, in addition to my own publications, all the books of the American S. S. Union, the two American Tract Societies, the Mass. S. S. Union, and a large number of miscellaneous books. I can send S. S. Union Libraries of 100 vols. new books for $16, smaller libraries for $5.00 or $10.00, and all the books, cards, pictures, gifts, class books, etc., of Societies, publishers, and others, at publisher's rates, or less, if CASH comes with the order. Send word how many scholars you have, and what ages, and what books you have on hand, and I will do the best I can for you. Prices are higher than formerly, but still books may be had at fair rates. Tell by what express to send them.

D. N. C.—Social Hymns are in the printer's hands, and will be out as soon as practicable. Children's Hymns will accompany them, and so the book will serve for Sunday Schools as well as for meetings. Have patience with me. I am not idle, but am working on these and other things as rapidly as is consistent with other duties.

G.—I don't doubt your place is sectarian enough, but if you get irritated it will be more so. Hard words, says the proverb, break no bones—but Solomon says, "A soft tongue breaketh the bone." Try that, and be patient towards all men. That is the best way.

To A. G. L.—I enter your name as a subscriber for "The Englishman's Hebrew Concordance." The cheapest and safest way to send the money will be by a post-office money order, or a draft on Boston or New York. Price of the Hebrew Concordance, $18.00 in GOLD, or its equivalent in currency.

The price of the Englishman's Greek Concordance is $5.00—postage 50 cts. If spared another year, I hope to issue a critical Greek and English Concordance, pocket size, cheaper and better than the Englishman's Greek. Prof. Hudson has been at work on it for a year and a half past. H. L. HASTINGS.

HOW TO BE HAPPY.

Happy the man, and only he,
Who from repining ever free,
Enjoys the little he has got,
Unenvious of his neighbor's lot;
Who never sighs for empty state,
Nor impiously repines at fate
Because it has not made him great.

What tho' compelled to work and toil,
To turn a wheel, or turn the soil?
O'er books to kill his tedious hours,
Or range amid sweet fruits and flowers?
Or on the small or greater stage
Act the feigned king or real page?
'Tis from the heart that peace must flow,
Content is ever free from woe.

And he who in a cottage lies,
Find sleep as prone to kiss his eyes,
Enjoys a slumber as profound,
(And sweeter far 'tis often found)
Than he who, lull'd in pomp and state,
Sleeps in the chambers of the great:
'Tis not the pompous room or bed
Kills care or cures the aching head,
When virtue from the heart is fled.

Nor when the conscience is at rest,
Can poverty disturb the breast,
Unless, indeed, with frown severe,
Pale sickness and real want appear:
For if the plain and frugal board
A simple, wholesome meal afford,
Hunger will better sauce provide
Than for luxurious, pamper'd pride.

A cup of water can impart
More pleasure to the tranquil heart,
Than to the care-fill'd wealthy man
Or Burgundy or claret can.
Then to my prayer, O Heav'n, be kind—
Grant me a contented mind,
A grateful and an honest heart,
And riches where thou wilt impart;
The only boon I here implore,
Is just to live, I ask no more.

"MINISTRATION OF DEATH." "Ministration of the Spirit."—No. 6.

THE SABBATH AS AN INSTITUTION.

As an institution, the Sabbath consists of two parts; the Sabbath, or holy rest; and the day on which it is holden. The Lord "rested" on ONE seventh day; but he "blessed" the Sabbath as an institution. Hence the Sabbath as an institution is different from the day on which it is kept. Thus the Sabbath can be a perpetual institution, though the day be changed as often as it may be God's order to do so; and still the Sabbath, as an institution, remain the same. The seventh-day Sabbath was designed to commemorate the work of creation. But the work of redemption is greater than that of creation. And the first day can commemorate both—the work of creation and also of redemption. Why is the redemption greater? 1. The end of a work is greater than the work itself. 2. The display of God's wisdom in redemption by Jesus Christ was the end which he had in view in creating all things. Without the work of redemption, the work of creation would have been comparatively in vain. 3. The old creation, by its unceasing changes, continually decays and degenerates; while redemption, or the new creation, by its glorious change, becomes unceasingly brighter and better. 4. The old creation was a transitory work, made to be changed by fire; whereas the new will be of eternal duration. (See Isa. 65: 17, 18.) Thus we see that the work of redemption, or the new creation, is far greater in the eye of God than the first creation. Will the Lord have his church commemorate his greater work—redemption? If so, the seventh day cannot do it, as this can only commemorate the work of creation alone. But the FIRST DAY can commemorate both—creation and redemption.

Hence it is that the Sabbath as an institution is not abrogated, but changed in such a manner as to enlarge its usefulness and importance to mankind; and thus became a solemn memorial of two wonderful works instead of one. And hence the Sabbath itself, as an institution, is unchanged. And so the christian Sabbath returns every "seventh day," after six working days, and is a memorial of creation as well as of redemption. And be it remembered, that "the first day of the week" (Sabbaton), and NO OTHER, could possibly combine all these advantages.

In the 118th Psalm is a prediction that the day of Christ's resurrection was to be the day on which the Sabbath should be holden in the dispensation of the Spirit. In the 14th verse the Psalmist says,—"The Lord is my strength and song, and is become my salvation." When Christ arose from the dead this was accomplished. Because of this glorious event, it is said in verse 15th,—"The voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous"; or in the house of God. In verse 19th to the 24th, the Psalmist continues:—"Open to me the gates of righteousness, I will go into them." . . . "I will praise thee; for thou hast heard me, and become my salvation." And then he adds:—"THE STONE WHICH THE BUILDERS REFUSED IS BECOME THE HEAD STONE OF THE CORNER." (When? On the day when Christ was raised from the dead.) Hence David said,—"This is the Lord's doing: it is marvellous in our eyes. THIS IS THE DAY which the Lord hath made; WE WILL REJOICE AND BE GLAD IN IT." Here the Psalmist declares not only the joy and gladness of the christian church in the resurrection of Christ, but also in the day on which he arose from the dead, saying, "THIS IS THE DAY"—(the Lord's day, the christian Sabbath), "WHICH THE LORD HATH MADE." And well would it be for the cause of Christ if all would say,—"WE WILL REJOICE AND BE GLAD IN IT." That David here meant a day of public worship is plain, for it is a day on which the gates of righteousness were to be opened; and the righteous, or the church as a body, were to enter them, and on which the ministers of the gospel were to "bless them out of the house of the Lord," (verse 26); or in language adapted to the christian manner of worship,—in the house of the Lord. Dr. Watts has given a beautiful comment on this passage, in the following verses:—

"The work, O Lord, is thine,
And wondrous in our eyes;
This day declares it all divine,
This day did Jesus rise.

This is the glorious day
That our Redeemer made;
Let us rejoice, and sing, and pray,
LET ALL THE CHURCH BE GLAD."

CHRIST PLAINLY INDICATED THAT THE SEVENTH DAY SHOULD CEASE TO BE THE SABBATH AFTER HIS RESURRECTION. The disciples of John (Matt. 9: 14), came to him and inquired why his disciples did not fast, etc. Christ replied:—"Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the days will come when the bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast." He was taken from the children of the bride-chamber, that is, from his disciples. Throughout Saturday, or seventh-day, he lay in the tomb. On the first day of the week—the christian Sabbath—he was again restored to them. Hence this became a proper season of fasting to them while Christ was in the grave, just as he had said to them. The Sabbath was a festival from the beginning. (See "Nevin's Biblical Antiquities," vol. 2, pp. 162–3.) Such it will continue to be to the end. That it was to be such to the christian church, is proved by the passage from Isa. 56: 6, 7, which reads:—"Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer." The same is also proved by the express declaration just above quoted from the 118th Psalm. Fasting, therefore, on the first day, can never accord with the Sabbath's original and universal design. But on the seventh day, the day during which Christ lay in the grave, it was proper, as he informs us, that they should "fast," and this for the first time on that day. Hence, we see that the seventh day would soon cease to be a season suited to the observance of the Sabbath; as it must be obvious to the least reflective that this season of Christ's extreme humiliation is the most improper period for commemorating with joy and gladness the wonderful work of redemption. Rather than exultation in this period while Christ was in the grave, every thing must appear to the christian to demand mourning and humiliation. The enemies of Christ had prevailed against him, and the "serpent," according to the first prophecy ever given to this world concerning him, "bruised his heel"! On this memorable "seventh day" the disciples of Christ "mourned" in the most distressing manner; and they never appear to have regarded the seventh day afterwards as a joyful, holy, rest-day of God. But on the contrary, they transferred this festival to "THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK" (Sabbaton.) And this was not done without the Lord's sanction; for if it was, the apostles would have been guilty of disobedience to God in establishing an institution of their own—abolishing that of God, and instituting their own in its place!

A change from the law as written on tables of stone, to that as written on fleshly tables of the heart, is indicated by the fact that the first tables, made by the Lord himself (Ex. 32: 16), were broken and destroyed by Moses. But the second tables, containing the decalogue for the literal descendants of Abraham to keep, were made by Moses (Ex. 34: 1); according to the following express direction of the Lord:—"And the Lord said unto Moses, hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first: and I will write upon these tables the words that were in the first tables which thou brakest."

A CHANGE OF SABBATH POINTED OUT BY THE TYPES IN THE CEREMONIAL LAW.

The fourth commandment is the only one of the decalogue which designates time. But the Sabbath was contained in the law, and observed by God's people previous to the giving of the ten commandments from Mount Sinai; and this, as also the other nine commandments, were incorporated into the ceremonial and civil codes, and stood out there for the people's daily or weekly observance, the same as those which were found on the tables of stone, written by the finger of God. The Sabbaths of the ceremonial code, including the weekly Sabbath, pertained to the earthly inheritance—the land of Canaan. When that inheritance came to be trodden down of the Gentiles, as it was ever after their dispersion, so that the other Sabbaths could not be kept; the weekly Sabbath remained unaffected. This belonged to a higher order of institutions. The weekly Sabbath always pointed forward to the "eternal inheritance."

In a remarkably clear and impressive manner the apostle, in his letter to the Hebrews, points this out to us as found in his arguments in the fourth chapter. But before examining Paul's argument in this letter to the Hebrews, I will notice the fact that, in the Old Testament, the Hebrew word for "rest," or "rested," is not Shab–bahth (Sabbath); but it is Shah–vath (rest), which is the verb which signifies "rest;" and is found first in Gen. 2: 2, 3, where the Lord says, "he rested," and "he had rested." The word Shab–bahth (Sabbath) is not found in the book of Genesis; but is found for the first time in the Bible in Ex. 16: 23, and is translated "the holy Sabbath." The word Shah–bah–thohri, is the Hebrew word for the noun rest, and refers to the people, or to their land; when they or that were commanded to "rest," the same as it does where it refers to God's "rest." Now by turning to the New Testament, we shall find that the word translated "rest" (katapausis), in Hebrews 4th chapter, is a peculiar word, and is not often found in the New Testament. The first time it occurs is in Acts 7: 49, where it reads,—"What is the place of my rest?" In Heb. 3: 18, it reads,—"They shall not enter into my rest." In the fourth chapter, first, third, fifth, tenth and eleventh verses, this same word occurs, and is translated "rest"; and is called "his rest," "into rest," "my rest," "that rest." In this same chapter, and in the fourth, eighth and tenth verses, the verb katapaus occurs and is rendered "did rest," "had given rest," and "hath ceased."

Thus we see that Paul's reference to this "rest," as is spoken of in Hebrews 4: 1–11, is of important significance as regards the Sabbath. If the children of Israel had obeyed all the commandments of the Lord, then they would have become "a kingdom of priests" unto the Lord, and they would have found "rest" in the land of ancient Canaan; Joshua would have given them "rest." And thus, as God says, "If Joshua had (yes, if he had) given them rest, then would he not have spoken of another day. There remaineth therefore a rest (or keeping of a Sabbath, margin,) to the people of God." Now we are prepared for the tenth verse:—"For he (Christ) that is entered into his rest (katapausis), he also hath ceased (katapausis) from his own work, as God did from his"; when his (God's) "works were finished from the foundation of the world" (kosmos); as declared in the fourth commandment. What works did God then finish? Answer: All that belonged to the first world (or kosmos), which were for the benefit of the first Adam. How, and when did Christ "rest" from his works as God did from his? Ans. When he rose from the dead on the first day of the week; when every thing was finished on his part for the redemption of the world (kosmos). God made the kosmos; Christ redeemed it. Hence, Christ "rested" from all his work on the first day; as it could not be said that he rested when in the tomb, in the sense of this word; for this word "rest" applies to beings which have life and animation; and not to beings in a state of death.

CHRIST THUS SANCTIFIED THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK.

Some deny that "the first-day of the week" was ever "sanctified." But in Heb. 4: 10, we have the proof that it was sanctified. For it is there said:—"He (Christ) ALSO hath ceased from his own work, AS God did from his." How did God rest from his work? Answer: He sanctified the day on which he rested "BECAUSE that in it he HAD RESTED." Hence it follows that Christ must have sanctified the first day, "BECAUSE that in it he HAD RESTED"; or he could not have rested AS God rested, on a sanctified day, unless he had sanctified the first day, AS God had sanctified the seventh.

The word used to denote rest in sleep, or rest in death, is from anapano, as found in Matt. 26: 45,—"Sleep on now and take your rest"; and in Rev. 14: 13,—"That they may rest from their labors," etc. God "rested" from his work in the creation of the kosmos; Christ "rested" from his work in the redemption of the kosmos. And although the redemption of all things is not accomplished, yet the work on the part of Christ is "finished"; and "the purchased possession" (Eph. 1: 14), purchased by the "work" of Christ, we will wait for, "until the redemption" of it takes place, at "the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts 3: 21.

"Day ever bless'd,
Thy light, thy rest,
I hail with glad emotion;
Ordained for man,
When time began,
For solace and devotion.

Day more endeared
Since Christ appeared,
The Life and Resurrection.
That morning's rays
Shed o'er these days
His glory's bright reflection.

Day ever bless'd!
Type of the rest
That for the saints remaineth;
Happy is he
Who joys in thee,
And ne'er thy joys profaneth."

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER TWELVE.

To BRO. C.:—Dear Brother,—We will now introduce several more witnesses whose testimony will agree with those previously given as to the definiteness and instantaneousness of this work of grace, denominated by a variety of terms, viz: "perfect love," "full assurance of faith," "baptism of the Spirit," "gift of power," "sanctification," etc.

Rev. J. Benson says:—"I could do nothing but pray that I might be holy, even as he is holy. Every thing else appeared to be so insignificant as not to deserve a thought. O, how I long to speak of nothing else! . . . My soul was as it were let into God, and satiated with his goodness. He so strengthened my faith as to perfectly banish all my doubts and fears, and did devote my soul and body and health and strength to his glory and service. . . O, what a change hath God wrought in me! Glory be to God! I am indeed put in possession of a new nature. . . . Over and over again, with infinite sweetness, did I dedicate myself to God."

Rev. Asa Trent says:—"I have reason to believe that fifty-six years ago this month God took full possession of my heart, and filled me with pure love." He tells us that he lost the blessing by not professing it. After seven years of doubt and trial he obtained the blessing again, and forty-nine years after this restoration he writes: "I think I may say that for the last forty-nine years I have enjoyed this grace in a greater or less degree."

Mrs. Edwards, wife of President Edwards, in the year 1742, sought and obtained what she called the "full assurance of faith," and thus gives her experience:—"I cannot find language to express how certain the everlasting love of God appeared; the everlasting mountains and hills were but shadows to it. My safety and happiness and eternal enjoyment of God's immutable love seemed as durable and unchangeable as God himself. Melted and overcome by the sweetness of this assurance, I fell into a great flow of tears, and could no forbear weeping aloud. The presence of God was so near, and so real, that I seemed scarcely conscious of anything else. At night my soul seemed to be filled with an inexpressibly sweet and pure love to God, and to the children of God, which made me willing to lie on the earth at the feet of the servants of God, to declare his gracious dealings with me, and breathe forth before them my love and gratitude and praise. All night I continued in a constant, clear, and lively sense of the heavenly sweetness of Christ's excellent and transcendant love, of his nearness to me, and of my dearness to him, with an inexpressibly sweet calmness of soul in an entire rest in him. My soul remained in a heavenly elysium. I think what I felt each minute during the whole continuance was worth more than all the outward comfort and pleasure which I had enjoyed in my whole life put together. It was a pure delight which fed and satisfied my soul. It was a sweetness which my soul was lost in. In the house of God, so conscious was I of the joyful presence of the Holy Spirit, that I could scarcely refrain from leaping with transports of joy. My soul was filled, and overwhelmed with light and love, and joy in the Holy Ghost, and seemed just ready to go away from the body. . . . This exaltation of soul subsided into a heavenly calm, and a rest of soul in God, which was even sweeter than what preceded it. My mind remained so much in a similar frame for more than a week that I could never think of it without an inexpressible sweetness in my soul."

Such is the clear and glowing testimony of a Presbyterian lady more than a century ago. Would that we all had such.

Rev. E. Owen says:—"It is now six weeks since I consecrated my all to God. He accepted the offering. Glory to his name! From that time all has been peaceful and happy within. God has guided me in all matters in a way to astonish me. His hand appears in all that concerns me. His whole guidance can only be understood by those who enjoy like precious faith. My heart, my life, and my preaching have undergone a material change since the Lord brought me into this large place. I have a plenty of texts and sermons at hand; indeed every text to me seems like a sermon of itself. No language can describe my enjoyment for the six weeks past. My faith is unwavering. I can now endure as seeing Him who is invisible. It is no longer a theory with me that 'all things work together for good to them that love God.' With the apostle I can say, I 'know' this to be so. This is living in earnest. GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST! Amen!"

Lady M—— well enjoyed the blessing for nearly thirty years. She says:—"My God is to me a place of broad rivers, wide and deep. I rest in God. I dwell in him. Sinking into him I lose myself, and prove a life of fellowship with Deity so divinely sweet I would not relinquish it for a thousand worlds."

These extracts we have derived from a most excellent work entitled "Perfect Love, by J. A. Wood." Do they not inspire your heart with ardent desire for the attainment of the same grace? If such were the experience of all christians, how powerful would be their influence for good.

Eager for this I thirst, I pant;
So strong the principle divine
Carries me out with sweet constraint,
Till all I am is lost in Thine.

LOVE AND CHARITY ILLUSTRATED.

The Scriptures inform us that love is charity, and in a scriptural sense it is strictly so. But in a temporal sense, we may say that charity is the fruit of love. If the tree is good its fruit will be also; and the tree of grace, planted by God's omniscient hand, must stand as long as time shall last for the healing of the nations, until peace shall take place and harmony be restored throughout Christ's glorious kingdom. And if we would but now see this heaven-born love actuating every heart, how changed would be our condition from discord and anger to a state of gratitude and happiness.

The apostle John speaks of love thus: "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God, and every one that loveth is born of God, for God is love." And again saith Christ, "Herein may ye know ye are my disciples, if ye love one another." Dear reader, let us take heed to these passages of Scripture, and examine ourselves well by them, and see if we have this love dwelling in us, towards God, whose loving kindness and tender mercies are over all his works. O, may this love create in us an ardent desire and corresponding exertion to live soberly, godly and righteously in this present world, and lead peaceable and quiet lives in all godliness and honesty. And may we possess more enlarged conceptions of the character and love of our Savior. May his pure and spotless life be ever before us, as our pattern and guide, and assist us in cherishing that faith and love which shall be to us "the substance of things hoped for," and the hope towards God of a glorious resurrection to a blessed immortality of ransomed and redeemed souls, who will finally be heard saying, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him who sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."

Could such feelings of exquisite love pervade every heart, how pleasant and peaceful would be the state of society. Then how joyful will be the interchange of social feelings in households. How holy the morning sacrifice, as it rises from the consecrated altar of the family in united and heartfelt thanksgiving to God for his manifold blessings which he so richly bestows upon his dependent offspring; for "He openeth his hand liberally and satisfieth the wants of every living thing." And how eloquent and yet how humble will be the evening oblation in the acknowledgment of the never-ending goodness and love of our Creator, who is kind to the evil and unthankful, "who sendeth rain upon the evil and the good, and causeth the sun to shine upon the just and unjust;" and whose goodness knows no bounds. Hence we can see God is the fountain of love from whence all our blessings flow.

Now who can be so unthankful and wicked as not to strive for that essential love which flows from such a benevolent and holy Being? Dear reader, these lines I have set before you for your deep consideration, hoping they may make a suitable impression upon your mind to seek for that love which may secure to you your soul's salvation. Is it not worth seeking for? It is of heavenly origin; it flows from the fountain of God, and it will secure to all those who embrace it, a present salvation, and finally an eternal weight of glory in the kingdom of God, where peace and happiness shall reign throughout eternal ages. Then shall we not pray and seek for this heavenly gift while time shall last? "For behold the day cometh wherein no man can work." Let us look upon life as it is, and prepare to grapple with its stern realities.

We are placed here not to sleep and dream, but to act,—to do the great and holy work of humanity in trying to bring all ungodly wanderers into the fold of Christ. Then in a world beyond this our hope shall be more than realized. In this world the bitter is mingled with the sweet, and truth with falsehood; but in the world to come there will be nothing but transparent delight in praising our great and holy Redeemer, who is the author of that intrinsic love and charity which purifies the soul for his glorious and everlasting kingdom of peace and joy. IS IT SO?

Is it so, that the Psalmist in Ps. 105: 8, speaking of the word that He commanded to a thousand generations, had any reference to the ten commandment covenant? I think not, although it is often referred to, to prove that the ten commandments remain in full force now as ever, and will through all time. Let us look at its connection, and find out the truth. From the sixth to the eleventh verse: "O ye seed of Abraham, his servant, ye children of Jacob his chosen. He is the Lord our God; his judgments are in all the earth. He hath remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations. Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac, and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant, saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance."

This language plainly shows that the Psalmist had no reference to the ten-commandment covenant at all, but to a covenant that God made with Abraham when as yet he had no child. See Gen. 15: 18. "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates." We find this same covenant spoken of in 1 Chron. 16: 13–18.

Again, in Ps. 89: 34, is that the ten commandment covenant referred to? I think not. It reads: "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips." It is said by some, and teachers of God's word, that these passages of Scripture have a direct reference to the moral law of God, or the ten commandments as given by God on Mount Sinai. But is it so? I think not. Let us read the third and fourth verses, and all will be plain. "I have made a covenant with my chosen. I have sworn unto David my servant, Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations." The 20th and 21st verses read,—"I have found David my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him; with whom my hand shall be established; mine arm also shall strengthen him." Thirty-fourth to thirty-seventh,—"My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me."

This language is too plain to be misunderstood and mixed up with the covenant that God made with Israel on Mount Sinai; yet it is brought to me as a positive proof of the perpetuity of that law. But is it so? I think not. If we rightly divide the word, we will keep them separate, and not confound them; for they are three distinct covenants, and should be understood as such.

Exeter, R. I. EDWIN R. WOOD.

THE DIVINE RESPONSE.

In the darkness will I prove thee,
Hide the love wherewith I love thee,
Lead thee with an unseen hand
Through this dreary, desert land.

Canst thou trust the Lord that bought thee,
And with loving kindness sought thee?
I, who called thee by thy name,
I, the Lord, am still the same.

I have seen thy prayers and weeping;
Faithful record I am keeping;
Only to the end endure,
Thou shalt find the promise sure.

I am He who lives forever;
Who from thee my love shall sever?
Not in wrath, my pilgrim child,
I permit this tempest wild.

Thou shalt know, when thus I've proved thee,
All the love wherewith I loved thee;
In the fields of Eden see
Light and joy were sown for thee.

ABSORBING DEVOTION TO DRESS.

"Timothy Titcomb," in his letter to "Mrs. Royal Purple Jones," thus handsomely takes off the prevailing devotion to fashion on the part of the feminine portion of the community:—

You will see, therefore, that whenever fashion carries dress to extremes, or beyond the point of giving the body a graceful and becoming covering, it always resorts to barbarism to help it out—to partial nakedness, or to jewels and precious stones, and trinkets, and ribbons, and laces, and all possible sorts of ornaments. The fashionable belle of Newport and Saratoga enters the assembly room or the dining hall only to show that she is a sister of the South Sea Islander, and that the same idea controls them both. The sense of personal modesty and dignity which flies to dress for refuge has really no place in you.

You, madam, and all your associates, have, in your devotion to dressing and bedizening of your persons, degraded yourselves pitifully. The whole number of fashionable female souls are but slaves to the fading bodies in which they live. When I look in upon a fashionable watering-place, and see how dress and personal adornment absolutely monopolize the time and the thought of the fashionable women assembled there, when I witness the rivalry among them, the attempts to outshine each other in diamonds and all the tributaries to costly dress, when I see their jealousies, and hear their ill-natured criticisms of each other, and then realize that these women are mothers, and those of whom mothers will be made, I have opened to me a gulf of barbarous selfishness—a scene of gilded meanness and misery from which I shrink back heart-sick and disgusted. Good heaven, madam! what and who are you? Are you all body and no soul. . . . Do you realize how low you have fallen? Do you realize that you are come to the small and indecent business of getting up your person to be looked at, admired, praised; that the most grateful satisfactions of your life are found in this business, and that the business itself is but a single moral remove from prostitution?

Will you look among your fashionable female acquaintances, and find one who is making any intellectual progress? The thing is impossible. The mind that engages in no higher business, or that finds its highest delight in no higher pursuit than that of grooming and displaying a beautiful body, can make no process into a nobler life.

It cannot be otherwise, and I cannot conceive of a type of selfishness more nearly perfect than that which the character of almost any fashionable woman illustrates.

Madam, I look anywhere in God's world for genuine refinement and lady-like instincts and manners rather than to fashionable society. True refinement and gentle manners can never find their home in any society in which selfishness reigns. True refinement has brains. True refinement has a heart. True refinement always makes room in the world for others. True refinement has a consideration for others. True refinement does not find its satisfactions in the display and adornment of body. True refinement refuses to be governed by fashion, having within itself a higher and a purer law. . . . Yet mark the impudent hypocrisy of the thing. You and your set assume to be leaders of society—the ton—the pattern women of the nation—so far refined that other women are counted vulgar. How can you help becoming low when you have thought of nothing for years but your own person? You are vulgar. Your rivals and associates are vulgar, as those of the horse-jockey. You degrade yourself to the position of a showy creature, good for nothing but to spend money. You teach men contempt for your sex, and it is only the modest and intelligent women whom you despise that redeem it to admiration and love.—The Sybil.

A HAPPY MARRIED LIFE.

When Robert Newton, the Wesleyan pulpit orator, married, he and his bride began the married life by retiring twice each day to pray with and for each other. This practice they kept up, when opportunity served, to the end of life. Mark the result! When an old man, Mr. Newton remarked: "In the course of a short time, my wife and I shall celebrate the jubilee of our marriage; and I know not that, during the fifty years of our union, an unkind look or an unkind word has ever passed between us."

That was certainly a happy married life. What made it so? No doubt strong mutual affection, congeniality of tastes, habits, and pursuits had much to do with it; but did not religion have more? Did not that hour of daily prayer make the bond of peace so strong that none of the manifold trials of a long public life could even strain it? Had religion been stricken from their lives, would not pride, vanity or passion have grown into a power of discord in their hearts? Did such absolute peace ever reign over the married life of any irreligious pair for half a century since the fall? Does it reign over the reader's married life? Is not the religious element needed in his married life to render it even tolerable? Consider the claims of religion, my reader, and from this stand-point, and you will conclude that religion is needful, not only for your present and eternal happiness, but also for your domestic enjoyment.—Ladies' Repository.

UNLEAVENED BREAD.

The following is extracted from a lecture of Dr. J. C. Jackson, before his patients at "Our Home," in Dansville, N. Y.

"In the first place a great error is committed, and by it a great evil is set at work, in the separation of the bran from the flour. Chemistry in its later researches has demonstrated this beyond all question. It is said that one constituent element which the grain contains in its natural state, and which is very necessary to the sustenance and healthy condition of the brain and nervous system at large, is contained altogether in the bran, or in that part of it which modern cookery refuses to use. That constituent is Phosphorus.

Now if it be true that the brain and nerves, in proportion to their whole bulk, contain more of phosphorus than any other structures of the body; and if it be admitted that the natural and legimate method of furnishing this to them is through the food, and not through any process of introduction of it into the circulation by giving it as a medicine pure and simple, (which is the way many doctors have of administering preparations of iron, potash and soda and common salt) then the folly of so preparing wheat for food as to take away from it that portion of its substance which alone contains phosphorus can be readily understood. I am disposed to believe that one reason why persons who work much with the brain think it necessary to stimulants and excitants to the nervous system in order to keep up their nervous energy is, that their staple articles of food, amongst which are bread and flesh meats, do not, as they have them cooked and eat them, contain a sufficient amount of phosphorus to keep them sufficiently energized. Lacking this, they feel compelled, under a sense of nervous debility, to resort to unnatural vital excitants. My justification for such surmise is found within the limits of my own observation as exhibited in my professional practice. I have noticed that old meat eaters, tea and coffee drinkers, pork eaters, tobacco chewers, spirituous liquor drinkers, or opium eaters, who, under the use of one or more of these excitants to the nervous system, have come at last to find little or no service from them in rousing up the nervous energy necessary to enable them to think or to execute thought, or to work with their bodies vigorously and successfully, and who, upon coming into our hands for treatment, show great debility of brain and of body, generally rally better upon a diet consisting of unleavened bread and Graham pudding, eaten with a moderate quantity of good cows' milk and some subacid fruit, than upon any other kind or kinds of food that we can furnish. In many instances, where such depravation of the system exists as to show great debility of the assimilative or blood making organs, the person having become very thin and skeleton-looking, with corresponding loss of mental energy, a change of diet, such as I have described, together with other hygienic agencies in combination, has worked most marvelous effects.

The majority of our patients since we came upon this hillside have been persons who, amongst other morbid conditions which they showed, have manifested loss of flesh and diminution in weight. This particular symptom has uniformly been one to which their own attention has been specially directed, and which they have tried, by every expedient, to change for the better. In no way have they tried it more than in and through the use of stimulating and exciting foods, drinks, and medicines, of which the chief has been flesh meats, alcoholic liquors, and various preparations of iron. While, under the persistent use of these, they have failed to gain flesh and strength, but, in most instances, have continued to lose it, upon being put under our regimen, their food consisting largely of unleavened bread, and Graham pudding with a little milk, and only the moderate use of fruit and vegetables, they have, sooner or later, overcome the tendency to loss of flesh, and have gained in weight, bodily strength and mental vigor, and have gone home more than satisfied with their progress.

We are laughed at as 'bran-bread eaters.' But I say 'let those laugh who win.' So long as such results follow the use of bread made out of unbolted flour of wheat, I may be excused for advocating its use, and deprecating the habit common with our people of separating the bran from the flour and giving it to the pigs. . . .

A French physician, whose name at this moment has gone from me, has stated, within a year, I think, that the most inveterate case of dyspepsia connected with piles which he had ever known, had been cured by putting the patient upon a food of which bran of wheat was a large constituent.

I have somewhere read of a German physician who says that one of the best remedies he ever tried for arthritic rheumatism was an infusion made by pouring boiling water upon wheat bran, then stirring it, letting it stand until cool, and then have the patient drink largely of it. I know, from my own experience, that one of the very best re-agents to that condition of the bowels termed chronic diarrhea is a gruel made of wheat bran and soft water, strained through a fine cloth and drank largely.

I do not wish to make out of wheat bran more than it is entitled to. But when I remember the thousands and thousands of persons who have applied to me, either by letter or in person, to assist them in overcoming unconquerable constipation of the bowels, and morbid conditions immediately consequent thereupon, declaring they had tried everything almost for their relief, and it had amounted to nothing, and who, by accepting it at my hands, such a course of treatment as I have prescribed, including as it always does the use of unbolted wheat meal bread, and of Graham pudding or Graham gruel, and have thereby been cured, some in two or three days, some in weeks, and almost all of them in the course of a few months, I do not think I over press the matter of injury to our people from the use of bread made of bolted wheat flour, or the benefits that would result to them from the use of bread made of unbolted wheat flour."

TOTAL ABSTINENCE THE ONLY SAFE DOCTRINE.

A friend was speaking to me on moderation; he said there were various grades in the use of drink, as is in other things,—as in the use of money there is prodigality, economy, and avarice,—and said they answered to drunkenness, moderation, and total abstinence; and that, as the moderate use of money was preferable either to prodigality or avarice, therefore moderation was preferable to drunkenness or total abstinence; but I contend that the things compared are quite different. Avarice is a sin; total abstinence is not, but is free to every man; there is evil produced by avarice, and none by total abstinence. The man who can rule this creature alcohol, and keep it in subservience to his will, is Blondin-like. Blondin on his giddy rope is far higher than the crowd below; but there have been such things as broken limbs resulting from the imitation of his marvels. If the world were made moderate, total abstinence societies would be glad to close to-night; but temperate worlds are in Utopia now. Experience has proved that, so long as alcohol is used, it must be followed by all the evils of drunkenness. Total abstinence is a practical and useful remedy; and a world of total abstainers would be a thousand-fold happier and better than a world of moderate drinkers and drunkards.

It is estimated that there are at least 600,000 confirmed drunkards in England, and in a few years five hundred thousand graves will close over their dishonored dust; and a startling question arises, "Who are to fill their places?" The answer is more startling still: "500,000 moderate drinkers will be drafted into their position!"

The inebriate's appetite never dies. True, total abstinence may cause it to slumber, and as the duration of abstinence increases, the slumber deepens; but while the reclaimed one is in the body it never dies. It is the man's weak point; Satan cherishes it there, in the fond hope that at some distant day the man, yielding to the invitations of mistaken friends, will take a little; then Satan laughs; stirs up the awakened appetite, and lashes it into a fury a hundred-fold more furious than before; and ere there is time to think, the man is swept into the world of spirits. We have the testimony of the reclaimed. "A thimbleful of spirits would convert me into a demon," says one. Another says, "I shall, if pressed to take a single drop, produce the page whereon my resolution is recorded, and if still enticed, I shall look upon that person in the light of an infernal fiend." John B. Gough says he dare not with safety touch one glass of wine.

QUANTITY AND WASTE OF FOOD.

Before you take the first mouthful, place upon your plate all you are to eat, and eat but twice a day. This rule accomplishes all that the practice of weighing our food does, for soon the eye can determine, with all needed accuracy, the quantity, and without the display of a pair of scales. It is better than the rule of Dr. Johnson and others, which I have given, namely: watching while you are eating, for the first indications of having enough; for, as I have shown, it is almost impossible for a dyspeptic, with his morbid appetite, to watch, or halt when he does discover that the food fails to give the intense gratification of the first moment—this is the great difficulty—to use calm judgment and moral firmness in the midst of the absorbing pleasures of a delicious meal. I am free to confess I have rarely done it, and I think I may, without harsh judgment, say I do not know half a dozen persons who can.

Few spectacles are more painful than the struggles often seen among the poor to keep their table supplied with the "best in the market." Foregoing books, periodicals, a good house, good clothes, the healthful luxury of a summer trip, etc., they devote everything to supplying their table. They are ashamed to be seen eating plain, cheap food; not ashamed to live in a poor house, to wear insufficient clothing, to have no library, to have no pew in church, to have nothing and be nothing, if only their table is well supplied. I declare it is a low, vulgar ambition—pride on the lowest plane of life.—Dio Lewis.

RECIPE.

For extra good brown bread, for one loaf, one pint of sour milk, one pint of unbolted rye or wheat meal, one pint of Indian meal, one teacup full of molasses, one tea spoonful of saleratus, one of salt; put the batter in a two quart tin pail with the lid on, put into a kettle or pot, and steam five hours. This will be double extra bread, worth more per pound than sponge cake, and better for health. Try it, and give the credit to an old miller.

P. S. Do not have the water only half way up the pail, to prevent its boiling over the top of the bread. HIRAM MUNGER.

WEARING SPECTACLES.—Persons living in cities begin to wear glasses earlier than country people, from the want of opportunities of looking at a distance. Those who wish to put off the evil day of spectacles, should accustom themselves to long views. The eye is always relieved and sees better, if, after reading awhile, we direct the sight to some far distant object, even for a minute. Great travelers and hunters are seldom near-sighted. Humboldt at eighty-seven could read unaided. Sailors discern objects at a considerable distance with distinctness, when a common eye sees nothing at all.

KEEP THE FEET AND HANDS WARM.—Dr. Dio Lewis advises that the feet and hands be kept warm and comfortable, whatever amount of clothing be required for it. This done, the headache, sore throat, indigestion, congestion of liver, and palpitation of the heart, will be soon abated or altogether avoided.

BURNS.—Dip the affected part in cold water, then into common wheat flour, and so on alternately, until a thick coating is formed so as to exclude the air, then bind tight with a cloth and wet with cold water.

"IT IS I, BE NOT AFRAID."

How sweet and sublime is the lesson
That's taught us by Christ in the word;
It teaches us faith and submission,
And patience and trust in the Lord.

Tho' dark seems the pathway before us,
And clouds of adversity lower,
If we but have faith, he will shield us
By his omnipotent power.

When sorest the hand of affliction
On the heads of his people is laid,
The sweet words of Jesus sustain them,—
It is I, be thou not afraid.

Their heart's dearest treasures are taken,
And tearfully laid 'neath the sod;
But faith that is pure and unshaken,
Will secure them the blessings of God.

The Lord does not willingly wound them,
But thus is his power displayed;
His arm is thrown lovingly round them,
And his voice whispers, "Be not afraid."

The dark waves of trouble and sorrow
Will break and pass harmlessly o'er,
If we'll but trust in the Savior,
And keep the eye fixed on the shore.

When life's fitful scenes are closing,
While eagerly longing for rest,
True faith in Jesus reposing,
Will secure us a home with the blest.

For the World's Crisis.

"THE SPIRIT SHALL RETURN TO GOD."—Eccl. 12: 7.

The claim may be set up that thus far our argument applies only to the thief in a resurrected state, and it was his spirit that was with Christ in paradise on the day he died. We are not done with that "thief" yet; for if we "let him thus alone," some man will have him "in paradise" before the day is ended, before he is dead even, before he is freed from sin, for "he that is dead is freed from sin."—Rom. 6: 7. We hope to make such a "finish of him" before we leave him, that none of "his friends" will ever think of becoming "thieves and robbers" by "climbing up some other way" than that of "entering in by the door."—Jno. 10: 1, 2, 7, 9, 10.

Now there is but one way into paradise, and that is the way the Master traveled; and there is but one door by which we can enter; and but one key to that door; and it can not be opened except by an order from the Master; and when opened, no man can shut it. The way is the path of life; the door is the resurrection; the key is the key of David. Now Christ is the way, the door, the life, and the resurrection; and he is so because HE has the key of DAVID—the key of the grave and of death; and that "key of David" is the "Spirit" or "mighty power" of the living God the Father, which he gave unto his Son Jesus Christ our Lord.—Rev. 3: 7, 8, and 1: 18; Eph. 1: 19; Jno. 5: 26. Let us "strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many . . . will seek . . . and shall not be able."—Luke 13: 24. We cannot well refrain from observing here that, if "Death be the GATE to endless joys," and Christ has the key, our "coming out" at that gate will depend altogether upon his unlocking it; and if he should think proper to not open it until he "comes again" and we have a resurrection, then LIFE, and not death, may prove to be the "door" to "eternal salvation," if not to "endless joys."

Now if the thief was with Christ in paradise on the day of crucifixion, it must have been in some other locality than that of heaven; for three days after he told Mary that he had not yet been to the Father; consequently, had not been in heaven; for "going into heaven," and "ascending or going to the Father," are used as synonymous terms all through the gospels and epistles. Therefore heaven and paradise are not one and the same place, if so be that the thief was with Christ that day in paradise, because Christ was not that day in heaven. If, then, he was with Christ in paradise that day after he died, then paradise must be in the heart of the earth; "for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so" was "the Son of man"—Christ—to "be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. 12: 40); and if they were there together, one thing is certain; neither of them was very miserable, or very happy, for each of them had to die before being placed there, and "the dead know—not anything." And we are certain that their spirit, soul or life, was not there; for when Christ was expiring on the cross, he said, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."—Luke 23: 46. And when "the dust" shall "return to the earth," or the body dies, then "the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."—Eccl. 12: 7. Thus, by the word of God, that liveth and abideth for ever, we KNOW that the spirit of Christ did go to the Father when Christ died, and yet he truly told Mary that he himself did not go there. These facts—and none can successfully deny that they are FACTS who admit the Bible for inspired testimony—cut off, cut out, and cut away any chance, any place for, and every vestige of an "intermediate state" to all who make spirit and soul synonymous; for we have proved, if Bible can prove anything, that for three days and nights from and after Christ's death, his "dead body" was in the "heart of the earth," tomb or grave; that when he returned to earth, or died, his spirit went to God, to the Father; and we have shown that heaven could not have been paradise, for Christ said he had not been in heaven, and to the above class, the only remaining place for paradise would be the grave, where, if both were there, they would be unconsciously blissful.

But there is another class who make man a compound "trinity" of body, spirit and soul; and such may admit the foregoing, but claim that his soul was with that of the thief, and cite Acts 2: 27 in proof:—"Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." To them we might reply by saying that if hell be paradise, then should we very much doubt its being a "state of blissful enjoyment" any more than slavery, even though it should be proved to be a "divine institution." But we will not thus reply, knowing that the term "hell" is not used for "a place of misery or of happiness," but simply signifies here "the grave"; and the word soul is here used in place of the pronoun me, or a synonym of "person," or "my body." The verse might properly read thus:—"Thou wilt not leave me in the grave; neither wilt thou permit thine Holy One to putrify"; and the 31st verse thus:—"David, understanding this previously, in speaking of the resurrection of Christ," said, that "he was not left in the tomb, nor did his flesh become putrid." The Jews held that putrefaction did not begin until the fourth day after decease, but on that day decomposition did begin. See the case of Lazarus. Jno. 11: 39. These opinions might possibly have had their origin in these prophecies concerning Christ; for as Paul says, Rom. 8: 34, "It is CHRIST that died, yea, rather, that is risen again"; thus whatever died was Christ; whatever rose again was whatever died; and that which died was that which was not "left in hell"; and that which rose again was that which did not "see corruption." Now if any one can believe that that was "in paradise," as a blissful state of enjoyment, why, let him believe it. For in the preceding we discover that the words "my soul," in the first member of the sentence, and "thine Holy One," of the second member, are both ONE, and refer to that which was born of the virgin Mary, agonized in the garden, was condemned under Pilate and Herod, crucified, "was dead" and interred, but was restored to life by the "mighty power of God" the Father, (Eph. 1: 19; 1 Cor. 8: 6), rose again from the dead, is now alive, and liveth forevermore; and that was and is and ever will be CHRIST." Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, . . to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen." Rev. 1: 5. G. W. STETSON.

TARES AND WHEAT.

Perhaps no one thing in the Bible has caused more speculation than this. Some claim it applies to the church; that bad and good members in the church must and will be there until the end of the world; and the bad are not of the kind, many times, that the church can allege sufficient against to discipline; still most of the members are well satisfied they ought to be expelled from their communion; but, for fear, if they undertake the job of trying them, they might in the end disturb and root out some of the wheat, they conclude to run the risk of letting both grow together till the end of the world; when, in fact, Christ has given us the most plain rules how to treat offending members, so as to rid the body of Christ of every dead branch at once, and not let the tares be in the way of the wheat, or worthy members of the church.

Now it can be seen that the church is not the place in which Christ meant us to understand the wheat and tares were to grow. He tells us, "the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one." The plain, simple meaning, to my mind is this: the righteous and the wicked are to dwell together in this field, or world, till the harvest; and never let the righteous undertake to exterminate the wicked out of the field; that is not our work. If we take the sword, we shall perish with it, or by it. Our duty, as christians, is to let both classes dwell on the earth, let what will come, until the great harvest day, which is the end of the world.

These instructions were for God's children only. Our duty in this parable is plain. We are to let alone entirely, this work of killing out the tares, or children of the wicked one. If wicked men are disposed to destroy one another, let them work at it; if we undertake the work, we shall be likely to strike a blow in our rage and ambition, that will kill some of the wheat, as both kinds are mixed together in their growth in this field. We are to let alone entirely the work of death. Christ, in the end of the world, will send forth his angels to gather out of his kingdom, or field, or floor, all the tares, and cast them into a lake of fire. Let it be remembered, the angels do not this work when Christ comes; then he sends the angels only to gather the elect; but at the end of the world he sends forth the angels to gather the tares to burn them. John puts the end of the world at the end of the thousand years. At the end of this age, he will send forth his angels to gather the wicked. The number is as the sand of the sea, all the tares that are growing, all that are in the sea, all that are in the grave, will stand in life to be judged, and hear their doom. All that have not their names written in the book of life are to be cast "into the lake of fire," "which is the second death." John says, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first . . . were past away." All can see the angels do not gather the wicked till the time comes to burn them, at the end of this old world, at the end of the thousand years, after Christ comes. All that believe that the thousand years are in the future, believe that the wicked will not rise till the end of the thousand years.

God has got an order, and if we follow it, it will look right. This world is to go on a thousand years after Christ comes. To put the thousand years in the past would suppose the final judgment in the past, and the new earth would have been due a long time ago; but no, it is before us; and its bounds fixed by the two resurrections, righteous and wicked.

Paul had his eye fixed on this time, when he said Christ will reign till the last enemy is destroyed, which is death. Paul does not give us the number of years of this reign, but John does. Paul and John terminate the reign at the same time, by the casting of death into the lake of fire, at the end of the thousand years. Then all the tares will be burned to ashes.

O what a day is before us! I feel it, and that I must help tell the story of the end of the Gentile age, staring us full in the face. A short time more, and our work will be done. The throbbing hearts throughout all Christendom say Christ will come. It must be so. O it must. My inmost struggle is increasing for a perfect readiness. Brethren and sisters, all wake up. I beg of you, wake up. Who is on the Lord's side? who? Sinners can be saved just as well as ever. O, arouse!

THE TWO WITNESSES.

In Rev. 11, we have an account of two witnesses, of which much has been written and many conflicting opinions advanced. Some suppose them to be the Old Testament and the New; some, two manner of religious sects or people, etc. Dr. Cumming takes the position that they are "two lines of witnesses protesting against the Papacy; the Paulicians in the east, and another line, terminating in the Waldenses in the west." But it is difficult to see how they are two, as, according to his own account of them, they were one in their united protestation of the Papacy. Moreover, he says of the two candlesticks, that a candlestick, in the Apocalypse, always means a church. If so, in the Apocalypse it must mean the church of Christ, and that is but one, having but one head and one body.

Again, he says: "The word witness is the translation of a Greek word martos, which Greek word is the parent of our common word "martyr." And again, "The word martos occurs in the Bible exactly thirty-four times. In thirty-three of these it means a person. Why change its meaning in the thirty-fourth?"

In every case he affirms it means a person. We will take him at his word, and the two witnesses are two persons. They are also called "two prophets"; and as prophets are also persons, they are two persons that preach or foretell events. Now it is very possible that God may yet raise up two men to fulfill this wonderful prophecy; and if the time is sufficiently future, two such men may yet be born, or two that are now living among us may be inspired of God to do the work. But whoever they may be, they are to die martyrs at Jesusalem. This, we say, is very possible; but it is much more probable that they will be two of the old prophets. And since "it is appointed unto man once to die," it must be two that have not died. And of all the prophets of olden times, there are but just two who have not died. They are Enoch and Elijah.

But some will say, It cannot be these, for they have been translated and are immortal. But translation does not imply immortality; aud much as has been said of their immortality, not a shadow of proof of it is found in the Scriptures; it is all in the vain imaginations of men. But it is distinctly stated in the Scriptures that there is no other name known in heaven or among men, whereby we can be saved [or have life—Syriac]; and that name is Christ, the Messiah. If Enoch and Elijah obtained immortality when translated, they did not obtain it of this name: for even Christ himself cannot give that which he does not possess, and he did not possess immortality until he died and rose again, and he is the first of earthly beings that ever did possess it. But if we say that God the Father gave these prophets immortality when he translated them, then indeed we have found another name in heaven, if not among men, whereby we can be saved. But since there is no other name, Enoch and Elijah are as much dependent on that name for immortality as a Paul and Silas. To say that God can do, is no argument in any case, for no christian can dispute the omnipotent power of God; but all christians ought to know that he will not do the work he has given to his Son to do, especially as his Son does all things to please him, and he has said, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."—Matt. 17: 5. Therefore, to say that God can do, is a kind of resort, used only in the absence of all proof.

In a former article, we have shown that death is the end of life, and that two lives cannot be enjoyed or possessed at the same time. The first life is mortal, and must end before immortal life begins; but the time between the end of one and the beginning of the other, in some cases, is thousands of years, in others, at the coming of Christ, the time is reduced to "the twinkling of an eye," yet it is still the end of one life and the beginning of another, and the end of life is death. Enoch and Elijah were the sons of Adam, and born mortals; if they are now immortal, they have lost their mortal lives, and must have died, for the end of mortal life is death. But if they are not dead, they must die prior to obtaining immortality, else why should they be more highly favored than the Son of man himself, who died and rose again to immortality? They were two sanctified ones, set apart for a specific work, the whole of which could not have been done in the usual lifetime of man; they were, therefore, translated that they might not then see death, but should live until the time came to finish it up. . . .

That Elijah will come again before the great and dreadful day of the Lord, we have positive proof. Mal. 4: 5. And Christ tells us he will "restore all things." Matt. 17: 11.—Millennial Harbinger.

THE IFF MAN, OR THE MAN OF IFFS.

"If I have done wrong." "If I"—stop, friend, stop; take back that "if." Ifs wont do in your case; its too glaring, too prominent, too barefaced, open to the mid-day sun. Your offences are public, read and known of all men, have gone forth to the world. Satan rejoices, wicked men and devils rejoice at your inconsistent, unchristian course. You have openly marred the peace of Jerusalem, done despite to the word of grace, said and done things grievously offensive. You have deeply grieved the hearts of God's little ones, the Holy Spirit also, dishonored God and his cause in taking sides with wicked, conservative men, in opposition to freedom, justice, mercy and truth—and now, forsooth, with all these known facts staring you full in the face, written upon your frontlets in dark capitals, you have the impudent assurance to stand up in a public audience and say, "If I have offended any one; if I have said or done so and so, I wish to be told of it. Perhaps I may have inadvertently erred a little, but—but"—Stop, stop; these "buts," these "ifs," and this "perhaps" of yours, are an insult, open, bare-faced, adding sin to sin, bringing you lower and lower in the estimation of every wise and impartial witness. Why not be honest, confess your sins at once, on the bended knees of penitent humility; go to the very bottom of your heart, search the secret recesses of your inmost soul, state facts, one by one, till the whole catalogue of confession is gone over, with eyes bedewed, with tears penitential, making, meanwhile, all the restitution possible. In this way, and only in this way, is there hope of restoring confidence, regaining your lost reputation for christian probity and integrity.

These "ifs" and 'perhaps," while guilt rests upon your head, are a stench, a hissing, a gangrene, a by-word; they fall gratingly upon the ears of every one who knows the desperation of your case. Something more than mere ifs, may bes, and perhapses, are required of a church-member that has pursued the unrighteous course you have, yielded to the tempter, fallen into grievous errors, taken sides with the enemy of all righteousness, denied the Lord that bought him, in the persons of his oppressed and persecuted ones, scattered widely the seeds of discord, caused seeds of bitterness to spring up, by which very many are defiled. Yet there is hope, even in your case, if honest in your confession and restitution. God is very merciful, even blood-guilty sins can be washed away in that fountain open for sin and uncleanness. "If we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Beloved editor, the "if" men, or men of "ifs," is not a supposed or imaginary being. The guilty one stands before us: "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper."

THE DEATH PENALTY.

"The wages of sin is death."—Rom. 6: 23.

What death? Not temporal death, for the sinless infant and the holy saint just as really die that death as the impenitent. Not spiritual death,—a death in "trespasses and sin, for that is the very thing that renders man deserving of punishment, instead of being the punishment itself. The penalty death is not visited upon the sinner in this life, nor at the close of this life. The execution of the penalty cannot precede the judgment. Said Christ, "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him [not in this life, nor at death, but] in the last day." (John 12: 48). Paul presents the fact that "it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." (Heb. 9: 27). First: the penalty death cannot precede the judgment, and secondly, the judgment is "after" death, and "in the last day;" thus agreeing with Peter's opinion, that God will "reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished" (2 Pet. 2: 9); consequently, the penalty death is not inflicted upon the sinner either in this life, nor in temporal death, but beyond it, when "they that have done evil [shall come forth] to the resurrection of damnation." (John 5: 29). The penalty death,—the death to be inflicted "in the last day,"—is denominated the "second death," in contradistinction to a preceding death. The "second death' must be the second infliction of a death of the same order of itself, otherwise it would be the first death of this kind, and the first death of that kind,—no second about it. The Bible mentions two kinds of death,—literal death and spiritual death, a death in "trespasses and sins,"—and theologians mention a third kind of death, namely, a "death that never dies" by which they mean eternal torment. Hence the "second death" must be the second infliction of one of these kinds of death. Let us examine the three kinds, beginning with the last one mentioned:

1. If the penalty death signifies eternal misery, then, inasmuch as the penalty death is styled the "second death," it follows that it is the second eternal misery! Then when and where was the first eternal misery inflicted? For a "second" presupposes a first. This would prove two editions of eternal misery; and furthermore, as the second edition must succeed the first, if the first is endless in duration, it leaves no room for the second; if the first is not endless, then the second will not be. Here the endless misery system can neither back out or go forward. Two editions of endless misery, the second not beginning till the first is over, and yet nobody can find the first, and if it could be found, it would last so long that it would never allow the second to begin!!!

2. If the penalty death signifies a spiritual death, a death in "trespasses and sins," then inasmuch as the penalty death is styled the second death, there must be an end of the first death of this kind before there can be a second infliction of it; and when the first death in "trespasses and sins" is ended, the man is free from sin, is no longer a sinner; hence, will not be punished. God will not punish a man that is free from "trespasses and sins." He will not make them dead in "trespasses and sins" a second time, or make them sinners again, after they are liberated from a death in trespasses and sins.

3. If the penalty death is literal death, then inasmuch as the penalty death is styled the "second death," it must be the second infliction of literal death upon the sinner. Saint and sinner alike die the first death, and are alike liberated from it; but over the saint "the second death hath no power" while the sinner must die the "second death." All are made to live again at the judgment day, to be judged; but saints will die no more, while sinners, then judged obnoxious to the wrath of God, will die the second death; and thenceforward "shall never see life," but abide beneath the irrevocable stroke of the penalty death.—W. SHELDON.—Voice of the West.

LABOR IS WORSHIP.

Labor is worship; toil is devotion;
Order is heaven's perpetual law;
Work is our lot, on the land or the ocean;
Man independent, the world never saw.

Such is the genius of social relation,
Sloth is rebellion, and idleness crime;
God is demanding, through all his creation,
Diligence, industry, right use of time.

WHO HAVE MERCY, AND WHO ARE HARDENED.

"For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion upon whom I will have compassion. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy." "Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth." Rom. 9: 15, 16, 18.

The Scriptures plainly show the character of the persons on whom the Lord will have mercy and compassion. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon."—Isa. 54: 7. "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy."—Prov. 28: 13. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. 11: 28. "God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation, he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." Acts 10: 34, 35. If language can express anything, it leaves no possible doubt respecting the persons on whom the Lord will have mercy and compassion.

The sixteenth verse in the passages shows that "willing" and "running" are not the causes of salvation, but the conditions on which it is received. A brief comparison will explain the subject. Suppose a man of wealth should prepare a table with plenty of wholesome food, and then give the information to a number of starving persons, who have not, and are not able to procure food, that if they will eat they may have as much as they need, for nothing. It is, therefore, certain that neither their willingness to eat, nor their eating, procures or pays for the provisions; yet both the willingness and the eating are necessary conditions, but the food is of the wealthy man who shows mercy. It is also evident that, if those persons starve, it is their own fault. So all the provisions of the gospel were made for the race before they came into the world, on conditions of faith and obedience, or of willing and running; and although both of these together cannot merit salvation, yet the want of either of them is sufficient to ruin the soul.

In reference to the 18th verse, I have only to show whom God will harden; having before shown upon whom he will have mercy. According to the gospel by Paul, God will indirectly harden those who continue to rebel against him.

The following passage illustrates the point: "Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and to four-footed beasts and creeping things. Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonor their own bodies between themselves: who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshiped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed forever."—Rom. 1: 21–25. From this passage it appears that God gave them up to uncleanness and vile affections, not because he had predestinated them to be wicked, but because of their own wilful rebellion against him. Again the apostle asserts, "Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them a strong delusion, that they should believe a lie."—2 Thess. 2: 9–11.

From this passage it is also evident that God sends men "strong delusion," not because God hath predestinated them to wickedness, but because they receive not the truth in the love of it. Therefore, although these errors and delusions of infidelity have ruined many, to them must be ascribed their destruction, as they brought these delusions entirely upon themselves, without any decree to that effect by their heavenly Father.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

"MINISTRATION OF DEATH." "Ministration of the Spirit."—No. 7.

THE LAW OF THE WAVE-SHEAF.

We will now look at the types, which indicate a change of the day.

1. The law of the wave-sheaf. As we have already stated, the fourth commandment is the only one of time. And as has been said, as this commandment, with others, become a part of the law of ordinances, is there, in this new position, any intimation from God that there would be a change of the day from the seventh to the first day of the week? The law of the wave-sheaf was to "bring a sheaf of the first fruits" of their harvest unto the priest, and he was to wave the sheaf before the Lord; and this was always to be done "on the morrow after the Sabbath" (Lev. 23: 11); and of course this must always take place on "the first day of the week;" for if the Sabbath then was on the seventh day, surely the morrow after, or day following, must be the first day. How did this wave-sheaf of the first fruits typify the resurrection of Christ, of whom it is said, he was "the first fruits of them that slept"? (1 Cor. 5: 20). Answer. The wave-sheaf was a striking type of the resurrection of Christ, which really did take place "on the morrow after the Sabbath," as no one can deny. Christ often told his disciples that he should rise the third day, according to the Scriptures. Where do we find the Scripture that speaks of Christ's resurrection as being on the third day? It must be found in this type of the wave-sheaf, "on the morrow after the Sabbath." Christ was crucified on the fourteenth day of the first month, the day the paschal lamb was killed. He laid in the tomb on Saturday, which was the seventh day (see Lev. 23: 4–7; John 19: 31; and Luke 24: 56); and on the third day after his crucifixion, on the first day of the week, he was raised from the dead, "on the morrow after the Sabbath." Thus we see the apt and most striking character of the type of the wave-sheaf, fulfilled in the resurrection of Christ, in the most signal manner.

2. The law of the wave-loaves. The feast of weeks was a festival observed when the people had gathered in their harvest, or first fruits. The law required: "And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave offering; seven Sabbaths shall be complete, even unto the morrow after the seventh Sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat offering unto the Lord. Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves of two tenth deals; they shall be of fine flour, they shall be baken with leaven, they are the first fruits unto the Lord." These, with the accompanying sacrifices, were to be waved by the priest. (Lev. 23: 15–20). Moreover, this fifteenth day, or "morrow after the Sabbath," was to be kept holy—"ye shall do no servile work therein," and a holy convocation was proclaimed. (v. 21). How significant—how striking this arrangement. The seven weeks began with a two days, or double Sabbath; and ended in the same manner. Christ rose from the dead on the second of the first series, and the Holy Spirit made his advent on the second of the last series—"the morrow after the Sabbath,"—and appeared in cloven tongues like as of fire. Manifestly it was a great week, or week of weeks. It witnessed the resurrection and the ascension of Christ, and the descent of the Holy Spirit. We see, therefore, that the wave-sheaf and the two wave-loaves were offered at an interval of seven weeks, annually; always on the morrow after the Sabbath." Surely the hand of the "Lord of the Sabbath" is here. God changed the order of the months of the year so that what had been the sixth or seventh month came to be called the first month, or beginning of months. This was at the vernal equinox. In all temperate latitudes there is in the vegetable world a resurrected, or new life, begun at this period. It was in this first month of the new order of months as well as on the first day of the week that Christ rose from the dead. Are we not, therefore, constrained to believe that when the fabric of the ceremonial code, which had united with it the weekly Sabbath, was about falling to pieces, that God dissevered the Sabbath therefrom, and restamped the day of rest on the "first day of the week," by a series of the most amazing and stupendous miracles which man has ever witnessed." "God laid his hand upon the seventh portion of man's time, and claimed it as his own. It was provided that in one day out of seven, the sun should go forth to shine upon a world at rest—memorial of what it was intended to be—relic of what it once had been—type of what it is yet to be hereafter, when all things are made new."

To conclude, let us all strive to be like the apostle Paul, as set forth in Rom. 7: 22–25. It is there stated that, "The law of God," which Paul took "delight in," was "after the inner man." But there was "another law"—(mark it) "warring against the law of" (his) mind;" which brought him "into captivity to the law of sin"! And hence he cries out: "O wretched man that I am"! But how could Paul and others be delivered from such a "wretched condition? "Thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord;" when, "with the MIND," they "serve the law of God," and not "WITH THE FLESH THE LAW OF SIN"!

Here, then, in the foregoing argument, we have "THE LAW and THE TESTIMONY," as found in the Scriptures. And for "the testimony" of authentic ecclesiastical history, we will refer the reader to the series of articles recently published in the World's Crisis, under the heading,—"The Voice of Historians," etc.

There are, no doubt, sincere christians who keep the seventh day. I never was more conscientious and sincere than during the three years I observed it. But there was a "veil upon the heart," and, in this thing, I was blindly trying to follow the "letter" instead of the "Spirit," and yet I was ignorant of the fact. My advice, then, to all, is this: be careful and never rest until you know that God's "LAWS," which are to be the christian's guide during the "dispensation of the Spirit," are written in your heart. For if you try to follow the "letter" of the "law" as once written on "tables of stone," as with "ink"; take heed, lest you dishonor him who is "Lord even of the Sabbath day," and thus be found doing "despite to the Spirit of grace." "Grieve not the Holy Spirit" by contending for the "letter" (2 Cor. 3: 3–16), as written with "ink," exclusively, or by the finger of God upon "tables of stone"; "for the LETTER KILLETH! but the SPIRIT giveth LIFE." O may "the SPIRIT of the living God" write the "laws" (Heb. 10: 16) of the dispensation of the Spirit upon the hearts of those who are always contending for the "letter."

TRY THE SPIRITS.

As we are living in the "dispensation of the Spirit," let us "try the spirits whether they are of God." What is the fruit of the Spirit? (See Gal. 22–26.) There is evidently a great deal too much of "our religion" (Acts 26: 5), even in this nineteenth century. The "Jews' religion" (Gal. 1: 13), ever since the dispensation of the Spirit commenced, has led men, and women also, to "persecute the church of God, and waste it." Persons may now, as well as in the apostles' days, think they are doing "God service," when they are only "exceedingly mad" (Acts 26: 11), and thus try to compel others "to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus." We think the man must have had a great share of "our religion" who could scold, threaten, and ill treat his wife,—(and, must we believe, took her by the hair of her head! thus to lead (?) her in the way.) Or was he "mad," and trying to compel her to observe with him the "seventh day." O the terrible fruits of this effort to bring in the old dispensation of death into the dispensation of the Spirit! O the distraction, the division and the wrangling, there has been in some families and neighborhoods, and among brethren, where a part has held to the old "seventh-day," and a part has not. Just think of it. What clashing in their labors and in their habits! Those who have had experience in these things, can call to mind much more than I am disposed to write. But as my late wife fully embraced the seventh-day Sabbath when I did, we were not subject to such difficulties in domestic labors, etc., as I have known in some other families. And as an honest man, who expects soon to stand at the judgment seat of Christ, I must say that the fruits of "seventh-day" keeping are, in many instances, unlike the "fruit of the Spirit." And again I say, the Lord forgive me for the error of my head, and for the evil I have done in once advocating the observance of the seventh-day. The Lord helping me, I am now resolved to do what I can to undo the evil which I ignorantly committed while laboring under the delusion of the seventh-day Sabbath."

As a clear and comprehensive view of the Sabbath, we give the following from the pen of the late Sylvester Bliss:—

THE SABBATH.

"In the first two issues of the Herald for last July, we gave an article on the Sabbath, which was commenced in the former and completed in the latter,—showing that it is of perpetual obligation, and is properly observed on the 'Lord's day.' Since then, a brother has requested a synopsis of that argument.

I. We argued that the Sabbath has a twofold significance.

1. It was commemorative of the creation. Because God created all things in six days, and rested on the seventh, therefore God requires that his children, after six days of labor in the accomplishment of their work, shall rest on the seventh. By so doing we keep in remembrance the fact of the creation, and the duty we owe to God as our Creator and the Creator of all things.

2. It is typical of the rest which remaineth for the people of God. This commemorative and typical significance being universal, its observance was not limited in command to the people of a single nation.

II. In addition to its universal significance, it had to the Jews a national significance—commemorative of their deliverance from the house of bondage in Egypt. Said Moses to Israel (Deut. 5: 15;) 'Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day.' To make the Sabbath also commemorative of their deliverance from bondage, the day which God selected for its observance was that one of the seven on which they rested on the shores of the Red Sea and rejoiced over the destruction of their enemies. The day was designated by the withholding of manna; and it does not appear that that day of the week had been before observed, for on the eighth day previous to that on which the manna was withholden, they took a long journey, at the command of the Lord, unto the wilderness of Sin.

This national observance required that it should be celebrated on the seventh day of the week—the day of their deliverance from Pharaoh. When its national significance should cease, its universal significance would be appropriately celebrated on any day of the week, of the six days' labor, that God by his word or providence might designate. Its national significance ceased when God took the kingdom from the Jews, and gave it to those who should bring forth the fruits thereof. Its universal import being as significant as ever, it was necessary that some day should be set apart for its observance. As the Lord arose from the dead on the first day of the week,—an assurance of the resurrection of his saints, it became proper to keep in remembrance that event, which is done by observing the Sabbath in connection with it. Apostolic example in the observance of the Lord's day is of equal authority with apostolic precept. The abandonment of the Jewish day, and the universal observance of the christian day, not only by the apostolic church, but by all their successors in all lands for many centuries, may be regarded as the work of God's providence; and that the change in the day meets his approbation, is evidenced by his blessing churches which observe it, which he would not do if they were all violaters of his holy Sabbath. By observing the Lord's day as the christian Sabbath, we still commemorate God's work in creation, by working six days and resting the seventh; we thereby recognize God's sovereignty, we keep in view the rest which remaineth for the people of God; and we also commemorate Christ's resurrection from the dead, on which our own is dependent.

By referring to the articles in the Herald of July 3d and 10th, 1852, the points alluded to in the above may be read in full."

The following is from the London "Quarterly Journal of Prophecy," as quoted by the Advent Herald, April 1st, 1854, with a slight variation of a few words and phrases, in order to meet our present needs:—

"Reasons for the observance of a Sabbath. These reasons are, 1. Man's need of rest. Is this reason gone? Does man need rest no longer? Is the world now so calm a scene, and earth so serene a region, that no seventh day's rest is needed? If not—if the reason still exist—must not the day still remain? Can the institution be erased when the reason for it still remains, not only as strong as ever, but stronger than ever, in these days of earnest worldliness, and excitement, and hurrying to and fro?

2. Time for unhindered fellowship with God. Is there no longer need for this? Is there not more than ever, in this age of business and enterprise? Adam in paradise, Israel in the wilderness, when there was no bustle, no tempting world around, needed a Sabbath for fellowship and worship. And do we not in these busy days? And if the reason remains, the ordinance must.

3. A memorial of creation. For four thousand years God kept up this memorial of creation as a thing that was needed; and where is his declaration that creation needs no memorial now? Ah! do we not feel how needful it is to uphold the Sabbath in these days when men are undertaking to prove from science that the world created itself? Ought we not to prize the Sabbath as God's standing testimony against atheism,—God's own loving voice proclaiming, "I created all this out of nothing,"—God's appointed witness to a universe created by himself, against the atheistic theory of a self-creating universe?

4. A memorial of the resurrection. The Sabbath has now become a double memorial, viz., of creation and resurrection. If, then, it was sacred before, it is doubly sacred now. And to say that the Sabbath has ceased because christianity has risen, is just saying this: that so long as we had but one reason for this memorial, we kept it up; but now that we have two, we must level and efface it.

5. A type of the rest or Sabbath which remaineth for the people of God. That antitype, that rest, has not yet come. And till it arrive, the Sabbath must be maintained. So that, whether you look backward to the old creation, or forward to the new,—backward to the resurrection, or forward to the restitution of all things, you see how entirely untouched, nay, how thoroughly immovable, are the reasons for its sacredness and perpetuity. Till these reasons be swept away, the Sabbath must stand. Unless you can say that man has no need for rest, no need for communion with God,—unless you can sweep away creation, resurrection, and the hope of the coming rest, you cannot cancel the Sabbath, nor dispose of its obligation and authority.

The character of a cause is generally known by the character of its friends and its enemies. No one will deny that the great mass of the religious-minded men is in favor of the Sabbath, and the great mass of the ungodly against it. Popery is an enemy to the Sabbath; and wherever Popery flourishes, there the Sabbath goes down. Infidelity is an enemy to the Sabbath; and wherever infidelity flourishes, there the Sabbath goes down. Popish Spain has no Sabbaths; infidel France has no Sabbaths; Protestant England, Protestant America, and Protestant Scotland, have their Sabbaths still. And may we not conclude favorably of that cause against which Popery and infidelity are confederated as one man? May we not conclude well of that ordinance which takes root deepest, and spreads its branches widest, in the most religious and God-fearing nations of the earth?"

"Blest day of God! most calm, most bright,
The first and best of days;
The laborer's rest, the saint's delight,
The day of prayer and praise.

My Savior's face made thee to shine;
His rising thee did raise;
And made thee heavenly and divine
Beyond all other days.

The first-fruits oft a blessing prove
To all the sheaves behind;
And they who do the Sabbath love,
A happy week will find.

This day I must to God appear;
For, Lord, the day is thine;
Help me to spend it in thy fear,
And thus to make it mine."

THE VANDALS.

At the present time the history of the Vandals is of some importance in connection with the time of the setting up of "the abomination of desolation," spoken of by Daniel the prophet, and referred to by our Savior, in the 24th chapter of Matthew.

The Vandals were one of the savage tribes that came down from the north of Europe in the fifth century, and assisted in breaking up the Roman empire into its ten fragments, symbolized by the ten horns on Daniel's fourth beast, mentioned in the seventh chapter of his book of prophecy. All writers, so so far as we know, reckon the Vandals as one of the ten, as also one of the three that was "plucked up by the roots" by the Papal power, symbolyzed by the "little horn," "whose look was more stout than his fellows," and which "made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom."—Dan. 7: 21–22.

It is very evident that the "Little Horn" must have an existence, as such, before it could begin the work of plucking "up by the roots" "three of the first horns" of Daniel's fourth beast, which symbolizes the Roman empire. Daniel is informed that "the ten horns" on "the fourth beast . . . are ten kings [or kingdoms, as old versions read] that shall arise; and another shall arise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings."

The point we would impress upon the reader's mind is that the "Little Horn" must be up before it plucks up either horn. A man cannot pull up a tree before he has an existence. As before stated, we believe all expositiors consider the Vandals one of the ten horns of Daniel's fourth beast. On this point, we think there is no room for doubt. After committing various depredations in Europe, the historian says,—

"The Vandals or Wandals, originally a Gothic nation, and so-called from the Gothic word Wandelen, which signifies to wander, abandoned Spain, which they had entered, with the Suevians and Alans, in the year 409, and, crossing the straits of Gibraltar, as they are now called, landed in Africa in the month of May, 429, and in one year made themselves masters of all the cities of Africa, except Carthage, and Cirthia, and Hippo. In the year 439, they took Carthage by surprise, and soon after reduced all Africa, which they kept till the time of Justinian, in spite of all the efforts used by the emperors of the east as well as the west, to rescue that wealthy country out of their hands. But Justinian recovered it, after two years' war, by the conduct and bravery of Belisarius, whom he employed in that expedition. The first year, 533, Belesarius defeated Gelimer, the last king of the African Vandals, in a pitched battle; and made himself master of several cities, among the rest of Carthage itself, after it had been held by the barbarians ninety-five years. The following year, 534, he reduced the other cities of Africa, with the islands of Corsica, Sardinia, Majorica, Minorica, and whatever else belonged to the Vandals, either on the continent, or in the islands. The Vandals not only professed, like the other Gothic nations, the doctrine of Arius, but bore an irreconcilable hatred to the Catholics."—Bower's History of the Popes, Vol. 1, p. 338.

This historic account is very definite, and gives clear light on the subject. Let us consider a few points. 1. Previous to the time that the savage tribes came down from Scandinavia, in the north of Europe, in the fifth century, the Roman empire occupied all south of the Danube river, including England and Ireland, and all the northern portion of Africa.

2. In the fifth century, the barbarians from the north came down into the Roman empire and broke it up into ten fragments, leaving the eastern portion, with Constantinople for its capitol, still in possession of the Romans. This remnant of the empire, was the eleventh portion, and was occupied by the church power. 3. After stating that the fourth beast "had ten horns," which "were ten kings that" should "arise" from the fourth kingdom, when broken up, he says, "and another shall arise after them, and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings." Dan. 7: 24. It will be noticed that the "Little Horn," "whose look was more stout than his fellows," is the one to "subdue" the "three kings," or kingdoms belonging to the Roman empire; hence he must receive power to work, or be in existence before he plucked up the first horn; consequently, when we find the time that the first horn was destroyed, we know that the "Little Horn" was then in existence. That division of the Roman empire that plucked "up by the roots" three of the other kingdoms, into which it was divided, must be the one that was to "wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws." It is very evident that this "Little Horn" had both political and ecclesiastical authority; hence it is said his look was more stout than his fellows." The prophet says, "Behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things."

We find no other division of the Roman empire answering the description given, but the eastern portion—the Greek kingdom; in which we find every feature corresponding to the prophecy.

The Greek kingdom, under the reign of Justinian, did pluck "up by the roots" three of the ten horns of Daniel's fourth beast, and thus reinstated the Roman church upon the "seven hills," where she has remained over one thousand three hundred years.

The Vandal kingdom in Africa was the first horn that was destroyed by the "Little Horn," which was done in A. D. 534. It is stated in the "New American Encyclopedia," Vol. 10, p. 90, that Justinian, the Emperor over this kingdom, sent his general Belisarius to Africa to conquer the Vandals. Gelimer, the king of the Vandals, was "an Arian ruler" and "oppressed the Catholic subjects." "The fleet," under Gen. Belisarius, sent to Africa by Justinian, "sailed from Constantinople in June, 533, and after a voyage of three months the army disembarked in the vicinity of Carthage, and a series of victories soon brought that capitol and the person of Gelimer himself into the power of the Byzantines. Gelimer was sent a captive to Constantinople, the kingdom of the Vandals destroyed, and the Arian worship suppressed."

Bower says, when speaking of the work of Belisarius, "The following year, 534, he reduced the other cities of Africa, with the islands of Corsica, Sardinia, Majorica, Minorica, and whatever else belonged to the Vandals either on the continent, or in the islands," —Bower Vol. 1, p. 338.

Koch says:—"The kingdom of the Vandals was destroyed by the Emperor Justinian, who reunited Africa to the empire of the east. Gelimer, the last king of the Vandals, was conquered by Belisarius, A. D. 534, and conducted by him in triumph to Constantinople."—Koch, p. 48.

From the foregoing we conclude that the "Little Horn" power arose as early as A. D. 533. If we take this date as the one for the setting up of the abomination, commencing the 1335 days of Daniel 12: 12 at the same time, then they would end in 1868. If we commence them earlier than 533, then they must run out before 1868. These points will soon be tested. Let us be ready for the coming of the Son of man at any time.

A GOOD MOVE.

We have just received the following communication from New York, with which we are much pleased. We ardently desire that success may attend the well begun effort. Would that such a movement might become general. We are sure the blessing of the Lord would follow; sinners would be awakened and converted; backsliders reclaimed, and saints greatly strengthened and comforted.

BRO. GRANT:—A delegation from each of several bodies of "Second Advent" believers worshiping in this city, met recently to devise means to get their several societies to act together, in order to promote the important issues in which they are mutually interested. The meeting was a pleasant one, paternal in spirit, and all the members expressed a desire to see more cordiality and christian brotherly love existing among Advent believers in this city.

As a means to open a way for this, a prayer and conference meeting of "all Advent believers" was appointed to be held on the 25th inst., at Dodsworth Hall, commencing at 2 o'clock P. M. J. T. H.

IS IT RIGHT?

After reading the following, let the reader answer the question at the head of this article.

"A man invested $200 in one of the benevolent institutions which distribute gold articles and such things at $1 each. He got watches and jewelry which purported to be worth $599, but on sending his prizes to the United States assay office to be melted, he found that there was just $9.62 worth of gold and silver in the lot."

This is the way the fairs are conducted, and it is easy to see why they are so profitable (?) to the various churches, and other so-called "benevolent institutions." It seems as though the people do not believe the old saying,—"Honesty is the best policy," but that the best policy now is to get the money any way you can; and the more is received for a worthless object, the better.

Truly, men have become "covetous" to an alarming extent; just as the prophet said they would "in the last days;" and yet the corrupt passion is rapidly advancing. Almost every device that can be employed is used in the church fairs of these days to get money from those who attend these gambling institutions, that are corrupting the morals of the people, and leading their votaries to perdition. We can see very little difference between the spirit of these fairs, and that in the gambler's hall; only that the former is more hypocritical, —pretending to be holy, when the heart is corrupt and full of evil imaginations. Says Paul,—"from such turn away."

WAKING UP SLOWLY.

We get some strange statements from the spirits. Some declare the opposite of others, and if we put them all together they would cause a Babylonian confusion equal to any thing found among men in this life.

The following question and answer appeared in the "Banner of Light" of June 3d, 1865:

"Q.—It is said that some spirits require a thousand years to awake to consciousness. Is this true?

A.—Yes, this is true."

If spirits may lie a thousand years in unconsciousness, why not believe in the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, as taught in the Bible? We see no ground to deny it, if the foregoing statement of the spirit be admitted.

Here is another question and its answer, found in the same paper:—

"Q.—Spirits have power to deceive, or to bring back the same characteristics as they had here, have they not?

A.—Certainly they have."

That they "have power to deceive" is a notorious fact. The Lord saw the work they would accomplish in the last part of the present dispensation, and spake through the prophet as follows:—"In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils."—1 Tim. 4: 1. Thousands upon thousands have already departed from "the faith once delivered to the saints," and are giving heed to the "seducing spirits," and their anti-scriptural doctrines. They are laying plans to bring the whole world under their control, politically, socially, and morally. New developments are about to be manifested, that will lead many more into this infernal system of demonism. But few have any idea of the magnitude of Spiritualism, and of what is doing to undermine christianity and the Bible. Nothing short of pure religion, and the true doctrine of Christ, can expect to stand before its onward march. It is the most cunningly devised system of fables ever concocted by demons and their followers,—the most seducing, and the most dangerous. It adapts itself to all classes of individuals. It is the great drag net of Satan by which he is making a tremendous effort to bring all men into his fold, and make them believe they are real christians, of the old apostolic stamp.

THE VIENNA CONFERENCE.

BRO. GRANT:—The Maine Central conference, at Vienna, has just closed, and it was one of the most blessed meetings I have ever attended. It was held in Sr. Carr's barn. Probably more than four hundred people attend on Sunday, and two hundred believers in the faith of the gospel; and they came in the Spirit, and remained in the Spirit; yes, and went away refreshed by the good Spirit of the meeting.

I saw no strife, heard no discord, nor contentions, and saw no hardness manifested. There was elevation, engagedness, activity, patience, godliness, brotherly love, and kindness; yes, and hospitality, too. There were but three families to entertain the multitude, and yet, so far as I could see, all were satisfied with their entertainment. I admired the kindness and hospitality and patience of our kind hosts and hostesses. Every part of their houses were open to their guests, and also their barns and pastures for horses. Yes, blessed be God, and their large hearts. The good Lord bless and reward them an hundred-fold is my prayer.

The preaching was clear, simple, instructive, doctrinal, practical, and experimental. It was listened to with attention and interest. The congregations were orderly, quiet as the circumstances would admit. Some of the days, the meetings begun at seven, and held until near dark, with the exception of an hour for dinner, and an hour for supper; and the time all well filled up, and yet the congregation were patient. I think most of them went away sorry to leave, feeling it was good to be there. If it is so good, so pleasant, to meet and worship with our brethren here, what must it be to meet to worship and adore, and be in the presence of our Savior and King, in the blessed new earth, free from all care? the kingdom of Jesus, O I long to be there.

I think a new impulse was given to the cause by this Vienna meeting. Brethren, wake up, gird up the loins of your mind, and hope to the end. "Be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," knowing "that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." There is much to be done. The harvest is great, and faithful laborers are few.

Yours, B. SPAULDING.

FURTHER ASTRONOMICAL CONSIDERATIONS.

BY WM. C. THURMAN.

We will now give Thucydides' words: "The sun was eclipsed after midday, and became full again after it had assumed a crescent form, and after some of the stars had shone out."—(b. 2, c. 28.) Those who have often seen eclipses of the sun can judge for themselves whether one of seven digits could answer to the description of Thucydides. I once saw one of nine digits, and so far from any stars shining out, I was unable to look at the sun without using something to obscure its rays.

Let us now compare the tables of Prof. Hudson's "Oracle" with those of learned astronomers. We have observed that his tables make the eclipses of B. C. 431 only seven digits and seven-tenths; but Dr. Hales makes it total. Ptavius makes it ten digits and twenty-five minutes. Kepler makes it total. Ferguson makes it nearly total. Pingre makes ten or eleven digits; Struyk makes eleven digits; and my tables make the same.

So here are six distinguished astronomers, all against Prof. Hudson's "Oracle," and all testifying to the correctness of my tables. But that which proves the correctness of my tables is the word of Thucydides himself, who did not calculate with uncertain tables, but with his own eyes saw this eclipse; hence his testimony outweighs all the astronomers on earth as regards this eclipse. According to my tables, this eclipse was not total; but after the moon had covered enough of the sun's disk for the stars to appear, and having caused the sun to appear in a crescent form, it passed off; and Thucydides says the sun "became full again after it had assumed a crescent form, and after some of the stars had shone out." Thus it will be seen that my tables make this eclipse according to the express language of the historian; hence until Prof. Hudson's "Oracle" makes this eclipse correctly, which was seen by the celebrated historian Thucydides, and the one seen by Ptolemy, the noted Egyptian astronomer, in A D. 136, he never will be able to prove either the incorrectness of my tables or the prophecies of Daniel. Then, of what avail is the "Oracle's" differences of about four hours with me, as to the time of the eclipse of Jan. B. C. 681? If he had differed ten hours it would have been so much the worse for his tables, for until he is enabled to make at least one eclipse correctly, surely they ought not to be considered more reliable than those tables that make them all, even to the express language of those who saw them.

Now, if my tables are to be proved incorrect, it should be shown that there is one eclipse that they do not correctly make. This would weigh more with a seeker of truth than all that can be said in derision. If we are to place confidence in the "Oracle's" tables, it should be shown that they make at least one of those ancient eclipses correctly. This would outweigh all of the high recommendations that he can bring; and since Prof. Hudson promised to use the "argumentative method," we have a right to expect something substantial.

Since my tables make all of those ancient eclipses, answering to the express language of those historians who saw and recorded those eclipses, I am unable to see how any one can ever detect an error in them, until he can produce some eclipse, unknown to me, which they will not make.

I suppose no catalogue of eclipses that has ever been given to the world has passed a criticism half so close as those we have given; and yet the error of a single minute, either as to time or quantity, no one has yet detected. But in Prof. Hudson's "Oracle," whom he brings recommended as "an accomplished astronomer, worthy to be an 'Oracle' in this dispute, and to be relied on as far as any authority may be appealed to in the case," we discover errors open to the view of those who know nothing about astronomy, some of which we will mention.

First, concerning the eclipse of A. D. 136, he says: "I herewith send the result of my computations, done with all the precision of which my tables would admit." Results:—"Full moon A. D. 136, March 6th, at three hours, one minute, forty seconds. In the measuring of apparent time, the equation of time being 14 min. 6 sec. Digits eclipsed, 4.8 on the moon's north side. But Ptolemy says, "We have computed the middle time to have been four equinoctial hours after midnight, and it was eclipsed half of its diameter on the north." Now as it is too absurd to suppose that the celebrated Egyptian astronomer could have made a mistake of one hour as to time, and two digits as to quantity, in an eclipse seen with his own eyes, and "carefully observed" by him, we discover that the tables as used by Prof. Hudson's "Oracle" "are proved to be incorrect, both as to time and the quantity eclipsed.

Secondly, the day of the eclipse was the 6th of March, which being reduced to new style, is the 5th of March, on which day he makes the difference between mean and true time 14 min. 6 sec. In order to detect this error we are not dependent on Ptolemy, for it is open to the criticism of every school boy that can read an almanac. For all can see that the difference between clock and sun time on the 5th of March, in leap year, is only 11 min. 35 sec. These two minutes and thirty-one seconds may appear to be but a small mistake, but it is really one of 14 days, for that is the difference in time on the 20th of February; yet, I should have considered it unworthy of notice, had not Prof. Hudson employed him to expose my mistakes.

Since Prof. Hudson seems to have supposed that the wide difference between the computations of his "Oracle" and those of mine was a proof of the incorrectness of my tables, we will here compare the result of his tables with those of Pingre's. The first column contains the "Oracles" list of eclipses. The second is Pingre's calculation of the same, and the third line is the difference between Pingre and the "Oracle."

The "Oracle's" list. h. m.	Pingre's. h. m.	Difference. h. m.
B. C. 721 — 8.18	10.47	2.29
720 —10.39	12.47	2. 8
720 — 6.51	10.17	3.26
682 — 6.25	8.47	2.22
681 —11.52	14.32	2.41
681 — 6.49	9. 2	2.13
549 — 6.47	9.31	2.44
478 —11.04	11.52	0.48
457 — 7.53	9.22	1.29
431 — 4.55	5.26	0.31
413 — 9.51	11.41	1.50
201 — 6.17	7.21	1.04
A. D. 14 — 4.46	5.41	0.55

From this table, all can at one view discover that the "Oracle" employed by Prof. Hudson to expose the errors of Thurman, is at variance from 31 minutes to 3 hours and 26 minutes with Pingre, the celebrated astronomer of France.

WE MISS HER.

"One sweet flower has drooped and faded." There are feelings of sadness and gloom spread over community when one of real sterling worth falls a victim to death. Such were our feelings as we laid Sr. Etta Hamlin in the grave. There have been eulogies pronounced on the dead that were undeserved, and obituaries written that went far beyond the truth; but if ever mortal deserved eulogizing, this, our dear sister did. I have seen many persons, both great and good, but an intimate acquaintance would discover some faults and foibles. But I could heartily concur with the brother who preached her funeral sermon, when he said he never knew one so near perfection as the one that lay before us. Her christian course was ever calm and even. Never light and trifling, never sad and gloomy. There was something in her influence that always made me feel I must be a better christian. She was below medium size, and although twenty-three years of age, there was a strangely sweet, childlike expression in her face.

We visited her a few days before her death, and could say from our very hearts,

"The place where a christian meets her fate,
Is preferable to the common walks of life,
Quite on the verge of heaven."

I have visited many sick rooms, with my husband, but never one like this. While she could only whisper sweet words to us, it seemed that angels were whispering too.

Etta was quite a traveler in Maine. Indeed our meetings hardly seemed complete unless she was present. And when she sang, ah! such singing;—every heart was moved. No one attempted to sing with her. It was enough to listen. Very many of our dear brethren and sisters can witness to the truthfulness of this. We have laid her away in deep sadness, but with the sweet hope of meeting her again, with her harp all attuned to angelic strains. O that we might be more like her in all things; so that when we come down to the Jordan of death, we can fearlessly dip our feet in its turbid waters, and in the morning of the resurrection place them safely "on the evergreen shore," is my prayer.

CONFERENCE IN SO. BUTLER, N. Y.

The following brethren convened according to appointment, June 1st, in the Advent Chapel, South Butler:—Elds. C. B. Turner, Syracuse, N. Y.; C. W. Low, Fredonia, N. Y.; C. F. Sweet, Albion, N. Y.; J. D. Brown, Edinborough, Penn.; Wm. A. Fenn, South Butler, N. Y.; Elisha Cowles, Groton, N. Y.; Stephen Hitchcock, Groton, N. Y.

UNORDAINED PREACHERS:—B. P. Stevens, South Butler, N. Y.; Milton Miles, South Butler, N. Y.; Wm. Morrel, New London, N. Y.; L. Webster, Conesus Centre, N. Y.; together with twenty-five or more brethren from adjoining counties.

The following Brn. were appointed as a committee of arrangements:—J. D. Brown, Frank Burr, B. P. Stevens, John Wescott, H. B. Chapin. A business committee was also appointed, consisting of F. Burr, J. V. Himes, C. F. Sweet, C. B. Turner. Adjourned to Friday, 9 o'clock A. M.

Conference met according to adjournment, Eld. Low in the chair.

On motion, Eld. Himes was received as a messenger from the Illinois Conference, and invited to take part in our deliberations. In view of the above fraternal letter* from our brethren in Illinois, Bro. Fenn offered the following:—Resolved, That we appreciate the fraternal feeling of our brethren of the Advent Conference in Illinois, as expressed in their letter, and more fully expressed in the address of Eld. Himes, their messenger to us; and in return we pledge them our prayers and co-operation in the great work of preparing a people for the coming of the Lord.

The business committee reported in part a plan of organization, and asked leave to sit again, which was granted. Adjourned to the close of afternoon service, when the conference was called to order; and the business committee made a full report on organization. The report was received and taken up in two parts, as follows:—

PREAMBLE.

Brethren, after a careful survey of the field open to us in Western New York and vicinity, your committee very respectfully make the following Report:—

1st. The signs of the times clearly indicate that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh; new light is being shed on the times and seasons, in harmony with the signs, by which we now have a stronger position than we have had at any former time.

2nd. The fresh light now reflecting upon our position calls for new and more united action in proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom, in order to the preparation of a people to meet the Lord in peace.

3rd. The times demand bold and decided action. The enemies of God are bold and active in their work; and it is fitting that the servants of God should act well their part in this awful hour, while we are standing upon the threshold of the judgment, where eternal life is involved in the issues of the hour.

4th. In the view of the present aspect of the world, and the increasing light that is being shed on the nearness of the kingdom, God has been pleased to stir up his waiting people in all this region to a new interest in the cause, and has called us together at this time to unite on a scriptural basis for union and co-operation in the work of the building up of the churches of Christ among us, and calling out of the world a people that shall with us hail the coming of the Lord with joy.

In view of the above facts, your committee unanimously recommend that the present scattered elements all through this great field should organize into one body, and hereafter be known as the Advent Christian Conference of Western New York and vicinity. And we commend to you the following form of a constitution for the regulation of the body:—

The Preamble was taken up first. It was moved to leave out the word Advent, and have it read simply Christian Conference. After some discussion, it was found that a majority were in favor of retaining the Advent name. Adjourned to Saturday morning, 8 A. M.

Met according to adjournment. "Advent" name taken up and discussed further, and out of deference to some who had scruples on the subject, it was moved to drop the name. A majority of four was in favor of it; forty-two in all voting, among whom were some who never were identified with us as a people.

The following resolution was offered by Bro. Fenn: Resolved, That this conference recognize Brn. Miles, Stevens, Webster and Morrel, as worthy the sympathy and confidence of the church of Christ as preachers of the gospel, and proper subjects for ordination. Carried.

The following constitution was then taken up and unanimously adopted:—

ART. I. This conference shall be called the Christian Conference of Western N. Y. and vicinity.

ART. II. The object of this conference shall be to promote scriptural piety, christian union and co-operation in the spread of light and truth, and especially of the prophetic Scriptures which relate to the soon coming kingdom of Christ.

ART. III. This conference shall be composed of preachers and delegates who are connected with the body. Each church shall have the right to send one delegate; and a church of twenty members or more may send two. Visiting brethren may be invited to take part in our deliberations, but not to vote.

ART. IV. The officers of this conference shall consist of President, Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer, and a committee of three, who together shall constitute a board of managers, who shall be chosen annually by ballot, and shall hold office until a new election.

ART. V. The duty of the board shall be to look after the general interests of the cause, and oversee camp, tent, or general meetings, held under the supervision of this conference; also to attend to any business between the sessions of the conference that may involve the interests of the cause.

ART. VI. The conference shall meet annually, and also hold three quarterly meetings in the conference year, time and place to be arranged by the conference or board.

ART. VII. The annual meetings shall be opened by an appropriate address by some member appointed for that purpose. 2nd, receive the names of members and delegates. 3rd, organize by the choice of officers. 4th, choose a business committee. 5th, hear reports from the delegates; also report from the board. 7th, hear report from ministers and evangelists.

ART. VIII. This constitution may be altered or amended at any regular meeting, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

The conference now proceeded to the election of the following officers:—Elder C. W. Low, President; B. C. Simonds, Vice President; Elder Wm. A. Fenn, Secretary and Treasurer. A committee of three were appointed to act together with the President, Vice President and Secretary as a board of managers for the ensuing year. C. F. Sweet, C. B. Turner, R. W. Wilson, committee.

On motion of Eld. Burr, Eld. C. B. Turner was appointed a messenger from this body to meet with the General Advent Christian Conference in Amboy, at their next session, September next. Adjourned to meet at Darien, Sept. 1st, 1865.

The devotional services of this conference were lively and profitable. Bro. Webster, of Conesus, was ordained Sunday noon. Five were baptized at the close of the afternoon service, and about one hundred and fifty partook of the Lord's Supper. We parted as we met, feeling a spirit of union, though conflicting elements were present. May the Lord lead us to see eye to eye.

WM. A. FENN, Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS. IN THE LORD:—Seeing it has been a long time since you have heard from Bro. P. Tandy, it may be some of you are inquiring whether he is still striving for the glorious kingdom. I can say truly to-day, that God's truth is as precious to me as ever, and even more so. I love the appearing of the blessed Jesus. I mean to be ready. "I long to be there." Pray for me. May God bless you, dear children.

I had the satisfaction of attending the Second Advent conference held in Sunapee, N. H., last week, part of the time. Brn. Couch, Piper, Libby, Southerland, Cotton, with others, and Sr. Mussy, were there. Saturday A. M., after the social meeting in the morning, Bro. Couch entertained and deeply interested us with a discourse founded on Zech. 7: 13,—"Therefore it is come to pass, that as he cried, and they would not hear; so they cried, and I would not hear, saith the Lord of hosts" In the afternoon, we listened to a discourse from Sr. Mussy, founded on 1 Thess. 4: 18,—"Wherefore, comfort one another with these words;" and it was truly a comforting discourse to the dear saints. I was full of interest.

Sunday morning, they had a prayer and conference meeting, which was very interesting and solemn. At half past ten o'clock, the public exercises commenced again. Bro. Couch preached from a text found in Dan. 12: 1, 2, 3,—"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever." And now let me say, that we had that day from our brother, two very interesting, and we hope, profitable discourses.

He preached on the prophecies, and their fulfillment, showing that we were in the last days.

Then we had the unspeakable satisfaction of coming around the table of the Lord, and commemorating his death and sufferings for all mankind. The scene was deeply solemn. We then sang a hymn, and went on our way rejoicing. It is our solemn conviction that if the people of Sunapee are not blessed, it will not be the fault of the brethren and sisters from abroad, who met there and carried on the meeting. May some precious souls turn to righteousness, as the fruit of this gathering. May God bless the dear saints who are faithfully laboring to bring sinners to Christ; and while they are watering others, may they be watered themselves. Yours in the gospel hope. P. TANDY.

Mill Village, N. H.

From Sr. E. M. King.

BRO. GRANT:—It is with much pleasure that I peruse the columns of the Crisis from week to week. We have taken it a year and a half, I believe. We subscribed for it six months, and we like it so well, I think we shall always take it. As a paper, I love it above all others. When I do not go to meeting, I can have that and the Bible to read, and am happy in Christ, and feel that I am owned and blessed of him. What a dear Savior he is. How many precious invitations he has given out for us, if we will but come and accept of offered mercy through him that loved and died for us. My heart yearns for those who do not come to him; who do not take Jesus for their pattern and guide. Oh, I want to be more like him, have my "loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness;" and for a shield, "the helmet of salvation." I think the time is not far distant, when Jesus will come and set up his kingdom; then we shall have peace. Then I want to be numbered among his jewels.

I have friends sleeping beneath the sod,—a dear father, an affectionate mother, and two lovely sisters; but I sorrow not as those without hope. They have been lying in the grave many years, but they will come again from the land of the enemy. They will rise to die no more. I must meet them in that happy Eden home, clasp their hands, and see their smiling faces once more. How great would be my grief, if the Master should say to me, Depart from me, for I know you not. I will be more faithful. I need to watch and pray more, lest I enter into temptation. He says the prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

We have had evening meetings once a week, in our neighborhood, all winter, and I do enjoy them much; but while we are having them, the world's people have their balls, festivals, and parties; but my mind is not there. I do not want to join them. I rather go in the house of prayer, than in the house of mirth and feasting. I wish sometimes they would step into our good meetings, and see if they would not enjoy themselves better. They might perhaps, a few of them, be led to seek the Savior before it is too late. Time is swiftly passing away, but how many are they that realize it? I want to be found at my post, ready, and waiting, when Jesus shall come to gather his children home. I ask an interest in your prayers. Your sister in Christ, MRS. ELLEN MARIA KING.

Plainfield, Mass.

From Bro. J. T. Dixon.

BRO. GRANT:—I have lately been visiting, for the first time in some two years, some of the little churches in Rhode Island, and have never found the cause so low before. Worldly-mindedness, no doubt, has much to do with it; but in many instances hobby riding is the cause; and little churches which might do much good if united, are divided and dying out, to the joy of the dividers of our hope. Sinners are not converted; truth, and pure and undefiled religion are not spread abroad, and all of this because these hobby riders are determined that their abstractions, their doctrines of doubtful meaning shall be swallowed by these churches, even if it breaks up their meetings, and closes their houses of worship for all time.

It would not look so bad, if those hobbyists went into the world and gathered their believers from the sinners, who are numerous on every side; then none could complain; but no, they must haunt continually our little feeble churches, as though they were of far more consequence than sinners at large, or members of the large, popular churches.

I preached here at Coventry Centre, three times last Sunday, and last evening. I am to preach again this evening. The effort has been somewhat blessed by our Head. They have not been having meetings for a long time, only as they had preaching. Sunday evening we had the Lord's Supper for the first time in over a year. They have now decided to have regular meetings Sundays, and the Lord's Supper regularly, whether they have preachers or not.

Pray for that church, brethren. There are some good faithful souls. They have a beautiful, commodious hall,—furnished free by Bro. Pardon Peckham, — manufacturer of woolen yarn,—who resides there, and preaches; who has the real good of the cause at heart, and feels for perishing men. There are warm christian hearts, and real pilgrim homes at Brn. Peckham's, Slocum's, Howard's Reynold's and Knowles'. I am your brother in hope, J. T. DIXON.

Coventry, R. I.

From Sr. Betsey Loomis.

BRO. GRANT:—I write you a little of my experience, hoping it may be the means of cheering some weary pilgrim on his journey through this wilderness world.

When young, I read in the Scriptures that Christ would appear again; that he would come in the clouds of heaven; and that a judgment day would come, but thought it to be at a great distance in the future; perhaps a thousand years. But when about sixteen, I became associated with a people who wrested the Scriptures, and spiritualized them so as to make them subservient to their own purpose. They taught that where the Bible says Christ would appear "in the clouds of heaven," it means the clouds of his saints; and that Christ had already made his second appearing, and they were living in the millennium. Being young, and taking their exposition of the Scriptures, I finally imbibed their doctrine. But as I grew to riper age, I cried earnestly to the Lord to lead me in the right path, and teach me by his Holy Spirit, and the Lord heard my cry. Suddenly the light broke upon my mind. I then and there believed Christ would make his second appearance as the Bible teaches, and that the time was not distant. It appeared so nigh, I thought perhaps I might live to see that day; yet I kept it in my own mind, and pondered it in my heart, not telling my views to but one friend for some years.

When Bro. Miller's book fell into my hands, I saw it stated that, according to chronology, Christ would appear in 1843 or 4. This was the first time I ever knew that there was a person on the earth who believed Christ's second coming to be as near as I believed it to be. This greatly strengthened me, and, blessed be God's holy name, my faith grows stronger and stronger. I believe we are almost home, and shall soon see the King in his glory. BETSEY LOOMIS.

Canton, Bradford Co., Penn.

From Sr. L. Annis.

BRO. GRANT:—I have often thought of the command given to Timothy, "Preach the word," and am glad that there are some in these last days that are willing to preach the word, and stand up for the same. I have thought of late that the time has come when men will not bear sound doctrine. On the 24th of April our minister, Dr. J. C. Bywater, gave an exposition of the 24th chapter of Matthew, and the nearness of time. This created a great excitement in the churches. They often ask me, "What do you think of such preaching? and where is the sign of his coming? It may be a thousand years off for what we know." To such, I can only say, according to Matthew 24: 29, 34, that it is nigh, even at the door. Then let us not put it off, but let us have our lamps trimmed and burning, and have oil in our vessels; then, we will not be overtaken as a thief in the night, for we will be the children of the day, and be prepared to enter in to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Then let us

Bear our cross from day to day,
And learn to do as well as say.

Brothers and sisters, stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance, for the Lord is not slack concerning his promises. Then let us be looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God. Let us renew our covenant, and "love one another, for love is of God; and every one that loveth, is born of God, and knoweth God . . . for God is love"; "and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." "Having therefore these promises, . . . let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. Christians, pray for me, for I need much strength, that I fall not into temptation. From your Sister in Christ, LEAH ANNIS.

Victoria, Ill.

BRO. W. B. REED, Yarmouth, N. S., writes: "The tracts that I sent for last winter came safely to hand, and I feel grateful to you for the selection you sent me. They are all gone out doing their work, and I have calls very often for more, but my means are limited at present. The Lord is the same; he can open the way. The ministers are very much stirred up here. They are preaching from every pulpit against the doctrine. Some of them are very bitter in their denunciations against me. One of them, in his discourse a week last Lord's day, said the mildest term he could put upon the doctrine that I taught, was 'hellish cruelty'; and that I was promulgating infidel doctrine, and distributing infidel books. How little they know about the joys of our glorious faith; and how little do they think that they are indirectly causing the inquiry, 'What is this doctrine that they preach so much against?'

Mr. Hill said to me, after he had read 'What is man'? and then heard Mr. —— lecture on the immortality of the soul, 'I am fully convinced that man does not inherit immortality from Adam.'"

Obituaries.

HOPKINS. Died in Seneca Falls, N. Y., June 1, 1865, Bro. Warren Hopkins, aged sixty-two years.

Bro. H. was an old soldier in the cause of truth. For over twenty years he has been looking for, and loving the coming of our blessed Lord to reign on David's throne, to execute justice and judgment in the earth. He was a bold advocate of the truths of the Bible; and with meekness and sobriety worthy of imitation, he always talked of those truths to others. They were deeply rooted in his heart, and though trials and affliction filled up the few last years of his life, his faith never wavered in the sure and faithful promises of God. His last illness was but a few days. He sleeps in Jesus. "Blessed sleep."

May the surviving friends follow his example, that with him they may share the same glorious reward soon to be given. Eld. C. F. Sweet preached the funeral discourse from 1 Thess. 4: 13–18, and then we followed him to where he will rest among the dead, until the trump of God shall wake his saints to enjoy eternal life. G. DILLABAUGH.

SINCLAIR. Fell asleep in Jesus, June 3, 1865, in Holderness, N. H., Tabitha Sinclair, wife of John T. Sinclair, aged thirty years, three months and thirteen days.

The subject of this notice embraced religion some ten years ago. Our dear sister has been a great sufferer for some two years, but she bore it all with christian patience. The doctrine of the soon coming of Jesus and of the resurrection was a great comfort to her. She said to her dear husband while at her bedside, that her sleep in the grave would be short. She leaves a husband, two children, mother, brothers and sisters to mourn. Funeral sermon by Eld. Hiram Stevens. NELSON HARTSHORN.

BARNEY. Died in Lakeville, Ct., Lucy A., wife of Watson Barney, aged twenty-seven years.

She leaves a husband and three children; but her words were, "I am ready to go." Her funeral was attended at the church, and the many tears showed how she was beloved.

Dearest Lucy, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But an enemy bereaved us,
God can all our sorrows heal.

MAXIMILIAN DESIROUS OF ABDICATING.—The New York Times says private commercial letters received in that city say that in the best informed political circles of Europe the belief is general that Maximilian has expressed to his father-in-law, King Leopold, and also to his brother of Austria, the strongest possible desire to abdicate the rickety throne of Mexico. The intimation of this wish at the Tuileries, through these intermediary parties, is at the bottom of much of the excitement in Paris in regard to Mexican affairs generally.—Boston Journal.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool June 3d, Queenstown 4th.

Napoleon was expected to return about the 6th inst.

The Presse says that Prince Napoleon has no intention of leaving France.

Rio Janeiro advices of May 10th state that an alliance has been signed between Brazil, Uruguay and the Argentine Republic, and their forces were marching against Paraguay. It was reported that Buenos Ayres had declared war. The Times thinks there need be no apprehension that the war will be either serious or prolonged.

Liverpool June 8th, Londonderry 9th.

The London Daily News announces that, as the war may now be considered at an end, the Queen's Government is about to refuse any longer to recognize Confederate men-of-war in British ports. Vessels, therefore, claiming that character will be obliged either to depart or assume some other recognized nationality.

The Times makes a similar announcement.

It is stated that the anxiety about Mexican affairs continued undiminished in Paris, and speeches on the subject were anxiously awaited in the Corps Legislatif.

FRANCE.

Napoleon arrived at Beena June 6th, and is expected to reach Paris about the 10th.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says France has given the Washington Government to understand that Mexico is under French protection, and France will not allow any power to attack it, and will deal with fillibusters without mercy.

ITALY.

The Pope, it is stated, will appoint Bishops to the vacant sees, but they will be presented by Victor Emanuel and will acknowledge him as their Sovereign and recognize the Kingdom of Italy. The Pope consents to the suppression of some of the Bishoprics, and the Italian government will have a right to prevent the return of the Prelates whose presence it may consider prejudicial to the public safety.

ITALY. The Florence correspondent of the New York World represents Italy as about to become the scene of great movements, growing out of the Pope's reconciliation with Victor Emanuel. The writer says that the reception everywhere given to the Pope's Encyclical has opened its author's eyes to the impossibility of forcing reactionary dogmas on the mind of Europe. Another enlightening measure was King Victor's banishing certain Bishops nominated by the Pope, and the people's acquiescing in it. The writer says:

"King Victor's envoy, Vegezzi, was sent to Rome, on an intimation that the Pope would be willing to confer with him. He was most kindly received, and treated with the greatest distinction. All sorts of courtesies were showered upon the representative of the sovereign who, but a short year ago, was denounced by all the papal court as worse than an infidel. One of the Pope's crimson state carriages was sent every day to take him to the Vatican.

He returned a week ago—but is to go back shortly to Rome; and it is understood that Cardinal De Andrea, who only six months ago was summoned to answer to the Pope for his recognition of the authority of Victor in Naples, but who is now in the highest favor at Rome, will come to Florence to settle the details of the proposed concordat.

The Pope is himself the active agent in all this extraordinary and most interesting movement. In a moment of enthusiasm he exclaimed the other day to one of the most eminent foreign ministers in Rome:

'By Ascension Day of next year you will see celebrated in Rome such a festival as has not been seen on earth since the days of Charlemagne'

To his intimate counselors and friends Pope Pius IX. constantly observes: 'I mean to win a mighty name in history. I mean to achieve a great result. It is God who inspires me. That done I can die contented!'

The coronation of Victor Emanuel in the capital by the Pope himself is the great deed here spoken of."

THE NAPOLEONIC QUARREL. The foreign papers are filled with the story of the estrangement between the Emperor of France and his cousin, Prince Napoleon, growing out of the latter's speech at Ajaccio, in which, among other things, the former's Mexican policy was plainly condemned. It is said that the Empress Eugenie has long cherished a covert ill-will against the Prince Napoleon because she not only dislikes his republican principles, but she fears that in the case of the Emperor's death he would endeavor to supplant her as regent, even if he did not try to set aside her son. Hence she seized upon the Ajaccio speech as a convenient weapon for undoing its author. A long telegram was immediately dispatched from the Tuileries to the Emperor in Algeria, and in due time came back the following interesting letter:

"Monsieur and very Dear Cousin: I cannot help apprising you of the painful impression I have experienced on reading your speech delivered at Ajaccio.

In leaving you, during my absence, near the Empress and my son, as Vice-President of the Privy Council, I meant to give you a proof of my friendship and my confidence, and I hoped that your presence, your conduct and your language would testify to the union which reigns in our family.

The political programme which you place under the ægis of the Emperor can only serve the enemies of my government. To judgments which I cannot admit, you add sentiments of hatred which are no longer of our day.

In order to know how to apply the ideas of the Emperor to the present time, it is necessary to have passed through the stern trials of responsibility and power. And, besides, are we capable, pigmies as we are, of appreciating at its just value the the grand historical figure of Napoleon? As if standing before a colossal statue, we are unable to view the whole at once. We only see the side which strikes our sight; hence the incompleteness of the reproduction and divergencies of opinions.

But what is clear to the eyes of every one is, that to prevent anarchy in men's minds—that redoubtable enemy to true liberty—the Emperor had established, first in his family, and afterward in his government, that severe discipline which admitted but one will and one action; I cannot henceforth deviate from the same rule of conduct.

Whereon, Monsieur and dear cousin, I pray God to have you in his holy keeping. NAPOLEON."

To this appeared the following brief reply:

Sire: In consequence of the letter of your Majesty, dated May 23d, and of its publication in the Moniteur of this morning, I hereby resign the Vice Presidentship of the Privy Council, and the Presidentship of the Universal Exhibition of 1867.

Pray receive, Sire, the tribute of profound and respectful attachment with which I am your Majesty's most devoted cousin.

Palais Royal, May 27. NAPOLEON JEROME.

And so the quarrel stands. The Paris papers do not dare to take sides either way. The people are uneasy, and it is reported that the garrison of Paris has been doubled within a short time. But it is supposed that the excitement of the affair will yet work itself off in new political movements and schemes.—Boston Journal.

New York, June 13. The Times' Washington dispatch says there is a strong feeling in favor of having a Military Governor for South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi, and of keeping these States under strict military control.

The Herald's dispatch says the President has finally determined to appoint Judge Parsons Provisional Governor of Alabama.

Newbern, N. C., June 16. Intelligence from northern Georgia, and on the lines of Sherman's late march, states that many people are dying for the want of food, and general starvation is apprehended.

New York, June 19. The U. S. steamship James Adger, from Cape Haytien 13th inst., arrived to-night.

Cape Haytien had been in a state of siege for seven days, being almost surrounded by National troops. This is the last place held by the rebels, and peace and order prevail elsewhere. Meanwhile there was no government in the city, the counter-revolution having obliged the provisional government established by the rebels to fly. The rebel general has declared the provisional government dissolved, and himself the executive. Order was pretty well maintained however. All dwellings and stores had been closed for ten days. A good deal of firing of cannon goes on every day, but without loss on either side. The rebel general threatens that, if obliged to leave, he will first destroy the city; but it was thought he would not be permitted to do so in the presence of two American and one English vessels of war now in port.

☞ Over a hundred and twenty thousand soldiers have been disbanded within three weeks, and eighty thousand have, since the 1st of June, passed over the railroads from Washington.

JEFF. DAVIS IN PRISON.—The great criminal appears to be already suffering the penalty of his crimes. His appetite has failed him, "tired nature's sweet restorer" refuses to bless him, and his days and nights pass on in wretched wakefulness. Those who saw him on Monday report him sitting in his bed, his brow furrowed, his cheeks sunken, his eyes listless, gazing on the blank walls of his cell as if he saw a great horror before him, and a pallid terror behind him. His nerves are gone; he starts at the slightest noise like a fevered child; his physical organism is prostrated almost beyond recuperation. His physicians, after consultation, imposed absolute charnel-house quiet in his casemate, and now the guards of the prisoner pace his cell in slippers, that their foot-falls may not give a sound. The prisoner never reads, never talks except to utter querulous complaint, and this last he indulges in much less frequently than he did.—Richmond letter.

THE HOOSAC TUNNEL.—The work at the Hoosac tunnel is at present progressing at the rate of sixty feet a month, but new machinery and water power is expected to multiply this rate three or four times. The central shaft is about two and a half miles from the eastern entrance, in a straight line, and five by the mountain road. The shaft has now been sunk to the depth of 110 feet, and when completed it will be 1020. The west shaft has been sunk to the grade, a depth of over 300 feet, and on both faces nearly 400 feet have been tunneled. The derricks at both shafts are driven by steam, and the stone is raised in elevators, suspended by wire ropes, and run off to the dumping places on rails. The workmen are divided into three gangs, and the labor is continued night and day.

"NOW MESSIAH IS COMING!"—So exclaims the Jews at Jerusalem, as they see the work progressing preparatory to their again inhabiting the Land of Canaan.

An exchange has the following item, which is of interest to every child of God: Jerusalem is undergoing resuscitation. Many public improvements have lately been made, and the population has been increased by a great influx of Jews who have fled from northern Africa. It is said that the Jews are much concerned about this gathering up the stones and making broad the ways of Jerusalem; they say, "Now we are certain Messiah's coming is very near."

CHURCH FAIRS.—The Presbyterian says: "We are glad to see it announced that the Grand Jury of New York have published a card, notifying the managers of fairs and festivals held by church societies, that the practice of disposing of their goods by lottery is contrary to the statute, and must not be persisted in. As this reprehensible practice is still pursued by some churches, it is well that they should be reminded that lotteries in the sanctuary are quite as unlawful as lotteries out of it."

BAPTISM.—A writer in a recent number of the Western Recorder, in speaking on baptism says: "Such men as Dr. Carson, Hinton, Campbell, of Scotland, Chalmers, Luther, Calvin, and the hundred great and learned men who edit the Edinburgh Encyclopedia, and a host of others, equally great and learned, too tedious to mention here, all agree in the fact that the word baptize should be rendered immerse, and that baptism by immersion was the ancient practice."

SPEAK NO ILL.

Nay, speak no ill; a kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind;
And oh! to breathe each tale we've heard,
Is far beneath a noble mind.
Full oft a better seed is sown,
By choosing thus the kinder plan;
For if but little good be known,
Still let us speak the best we can.

Give me the heart that fain would hide—
Would fain another's faults efface;
How can it pleasure human pride
To prove humanity but base?
No; let us reach a higher mood—
A nobler estimate of man;
Be earnest in the search for good,
And speak of all the best we can.

Then speak no ill, but lenient be
To other's failings as your own.
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known;
For life is but a passing day,
No lip may tell how brief its span;
Then, oh! the little time we stay,
Let's speak of all the best we can.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

Or, Sectarianism opposed to Reform.

NUMBER NINE.

"Behold how good and pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

How beautiful is christian love!
How sweet the fellowship we prove
Of kindred hearts—in Jesus one—
O, this is heaven on earth begun!

To purify and reform the world is the grand aim of the church. Her organization is adapted to secure this end. Within her pale there is room for every virtue, and for the cultivation of every grace of individual and social character. The Savior said to his disciples, "Ye are the light of the world"; "Ye are the salt of the earth.' This light must shine upon the world, through all the arrangements and acts of the church. All her ends should be accomplished, in being faithful to such a work. She must not come under any influences which cripple her in such a work. Interest and duty should always point in the same direction, for God's army. Whenever she has ends to answer that can be answered only by unholy alliances, she has fallen into a false position, and is far on the road to apostasy. When party aggrandizement becomes with her a dearer object than purity and efficiency in the work of a world's redemption, the "light of the world" is hid under a sectarian bushel. A union between the church and the world, especially when the church enters into such a union by compromising with some great wrong, always destroys the power of the church.

In this country, we have had some disastrous illustrations of this fact. The institution of slavery has long overshadowed the politics and religion of the nation. The denominational organizations of the land have come under its power, by attempting to rival each other in popular favor. These organizations extend over both the north and the south. A sect which repudiates slavery can not live in the south, and so the spirit of party extension tempts each sect, which would travel southward, to bend to the power of slavery. Sectarian aggrandizement and the spirit of christianity says—"Break every yoke, and let the oppressed go free." The spirit of party says—"If you do, your denomination can not travel further southward." The Spirit of God says—"Preach deliverance to the captive." The spirit of party says—"If you do, all these rich slaveholders will join the opposite sect." Dr. Cox once said, on the floor of the New School General Assembly, when speaking against an anti-slavery resolution,—"Our denominational ship is now loaded down with unpopular reforms, and if we take this anti-slavery cause on board, we shall sink." The cause he acknowledged to be the cause of humanity and justice, but the denomination must be preserved, and so justice and humanity must be ignored! Here was a development of the antagonism between the sect and the cause of a world's progress.

The unsuccessful efforts to get northern churches to declare against slavery have been protracted by the party organizations. Every church, which is confined to the north in its denominational organization, has long since taken ground against slavery; while all those denominations which have party interests to subserve, south of Mason and Dixon's line, are still bowing to slavery, or hesitating to denounce it.* If all the christians in the northern states had been united in local independent churches in each place, they would have borne a united testimony against slavery long before this. Such testimony would have revolutionized northern public opinion, and brought the masses of the people up to the ballot box to vote against the murderous system. To the thoughtful reader, this statement does not need a long argument in its support. Such persons have witnessed the struggles of the leaders of each sect to hold the people back from earnest action against slavery, and they have readily understood the motive of such leaders. It is the denominational system which has enabled these leaders to do so much against the cause of freedom.

Another of the worst evils of sectarianism is the suppression of freedom of religious thought and inquiry. Each sect has staked out the limits of thought, for its adherents, on certain subjects. However honest or earnest may be the conviction of the wisest and purest men that it has taken a mistaken view on this subject, they must be silent. The Baptist, who has come to regard restricted communion as an error, proclaims his convictions on pain of extremest ecclesiastical penalties. The Methodist, who dares to differ from Wesley and Watson, on certain subjects, is cast out as a heretic. Such men as C. G. Finney are required to restrain their freedom of inquiry, and the utterance of what they regard as holiest truth, or be cast out of the Presbyterian church. A bann is thus laid upon freedom of religious thought, which, in its persecuting power, is second only to that of the papal church herself. She, in modern times, launches her thunder against the spirit only, and has ceased to burn the body. Each sect in christendom will follow with its denunciations and prejudices, into the very sanctuary of private character, every adherent who deserts his creed, as remorselessly as will Rome herself. Every man who grasps a new thought on certain subjects, which proves to be out of harmony with the creed he has professed, is pointed out as unsound, and persecuted to the loss of reputation, if it be in the power of his old associates to compass the destruction of his religious character. This practice of the sects chains the religious mind of the world to the past ages. It supposes that the Fathers had attained to the summit of truth and wisdom; and he who even proposes to look beyond them, on certain subjects, is to be denounced as a dangerous man. This feature of sectarianism is beginning to drive the most independent and vigorous minds out of the sects. Such men feel that religion is not, in her mental efforts, to grope forevermore among the tombs of the past; but that christianity breathes into the soul an impulse of progress which no creeds or Fathers have a right to restrain. If men can not give up their souls to that deep longing after right and advancement, which true religion ever inspires within the sects, those of largest growth and deepest faith in truth will allow themselves to be cast out of their narrow enclosure. Such minds are the living elements of the church of every age. Whenever religion has been carried captive by the world's corruptors, they alone have come forward as her deliverers. The church needs their presence and their work to restrain her constant tendency to stagnate into mere formalism. And when the narrow rules of factions cast them forth, they have cast out precisely the propelling forces without which they, like dead matter, ever seek a state of rest. The church can never remain stationary in its convictions or applications of truth, without becoming corrupt. The changing condition of society from age to age demands new developments and applications of truth; and, unless the church will conform to these developments, and make these applications of truth, she becomes an obstacle, instead of a help, to the world's progress. This, a sectarian church can never do; because "finalities" in theology, government, and practice, are the general law of all sects.

The builders in the sect map out in the creed not only their own belief on various subjects, but the conditions of membership in the sect for coming ages. The moment one steps a hair's breadth beyond their established line of orthodoxy, he is either driven back, or driven out. Any one who fails to come precisely up to the demands of this line of orthodoxy, is not to be admitted into the sect; so that, in the main, the same round of thought is to be traveled by all the minds in the sect for ages after it has been formed. This element of sectarianism thoroughly cripples the freedom of the ministry. A minister in any one of the sects, who dares to express thoughts which conflict with certain points in the creed, or certain practices of the sect, is sure to lose his place, and to be hunted from his standing in the denomination. His ministerial character is thus ruined. He is silenced unless he dare to preach upon his own responsibility.* His living is lost, because of his faithfulness to the highest convictions of his soul, and he is thrown upon the world a disgraced and ruined man. But few have the courage and energy to recover from such a blow, and, of course, but few ministers will brave such a fate; and so the sects continue to travel round and round in the old ruts of thought dug by the grandfathers of the past. Who can wonder that the church fails to conquer the world, under a system so subversive of all vigorous freedom of thought as this? Who can wonder that a ministry so inefficient, which is compelled to forever rehash the thoughts of their dead fathers as the food for their own and their hearers' souls?

* This article was penned previously to the emancipation edict, and when the anti-slavery sentiment was unpopular.

* As an illustration of this truth, instance the expulsion of the Rev. B. T. Roberts, one of the most faithful of the faithful.

A LETTER FROM CHLOE LANKTON.

A lady of this city, who has herself been a great sufferer for about thirty years, lately sent a contribution to Chloe Lankton, and received the following touching reply. The letter, though not long, was begun May 3d, and ended May 23d, no less than twenty days having been necessary to commit it to paper, so difficult and painful is it for this lone sufferer even to use her fingers. The letter tells its own story. We publish it as the best reply we can give to numerous inquiries concerning the writer. We shall be most happy to be the medium, as heretofore, of communicating to her the gifts of God's people, and hope she will not be forgotten even in these times. We fear that she has been rather lost sight of the last two or three months:—Philadelphia, Sunday School Times.

"May 3d, 1864.

MY DEAR SISTER SUFFERER:—I received your kind letter in due time—with five dollars enclosed. I do thank you for it—even more than I can tell; for I am entirely dependent upon charity for my whole support, and my expenses are heavy.

I am a poor, lone, helpless sufferer, stripped of earthly relatives, and left alone, all alone, on this bed of extreme suffering. I have very heavy trials to pass through, and my poor, lone heart is indeed heavy with sorrow. O how I miss those dear loved parents that stood by me, and comforted me in my deep sorrow and distress for so many long years! But they are gone, and I feel my loneliness more and more. I have had no relative with me since my dear parents died—six years ago. I have a woman to live with me. The trouble and anxiety that I have about getting kind, suitable help in my helpless condition, is one of my heaviest trials—I dread so to change and have a stranger. But God will support me. His grace is sufficient. I feel that I enjoy the sweet consolations of religion, and am resigned to the will of my heavenly Father.

I have been an invalid thirty-three years and a half, (was eighteen years old when I was taken down,) and it will be thirty years the first of July coming, since I have been wholly confined to this bed of pain and weariness. I have not been able to walk a step during these thirty years, or even to sit in a chair to have my bed made. My disease is incurable, and very distressing; my suffering is constant, and dreadful, far beyond description. None but my Savior knows how much I suffer. I want to tell you about this dreadful disease, but can't now, but will try to write you some of the particulars, if I can, at some future time, if you wish to have them. I was very much interested in your account of yourself. You can hardly imagine how much you have been in my mind since I received that precious letter, or how deeply I sympathize with you in your long and severe afflictions. Words are powerless to express the sympathy I feel for you, my dear suffering friend. Well do I know how to pity the life-long invalid. I am so glad you have kind relatives and friends to be with you and take care of you, and that you have property of your own to get what you need for your comfort—for it is indeed a heavy trial to be sick and poor too, and to lack the many little comforts that the weary invalid so much needs. I do not suffer from want now as I once did. Since that little sketch of my history was written,* I have become more widely known, and God has raised up many kind friends, so that I have had more things for my comfort than I used to have. I manage by strict economy to pay all my expenses with what is given to me by visitors that call on me, and what is sent to me from strangers at a distance. How much I thank you, my dear friend, for the kind present you sent me. It added much to my comfort. May God reward you for it. It is a long time since I commenced this letter, but I get so tired every day, and have been so feeble and distressed, that I could not write. It is very painful for me to write, as it increases my sufferings greatly. I am still a great sufferer, and must be while I live. O, such constant, burning, stinging pains in those terrible tumors! My spine disease is distressing, but it is nothing compared to what I suffer with my other complaints. I am always worse in winter than in summer. I am now as usual—about as I have been for a few weeks. Sometimes I am much worse than at others. I have suffered much by writing this, but I wanted to answer yours. I would love to hear from you again, and many thanks. God be with you, my suffering friend.

"NOTHING BUT LEAVES."

"Nothing but leaves,—no gathered sheaves
Of life's fair ripening grain;
We sow our seeds, lo! tares and weeds,
Words, idle words for earnest deeds,
We reap with toil and pain,—
Nothing but leaves."

How sad the thought, that when the Lord of the vineyard shall come to receive the fruits thereof, any of his professed disciples will be found bearing "nothing but leaves"! How plainly has he taught us that unless we bear fruit, we may never expect to share the joys of his kingdom. Though we may speak, as it were, with the tongue of an angel, and our professions may be as high as heaven, yet except we abide in Christ, and he in us, we shall hear him say at last, "I never knew you."

In that great day, how vain to all will appear an empty name! Then will the multitudes of those who have professed to love the Lord, but lived in self-indulgence, bewail their folly, and mourn over a life wasted. But it is too late! They have sown to the flesh; they shall of the flesh reap corruption. God forbid that this should be our lot! but let us adorn our profession with a well-ordered life and godly conversation; let us be filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are of Christ; so shall we be his disciples, and when he appears we shall not be confounded before him.

"Ah! who shall thus the Master meet,
Bearing but withered leaves?
Ah! who shall at the Savior's feet
Before the awful judgment seat
Lay down for golden sheaves—
Nothing but leaves."

OVERWORKED.

Man was made to labor. Every element of his being, his natural adaptedness to labor, his undeveloped powers, his very love of labor, and his own happiness here and hereafter proclaim this necessity of his being. He who idles away his hours, and lives a dronish, lazy life, is a curse to community, his friends, his God and to himself! With so much to do, every one can find something good and useful to engage his heart and his head. But the great difficulty with most men is overwork. Taken as a whole, the American people plead guilty of the charge. During the last four years, we have all been overtasked. The North and the South, the black and the white, the male and the female, all alike have borne heavy burdens. The war has driven us into desperation, sacrificed our health and left us in a general prostration. In peace as well as in war we are prone to excessive exertion. In every department of human labor we sacrifice our health, and consequently our happiness, to the god of gain! This sin lies at all our doors. The tendency of the present age takes this direction! Our American life is all go ahead. We are hurried through every thing. We can hardly find time to eat and sleep, study and think. The business of life is all hurly-burly, haste and hope. We are clearly overdone by the allotted tasks of life. We overstudy, oversleep and overeat. This overdoing everything hardly affords an opportunity to complete any thing. Man was not made to be dragged into duty at this rate. And our feeble constitution, ill health, and premature death, are the natural results of our living. Before we really learn to graduate our labor and our rest, our profits and pleasures, we dip our feet in the turbid waters of death. We almost bridge over the social and devotional elements of our nature.

It is with difficulty that you can coax a man to church. If they do come, in too many cases, they are dragged there merely by a sober sense of duty, all drilled out by the pressure of manual pursuit during the week. Their eye is dull, ear heavy, and there is no sentiment for song in the soul. Socially, morally, religiously they are dead, and there is no genuine life in them. Now what's all this for? What's the matter? Religion and business are all out of joint. This overworking policy does not pay. If followed, it will rule out religion, sap the very life, overcome health, and ruin the whole man. Sooner or later we all come to see the folly of overtaxing the mind and body. The quicker the better. As sure as the needle to the pole, is well directed, useful labor to the health and happiness of man. Shall we then abuse and destroy, or rightly employ that, we may enjoy the ability God has given us? Sometimes we overpray and preach. We pray too much and too long, when, instead of arousing the thought and elevating the feelings to communion with heaven, we go off to the Jews, reading essays to the Almighty, and our congregations turn away into the dreamy land of Nod.

Again, when we lack for systematic thought, we turn to preaching over what has already been spoken. Short sermons and short prayers do the most execution. Sometimes we overwrite. Generally, those long spun-out articles are passed by, while those that come right to the point are read. Let us labor diligently, pray to the purpose, and blend pleasure, business and religion together, so that we may be useful while we are happy.

DON'T REPEAT IT.

How often has my heart been pained within me, when hearing a scandalous report about a brother or sister. Let us pray God to help us keep the doors of our mouths, that we may not repeat any evil report. How many innocent persons have suffered in consquence of false reports, when, if we did not repeat what was told us no harm would be done. What if others do wrong? does it make it any better to tell A B C of it, and get a whole town to help you keep it? Now let us as brethren and sisters, who are looking for the Lord, try to be peacemakers, and be in the way of doing our duty, and when he comes be found obeying his commands.

JEWELS.

Said a young man, who has recently entered the service of Christ, "How beautiful christians are. I love to look at their shining countenances. The people of the world sometimes meet me with a smile and sometimes with a frown, but those who love God, smile, and smile on, forever."

The graces of the Spirit are indeed lovely adornings, and sometimes we see believers who are following so closely after Him who is altogether lovely, we cannot doubt their relationship to him. They are truly lights shining in dark places; truth and joy make them radiant. Is it not well to look often at such, with fervent thanksgivings that God's grace is thus manifested in a world of sin? Yonder is a man who has loved his God for many years,—each day better and better, as he has followed on to know him. How firm he has stood amid opposing influences, ungodly neighbors, and severe trials. What treasures of knowledge he has found in his Bible, and how unflinchingly he advocates those blessed truths. Do you think him stern and unyielding? Listen while he speaks of Jesus and the pardon he has bought for sinners, and you will believe there is love and tender sympathy in his heart. What makes his voice choke with sobs as he talks of the resurrection morning? Sorrowing, yet rejoicing in hope, he has gathered clusters of promises for comfort in these days of his bereavement. With holy trust he stands on sure foundations. And there is one who delights in seeking out the poor, and eagerly, perseveringly caring for their welfare. When a convicted one says, tremblingly, "Pray for me," the answer is, "Your case has long been borne before the Lord, and shall be still." And for the impenitent, the sweet invitation "Come," is ever uttered winningly and persuasively, as if the salvation of the perishing was precious. Love in the heart makes the head skillful in devising methods of reaching even the indifferent.

I think of one away among the mountains, who has in life's young morning learned by sweet experience that there is a Savior for sinners. Gladly leaving frivolity and worldliness, she has entered the Lord's vineyard, and meekly, but earnestly and faithfully, she tells those she meets of Jesus. Among adverse influences, with the tide against her, she yet yearns to have others know what forgiving love is, and, looking to Jesus, she goes courageously and joyfully forward.

The voice of prayer is heard in yonder cottage. A man who a short time ago was wild and reckless now holds communion with the Great Father, into whose family he has been adopted. He has found joy in the cross-bearing way; for though his workmen are around him, and once he would have shrunk from kneeling in their midst to pray, it is now his delight; and refreshed from the wells of salvation, he goes forth to his labors, singing of the home which faith shows him.

When the truth of God is deeply implanted in the heart, what energy and vigor is given to the life.

Sceptic, tell me not again that the world would be as well if the religion of Jesus were not in it. Look at that bereaved one, who, having laid away in the grave, one after another of those dearer than her own life, represses the wish to die with them; drives away the temptation to hide from the world, and indulge in bitter grief, and rouses to works of usefulness, heartily thanking God that she may do loving work for others. See the timid made brave, the desponding glad, the once wretched and sinful now walking in the highway of holiness, joyfully looking upward through tears of penitence, and saying, Abba, Father. See the determination to triumph over sin; the climbing from ascent to ascent; and tell me if there is not cause for joy on earth and in heaven. O ye happy, but struggling ones, who are being tried and purified like gold, I try to think of your entrance into the presence of your Savior. Imagination fails; but I know the "Well done" will sound sweeter than any words that ever before fell on your ears. I know your adoring gratitude will be great when "God shall bid you welcome there,

And Christ shall smile your tears away," in the day when he makes up his jewels.

EXTRACT FROM STILLING.

(Sixty Years Ago.)

Another important thing, which I have already hinted at, that must yet be added, before the reign of peace can be established, is, the entering in of the fullness of the Gentiles, and the conversion of Israel, connected with their return into their father's country. Commonly, the fullness of the Gentiles is understood to mean a certain number of men, who out of the different Gentile nations have been converted to Christ, and will also be partakers of his kingdom; therefore many believed that this kingdom could not commence, until the gospel had been preached to all Gentile nations; but this is not the true idea of the apostle Paul, when he (Rom. 11 : 25, 26) says, "Blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in; and so all Israel shall be saved." By this he will not be understood that the blindness of Israel should continue until the gospel would be preached to all nations of the world, and from among them, all souls that would be converted to Christ should be gathered. No, if the Jews would not be converted before this, and return into their own land, then the glorious reign of peace could not begin any sooner, because both are closely connected together. In order to comprehend the right idea of the apostle Paul, we must explain him by the words of Jesus Christ, in Luke 21 : 24." "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." The fullness of the Gentiles is therefore the fullnese of the time during which the christians from among the Gentile nations, namely, the christian monarchies, that are all of Gentile origin, rule upon the earth, and the Jews be their subjects; so long also as Jerusalem is trodden down; but then it will be rebuilt again, and become the residence of the great King of the whole earth.

The fullness of time, therefore, is that period which begins with the first conversion of the emperor Constantine, and ends with the casting into the lake of fire of the man of sin. If we now cast a look upon the political and religious coddition of the present time, we find that the prince of darkness has made his first attempt to form, or develop, the man of sin, that is, the beast out of the bottomless pit; but the man whom he has selected as such, lacks prudence (Napoleon I.); he aimed too quick, and in too destructive a manner, at the universal monarchy, to have succeeded. Had he been more of a shrewd politician than he was of a warrior, he might have probably gained his object. In view of the political affairs, there are now great events just before us, which to the clear eye of him, who being led by the Spirit of prophecy, pays attention to the signs of the times,—promise much light.

As regards the condition of christendom, though we find everything everywhere in a state of fomenting, everything presses and labors onward to the time of the great separation between true christians and antichristians; yet the thing works too slow. The Laodicean mind is too lukewarm; there must come more warmth into the mass, if anything is to be accomplished. And in regard to this, our Lord will prepare the way. He says, "I am come to send a fire on the earth," and we answer, Amen! So come, Lord Jesus! We wish that the fire was burning already!

CEASE REPINING.

Cease, oh cease, vain heart repining,
For what earth can never give;
Rest unbroken when rejoicing,
Makes our life so sweet to live.

Oh how sweet the thought consoling,
When each weary day is gone,
That the night is fast approaching
Which precedes a cloudless morn.

When with songs of rapture mingling,
We shall stand around the throne;
With no fear, no care, not doubting
That eternal life's our own.

We have loved ones softly sleeping
In the narrow house of clay;
O'er them bend we, often weeping,
Sighing for the dawn of day;

When in death no more they'll slumber,
As they do while here we sigh,
But shall rise to swell the number
Which are never more to die.

PRAY FOR THE GIFT OF THE SPIRIT.

The one thing needful for us all is the presence and influence of the Holy Spirit. How few can say they have never grieved the Spirit; and what a vast number now feel that they do not enjoy religion as they once did; that they are not now "as in months past," when the "candle" of the Lord "shined upon" their "head." We find that we can do nothing without the Spirit. We can neither walk in the way of wisdom, nor have the influence upon others to lead them out of darkness into light, without this divine presence. We go "mourning without the sun" while we feel the absence of the Spirit. Then let us pray in earnest,

"Return, O holy Dove, return,
Sweet messenger of rest;
I hate the sins that made thee mourn,
And drove thee from my breast."

Help us to hear and obey thy word. Then come, according to the promise, and make thine ABODE with us. Not merely visit us for an hour or a day, but abide with us FOREVER.

We want to be filled with all the fulness of God. Then we can love him with all the heart, and our neighbor as ourself.

"WE WILL PRAY FOR YOU."

These words being often expressed by christians in their associations with each other, many times the effect which should follow their utterance is perhaps never realized. That there is a power in them, when they are uttered with sincerity from a full heart, and that they do give great comfort and strength to the child of God, in passing through the ordeal of trial and temptation, is certainly true.

Never was I more deeply impressed with this fact than when I was about to leave home, a few days since, on business, as our little Minnie of four years was questioned by her mother as to what we should do for papa, when he was almost sick and had to go away? For a moment the question bothered her, as was evident, as thought was depicted playing on her countenance; and then with streaming eyes and choked utterance she exclaimed, "We will pray for you." How expressive, thought I, the manner in which the words were addressed, welling up from the fountain of the heart, and mingled with tears. And as the little incident recurred to my mind in the duties of the day, I could but pray that God would incline his people not only to pray more, but sincerely for each other, and that oftener their language be enforced with tears; having the divine example of him "who, in the day of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared."

Pittstown. JOHN AGAN.

AN EGYPTIAN RAILROAD.

A railroad from Cairo to Suez takes you in six hours near to the place at which the best authorities have concluded that the children of Israel crossed over. So I have been there and come back in one day; and my stay in the desert was quite long enough. Its utter desolation stands before me as an indelible picture. There is no possibility of forgetting it. Ninety miles' ride out of sight of any green thing or any object of beauty is an experience that need not be repeated; yet it was, for the same miles must be traveled in coming back. Through this desert a railroad runs to connect with the steamships on the Red Sea.

The desert is as level as a western prairie, but what a contrast in every other respect! There a rich soil is watered by timely rains—here no rain, and no soil to be watered. And yet if the same soil was transfered to America, by the action of frosts and rains it would be covered with greenness in a single year, and with a soil in a single generation that would repay cultivation. Little do we appreciate the rich blessing which our winter frosts bring to us in aiding the work of profitable and prolific culture. No rains, no frost, no overflowing of the Nile, and hence there is nothing but pulverized mineral substance in all this wide waste.

The desert is largely covered with fragments of flints—some angular, some rounded, some sharp—from the weight of half an ounce to that of half a pound. This must have made the journeying of the children of Israel—barefooted as they were—not a little uncomfortable; and somewhere in Deuteronomy the Divine goodness in preserving them is referred to as an occasion of gratitude: "Neither did thy foot swell these forty years." The forty years were spent between the Red Sea and the Jordan; but the surface there is similar to this, and as the stopping of the train at different points gave me an opportunity to gather a handful or two of flints as a memento of the desert, I could easily realize how great a mercy it was that Moses called to their memory in these words.

There are a few mud villages along this route, peopled principally by those who are employed in keeping the track clear of sand, and doing other sorts of work on the road. A railroad, even through the desert, carries with it population. But shall I tell you how these rude people live? That would be impossible. I may perhaps approximate to it. Their huts are about ten or twelve feet square —I give the average size—seven feet high, flat roof or no roof at all. Some straw on the ground constitutes the bed. And in a country where fleas abound, and where the common people seem never to have recovered from the plague spoken of in Exodus 8 : 17, where water is so scarce that it seems to be used on neither person nor clothing; and where the sun, and the sand, and lack of washing give half the men, women, and children blind eyes and sore ones; you can fill out the picture without further aid, as well as if I painted it for you.—Israelite Indeed.

MINISTERIAL DIGNITIES.

It would seem that at a very early period of the Christian era, ministers favored the idea that to honor them was an evidence of piety; hence the appellations of Reverend, Father, Lord, etc., were introduced to mark different grades of elevation among them. These have been abridged by Protestants against Catholic abuses; especially by dissenters from the Episcopal church. Since the Reformation, a conviction has prevailed that such appellations and distinctions were unscriptural and anti-christian. But notwithstanding this general conviction, pride and ambition are still at work to renew the customs of the Romish hierarcy. The terms Reverend and Doctor are becoming potent. Reverend is the common appellation for all preachers of the gospel, and D. D. to designate such as are most learned. If the term Reverend means anything, it means that the man is to be revered; a bold contradiction of God's word to "cease from man, and call no man Rabbi, or master." God is holy and reverend, and he will not give his glory to angel or human being. Paul claimed no honor. He placed himself on equality with other disciples, requiring them to follow him no further than he followed Christ. I wonder that men are not ashamed to be styled reverend, especially if they feel their liability to be overtaken in a fault as other men. Elihu was afraid to speak flatteringly to or of men, lest he should offend God.

If D. D. means simply a teacher of divinity, it may be properly applied to every minister of Christ; but if we make it a mark of distinction to indicate a higher order of ministers, it is an aristocratic usurpation.—R. M. in Am. Baptist.

RESISTING TEMPTATION.—Frequent and fierce is the devil in his attacks, on all sides besieging our salvation. We therefore must watch and be sober, and every where fortify ourselves against his assault; for if he but gain some slight vantage ground, he goes on to make for himself a broad passage, and by degrees introduces all his forces.—Chrysostom.

☞ Always suspect a man who affects great softness of manner, an unruffled evenness of temper, and an enunciation studied, slow and deliberate. These are all unnatural. The most successful knaves are usually of this description—as smooth as razors dipped in oil. They affect the innocence of the dove, which they have not, in order to hide the cunning of the serpent, which they have.

THE BAD GIRL.

She does just as she pleases, has her own way in every thing. Her parents seem to have lost all control over her—if they ever had any. Her will is her own. Self rules the day. She goes out when she pleases; chooses what books, papers, or company she pleases; runs about in stores, shops, houses, and the street school when she pleases; dresses as she pleases; gratifies her passions and appetites when she pleases; plays, gads, and gabbles about on the Sabbath, when she pleases; she comes to the table and family prayers when she pleases, and stays away when she pleases; obeys and disobeys when she pleases. Her will is her own, self the governing principle, the controlling power!

Parent, is this the way you train up your little daughter? Have you no misgivings? no fears?

HOW TO PICK HUCKLEBERRIES.

When I first knew Mr. John Horsely, he was an old white-haired man, and very rich. As he seemed never to have been in any great business, such as merchants and speculators now engage in, and as he was never accused of being a dishonest man, it was always a mystery to me how he came to be so rich. I knew that his father was a poor country clergyman, and that John could have received no property from him. Meeting my friend one day, when our conversation happened to turn on the subject of gathering property, I ventured to ask him how it was that he had been so successful in life.

"When I was a boy," said he, "my father was a poor minister. We lived very plain, and dressed very plain, but that never troubled us. We always had enough of something to eat, and my mother was one who would contrive to have her children dressed neatly if not richly. One day when I was a little fellow, several boys and girls came along, on their way to pick huckleberries. They invited me to go with them. And when I saw their bright faces and their little baskets, and the bright afternoon, I wanted to go with them. So I went into the house and asked my mother. I saw she sympathized with me, but said I must go and ask father."

"And where is father?"

"Up in the study, of course."

Up I bounded, hat in hand, and gently knocked at the door. He bade me come in.

"Well, Johnny, what is your wish?"

"I want, sir, to go with the children and pick huckleberries."

"Where are you going?"

"Only to Johnson's hill, sir."

"How many children are there?"

"Seven besides myself. Please let me go."

"Well, be a good boy, and use no bad words."

Away I scampered, and had just got to the bottom of the stairs, when my father called me back. O dear, it's all over now; he's going to take it all back, I said to myself. Trembling, I again stood in the doorway, expecting to have permission withdrawn.

"Johnny," said my father, with a peculiar smile, "I have a word of advice to give you. You will find the berries growing on bushes standing in clumps, all over the lot. The children will pick a few minutes at one place, and then go off to another, in hopes of finding better picking, and thus they will spend half of the afternoon in roaming from one place to another. Now, my advice to you is, that when you find pretty fair picking, stick to that spot, and keep picking there. Your basket at night will show whether my advice is good or not."

Well, sir, I followed my father's advice, and though the children would wander about and cry out, 'O, Johnny, here's a world of them,' and 'here is splendid picking,' and 'here you can fill your basket in less than no time,' yet I stuck to my 'fair picking' place. When we got through at night, to the astonishment of every one, and my own no less, it was found that I had nearly twice as many berries as any other one. They all wondered how it was; but I knew. And that was the lesson that made me a rich man. Whenever I have found fair picking,' I have stuck to it. Others have changed occupation and business, and have moved from one place to another. I have never done so, and I attribute all my success to the lesson by which I learned to pick huckleberries.—Rev. John Todd, D. D.

A WORD TO BOYS.

Come, boys, and listen a few moments to your uncle. You have now arrived at an age when you must begin to think about doing something for yourselves. The first piece of advice I have for you is, to do everything well which you undertake. There is but little danger of your being too particular in this respect. A boy who is careful to draw a straight line on his slate will be very likely to make a straight line through life. There is no position in life in which you will not be called upon to be as exact as possible. Step into a jeweler's shop, and see how careful the workman must be in finishing up the article he holds in his hands. Visit a shipyard, and the man with the broad axe must learn to hew on the line, or be dismissed. You think of being a clerk. Well, remember that a mistake there is little less than a crime. I never saw a man who was very particular about his affairs that was not successful. How exact is a military officer in the command of a body of men. A clumsy sailor will never rise to the command of a ship.

Your older friends tell you that boys are very fast at the present day, but I can remember fast boys long before you were born; but they never made solid and useful men. Very few of them lived to be forty years old. Nobody ever trusted them. They never filled any important office or station. They usually became small men, because they had no capital in their heads with which to work out a living. Out of fifty of that class I do not know of one who ever accomplished much.—Mother's Journal.

FROM UNCLE TOBY.

A LESSON FOR THE JUVENILES.

"In the mouths of two or three witnesses every word shall be established."

(Letter from Hon. Orin Fowler to his Nephew.)

In this letter I will mention one very bad custom which many boys begin early to indulge, because others indulge in it, and because they think it will make men of them. It is the custom of using tobacco, that foulest, dirtiest weed ever put into the mouth of mortals. Now, my dear John, I advise you never to use or touch this vile weed. I will give you six reasons for this advice.

First: The use of tobacco will injure your health. Second, it will injure your mind. Third, it may lead you to drunkenness and the ruin of your character. Fourth, it will waste your property. Some persons spend for tobacco, in thirty years, money enough to buy a farm. Fifth, it will undermine your constitution and may bring you to an early grave. Sixth, it may ruin your soul forever.

For these good reasons, I hope you will remember now, never to meddle with tobacco.

Your affectionate uncle TOBY.

GOOD FOR EVIL.

A little boy came to his mamma one rainy afternoon, as he returned from school, and said, "Mamma, may I go just down the street with a little girl that goes to our school?"

She replied, "No, my son, it rains."

He said, "Why ma, I must go."

"Well, then," said his mother, "Go, if you must."

On his return, she asked if the little girl was a favorite of his.

He said, "O, no; she treats me very ill, worse than any other scholar in school."

"Then why do you wish to go with her?"

He said, "You have taught me that you must do good to them that despitefully use us, and she had a chair to take home, and I did not know of any other way to do her a kindness, so I thought I would carry it for her, and that would be returning good for evil."—S. S. Advocate.

WHAT OF THE DAY?

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

A sound of tumult troubles all the air,
Like the low thunders of a sultry sky,
Far-rolling ere the downright lightnings glare:
The hills blaze red with warnings; foes draw nigh,
Treading the dark with challenge and reply.
Behold the burden of the prophet's vision—
The gathering hosts—the Valley of Decision,
Dusk with the wings of eagles wheeling o'er.
Day of the Lord, of darkness and not light!
It breaks in thunder and the whirlwind's roar!
Even so, Father! Let thy will be done—
Turn and o'erturn, end what thou hast begun
In judgment or in mercy; as for me,
If but the least and frailest, let me be
Evermore numbered with the truly free
Who find thy service perfect liberty!
I fain would thank thee that my mortal life
Has reached the hour (albeit through care and pain)
When Good and Evil, as for final strife,
Close dim and vast on Armageddon's plain;
And Michael and his angels once again
Drive howling back the spirits of the night.
O! for the faith to read the signs aright,
And, from the angle of thy perfect sight
See Truth's white banner floating on before;
And the good cause, despite of venal friends
And base expedients, move to noble ends.
See Peace with Freedom make to Time amends,
And, through its cloud of dust, the threshing-floor,
Flailed by thy thunder, heaped with chaffless grain.

THE LAST PHASE OF THINGS MARKED IN THE METALLIC IMAGE.

As we approximate the end, the second chapter of Daniel does not lose its interest in the minds of those who are making prophecy their study, which bears upon the end of this dispensation. Neither does it leave us in its order of events destitute of a definite point at which we may constantly look for the coming of the Lord.

Such is the familiarity of the minds of the readers of the Crisis with this portion of sacred truth, that to enter upon a minute exposition of every part of it would be a waste of time and of space in our paper. But there are some jots and tittles we have carelessly overlooked, which it would be well for us to consider, inasmuch as their development marks the very point of time at which we have arrived; and at which time we may look for the setting up of the everlasting kingdom of God.

To prepare our minds to duly consider the events now transpiring in the political world, let us bestow a passing thought upon the interpretation Daniel gave to Nebuchadnezzar's dream. "Thou art this head of gold." "After thee shall arise another kingdom, [corresponding with the Medo-Persian government], and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth"; which answers to the kingdom of Grecia. "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron; forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all these shall it break in pieces and bruise." None can doubt that Rome in its imperial and consolidated strength is here represented. Iron is here used to represent Rome as a great military power. And in this form it existed until the fourth century, when by the barbarians from the north it was dismembered, which brings us to a new era in Roman history, represented by the feet of the metallic image,—part iron, and part clay. Thus: "And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with the miry clay."

Now the important ideas we wish to bring out here are these: The iron legs representing the military power, which was the governing element in the Roman kingdom, the iron feet must represent the same thing. And if so, the clay must represent a different element; viz., the great masses ruled. And again the mixing of iron and clay must represent the loyalty of the people towards the ruling power.

But in tracing this prophecy, we discover the division of the fourth kingdom is not the last change brought to view before the stone smites the image. For in the 43d verse we read, "And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay." First it is stated when the fourth kingdom is divided the iron and clay do mix, and lastly they do not mix. Now, if in the divided state of Rome the iron represents the ruling faculty, and the clay represents the great masses ruled over, and the mixing of the iron and clay the loyalty of the people to their sovereigns; then the language, "iron is not mixed with clay," must represent the people finally as occupying a different attitude than that of loyalty. And it is this state of things thus described in the scripture, when iron and clay no longer mix, which marks the point of time when the stone shall smite the image and grind it to powder. In order to see how strikingly this has been fulfilled, all we are under the necessity of doing is to cast a few reflections upon past history, and study the present signs of the times.

In considering the past, we see a general loyalty of the people of the old countries to their sovereigns, from the breaking up of the Roman empire until the French Revolution. And that Revolution was induced by certain events on this continent. Let us take a retrospect of civil matters just before the American Revolution.

At this time, every court in Europe was in a state of profligacy. Sovereigns talked loudly of the divine rights of kings; overlooking the fact that the design of civil government was not royal avarice, but to secure and maintain for the people the divine bequest of inalienable rights, common to all men. The church had grown old, says the historian, and did not possess the means of renovating her doctrines, or improving her constitution, so as to keep pace with the enlargement of the human understanding. It was at this time that England became oppressive in her policy towards the American colonies. And it was this that awakened the general feeling of discontent which eventually broke out in popular revolution.

The people of this country, perhaps more enlightened at that time than any upon the face of the earth, arose, and not only stated their rights, but pledged life, fortune, and honor, for their maintenance, trusting in a just God for their success. The struggle between despotic usurpation and enlightened sentiment was long and bloody, and while it raged upon this continent with unabated fury for seven years, all Europe watched with the deepest solicitude the course of events as the tide of war rolled on.

At length liberty triumphed, and the sentiment that all men are born free and equal became enthroned in the heart of the new-born nation.

The effect of this in Europe was striking. The common people, who had been so long ground down under the iron heel of despotism, arose and clamored for liberty. The nucleus of this popular outbreak was France. But unfortunately for their cause, they made infidelity their ally, and failed. We can but think that the Catholic church is responsible for French infidelity, because they claimed to be the true representatives of Christ and his government; and as the philosophers of the nation who led off in the revolutionary movement ignored all tyranny, they denounced alike the church and him whom papists declared to be its founder.

But though liberty in Europe was crushed, the above is enough to show that the iron and clay at that time began to separate; and the gulf has been growing greater and greater ever since. It is since that terrible political earthquake that the governments of Europe have been under the necessity of augmenting their military power for the purpose of keeping down home insurrection, as they never were before. But it seems to me the culminating point of this grand drama is not yet reached, though from every appearance it is just upon us.

When the United States government was established, the system of slavery was allowed by its founders, with the expectation it would die out of its own accord, and thus obviate the necessity of any legislative action on the part of the general government. But in the room of that, the slave power grew to a giant, and in the end claimed the sole right of giving direction to affairs in this nation; and when it found that it could not, it arose in organized rebellion, and threatened the life of the government, and the overthrow of every free institution; and once more we have seen in our own country, despotism, the representative of the southern oligarchy, and the principles of free government meet in deadly conflict.

During the last four years of bloody strife between these two principles, all Europe has been gazing upon the belligerents in wild amazement. Held back by an unseen power from any interference, the sovereigns of the old world have gloried in pronouncing our system of free government an exploded experiment; while the great masses, growing more and more enlightened upon the subject of popular suffrage and constitutional liberty, have always sympathized with this government in its struggle for existence and life.

Once more liberty has triumphed. The rebellion no longer exists; and, as in the case of the old revolution, so now Europe must realize an effect. There will be greater clamoring for free government than ever before. The iron and clay no longer mix. In all probability within the territory of the beast and false prophet, in a little from this, all will be civil commotion. All Europe to-day is like a magazine ready for the match. One single spark is enough to ignite the political combustion of the whole continent. Now is the time for the cry of "peace and safety" to be raised; but destruction cometh suddenly.

May we be found watching and praying always, that we may be able to escape all these things that are coming to pass, and to stand before the Son of man. A. ROSS.

FROM THE EAST.

(Extract from the "German Temple."

"The Emperor Napoleon III. says in his work of Julius Cæsar, which has just made its appearance, that it was high time that the beautiful countries of Palestine (or the East), after nearly two thousand years' desolation, should be given back again to civilization. How much greater is the mind of this man than that of the Germans, who altogether, governments, churches, professors, and editors of newspapers (shut up in their narrow sphere of thinking), cannot think further than Vienna, Berlin, Munich, Dresden, Stuttgardt, etc. What Napoleon understands by civilization we all know; it is nothing else but what they do in Germany, namely: industry, trade, a little of science and art, all things which cover the misery of man; a glory that rests upon the basis of a tax-paying and laboring mass, and by which the many perish in want, the few in luxury and extravagance.

But Napoleon is free from German narrow-mindedness, that takes the present state for eternity, and their own narrow sphere of moving for the universe, and therefore the eyes of the East as well as of the West are directed upon him. We have always, not based upon Napoleon, but upon the prophets, believed in the future of the holy land; but as the so-called christians are lazy and stupid, but Napoleon active and mindful, therefore we conclude from his work that he is destined also to prepare for the kingdom of God the way in the East.' LOUIS REIMER.

For the World's Crisis

I HAVE YET MANY THINGS TO SAY UNTO YOU."—Jno. 16: 12.

And by this time you ought to be able to bear them. Keeping continually in view that great Bible truth, that when man dies, his spirit returns to God; and knowing that the spirit of Christ did so return; then should that declaration of his to Mary completely, effectually, entirely and forever overthrow, annul and destroy the validity of the argument predicted on that doctrine which affirms that the spirit is the essential, thinking, reasoning, intelligent man, existing as a conscious entity, independent of the body, and while the body is subject to corruption in death. "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus"; and if "the spirit" is "the man," and the body is not," then was not Christ crucified; then was not he dead; then did not he rise again; then was he not born of the virgin; for it was the visible BODY which was born, crucified, dead, buried, rose again, and which ascended into heaven, and is mediator between God and men; and it was this body which the apostles looked upon, saw with their eyes, handled with their hands, with whom they ate and drank, both before and after his resurrection; and this body was the "word of life," manifested, made visible, made flesh, had or was "flesh and bones," to which God the Father giveth the Spirit not by measure, "seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory"; the MAN Christ Jesus. But if, as some affirm, there are two men in one; the body,—the dust, flesh, outer, perishable, corruptible, or natural-man; and the spirit,—the inner, spiritual, hidden, invisible, immaterial, imperishable, incorruptible, indestructible, immortal, indivisible, intangible, or incorporeal man; then are there TWO mediators, the corporeal and the incorporeal; and if the incorporeal be the essential man, the corporeal must be the unessential, and the work of creating the first Adam of the dust of the ground altogether an unessential piece of business. Not only so, but if the spirit be the man-essential, then it is properly "the MAN," and we have a mediator that never has DIED in our behalf; and the doctrine of the atonement, as taught in the "good news" of our salvation, on the ground of compassion, loses all its beauty, all its force, all its harmony, and all its saving excellency and power. But that—though more than enough—is not all; for if the spirit be the man proper, and goes to God when the man improper dies, as Christ's spirit did; then he could not have said truthfully, as he did say to Mary, "I am not yet ascended to my Father"; for if the spirit of Christ be Christ, then was Christ with the Father during the the very time that he told Mary he was not; and the spirit of Christ being undeniably with the Father, then most clearly, most distinctly, most assuredly, it was not with the thief's spirit in some intermediate state, or any other place called paradise. Now the game of "fast and loose," "open or shut," in "that's the body," "that's the soul," "that's the spirit," and "that's the human nature," may be played ad libitum; it will avail nothing. One—the body, was in the TOMB; the other—the spirit, was WITH GOD.

The case of Stephen (Acts 7: 59) is not unfrequently cited as presumptive evidence of the thief's consciousness in death, because he said, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit"; but this fails to prove any thing of the kind, for some renderings read "Lord Jesus, take away my—pneuma—spirit"; and if he was stoned to death, unquestionably his life was taken away; his spirit, like our Lord's, did return to God, as does the spirit of every living being, when it dies,—the wicked as well as the good, for there is no distinction made. But that does not prove it to be either a conscious entity, or in a conscious state; and it is also added in verse 60, "when he had said this, he fell asleep."

"Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day."—2 Cor. 4: 16. If the inward man, here mentioned, referred to the "spirit of man," and that, as is claimed, be immaterial, incorruptible, imperishable, and immortal, it would not need to be "renewed" at all; but there is a more truthful solution of this. In 1 Cor. 15: 46, we learn that the spiritual man was not first, but the natural man; and afterwards the spiritual man, the "Lord from heaven." In Eph. 3: 6, and Col. 1: 27, we are taught that this is "Christ within us," dwelling in our hearts "by faith." In 1 Pet. 3: 4, he is called "the hidden man of the heart," and is "renewed day by day," thus: "Give us this day our daily bread"; for "man shall not live by [earthly] bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"; but an immortal, never-dying soul-man, a deathless spirit-man, surely, could live alone, without bread, natural or spiritual.

"But ye are come . . . to the spirits of just men made perfect."—Heb. 12: 23. Dr. A. Clarke applies the whole of this, from verse 22 to 24, to believers living in the church here on the earth now. See N. T. Com., pp. 744, 746. But grant that it refers to the "heavenly state," as some claim; then examine the context, and we discover that we are come to the perfected spirits, or lives "of just men" "by faith"; and these "just men" are not "in heaven"; they are only enrolled, found written in the Lamb's book of life. But these were "made perfect," and the "CAPTAIN of their salvation" was made "perfect through sufferings" (Heb. 2: 10), and his sufferings terminated in death; but he was not pefected so long as he remained under and was subject to death; not perfected until he "rose again," "for in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God"; "being raised from the dead," he "dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him."—Rom. 6: 10, 9. Now these "spirits of just men" must be "made perfect," brought to glory, in the same way that their Captain was; and that is, by a resurrection from the dead, when mortality will be swallowed up of life, when we shall no longer be imperfect "earthern vessels," but "vessels of honor," fitted for the Master's use, perfected, and that which is perfect is come," we shall no longer see and walk by faith, uncertainly, but see face to face; walk and not faint, run and not be weary, and know also as we are known. Now this resurrected, perfected state in glory is the very sum and "substance of things hoped for," and our faith comprehending them is the evidence. G. W. STETSON.

PSALM TWENTY-ONE.

There's a whisper of comfort, O weak one, for thee,
When thy sins rage within like the waves of the sea;
The voice of the Master shall calm them at length;
Look up mid the breakers! the Lord is thy strength.

The night of thy sorrow is starless and cold;
It is dark on the mountain and dark on the wold;
Press onward! lone traveler, fear not the night,
Thy God is thy glory, the Lord is thy light.

Thou art old, weary pilgrim, and hastening on
To the dark silent land where thy fathers have gone;
But the Spirit hath written in letters of flame,
"Throughout all generations thy God is the same."

What ill can betide if the Lord is our own?
There's a fullness in him which can more than atone
For the losses we feel, for the crosses we bear,
If the Lord is our portion we need not despair.

Still closer and closer I'll cling to thy side,
Then boldly press onward whate'er may betide;
And if forms of affection lie crumbled in dust,
May I sing mid the ruins, "The Lord is my trust."

When death, the grim phantom, shall bid me depart,
And exultantly wreathe his cold arm round my heart,
I shall conquer though conquered, in this my last strife;
I shall smile on the tyrant—the Lord is my life!

IS WATER BAPTISM A CHRISTIAN INSTITUTION?

In the Voice of May 2d I noticed an inquiry concerning baptism: whether our Savior intended that his disciples should baptize "with water," when he gave them the great commission; or did he refer only to the baptism of the Holy Spirit, with which John the Baptist said Jesus should baptize (Matt. 3: 11): and did baptism by water cease with the "baptism that John taught."

I regard this subject as of vital importance to the christian faith; for if baptism by water is required of the believer in order to "put on Christ," (Gal. 3: 27), then before we are truly and fully "in Christ" we must be "buried with him by baptism;" and to refuse to obey the Lord in this ordinance manifests a spirit that will lead to the rejection of every requirement of the gospel.

It is hardly necessary for me to enter into argument to show that the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ is a religion of obedience. We all know that he came not to do his own will but the will of him that sent him, and he says, "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself." (John 14: 10). And in John 12: 49, he gives as a reason why we ought to believe on him and keep his word, that his word "shall judge us in the last day." "For I have not spoken of myself: but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak." And again, "If a man love me, he will keep my words." Just what Jesus requires is just what we want to do. This does not stop alone with the outward manifestation of our faith to the world, but "we must obey from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto us." (Rom. 6: 17). Now what was "the form" to which the apostle refers, and which the ROMAN CHRISTIANS had obeyed? Notice: "Know ye not, that all we who were immersed into Jesus Christ were immersed into his death? We were buried, therefore, with him [How, or with what form?] by the immersion into his death, that as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, so we, also, should walk in newness of life. For if we have become united with the likeness of his death, we shall be also with that of his resurrection." (Rom. 6: 3–5.*)

This form was that that was practiced by the christians at Rome, they receiving it from the apostle.

The practice of the apostles, then, becomes the criterion from which we shall judge, and their acts the interpretation of the manner in which they understood the "great commission." John came preaching in the wilderness "the baptism of repentance" (Acts 13: 24), "Saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus." (Acts 19: 4). What he says do, that we must do, in order to gain eternal life. "The "great commission" reads, "Go, therefore, and disciple all nations, immersing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. And behold, I am with you alway, unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.*) This was addressed to the disciples long after the baptism which John taught had ceased or come to its end: or, if you please, after it had fulfilled its work; since which time the "good news" had been preached, first by the Lord himself, and afterward by them that heard him, God bearing them witness, both by signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will (Heb. 2: 3, 4). Jesus, about to be taken up from them to the right hand of God, gives them their work. Now it was their business to do all and no more than he commanded them. First they were to "disciple," or preach the "good news" (Mark 16: 15), to every creature, all nations. Now what was the object to be obtained by preaching? plainly, it was in order to obtain faith; "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." The command was, "teach all nations," baptizing them," etc., not "teach baptizing." Whom did Jesus tell, "Teach all nations"? Plainly, it was the disciples. Now whom did he tell to baptize? Why, his disciples. And whom shall the disciples baptize? Clearly, those that believe. But John the Baptist said that it was JESUS that should baptize with the Holy Spirit. Now Jesus tells his disciples to teach all nations, and to baptize those that believe. It was the Master's work to baptize with the Holy Spirit. Says Jesus, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of truth." (John 14: 16, 17.) And on the day of Pentecost the Holy Spirit did come, in accordance with the promise of the Father. "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel."

Having "received power," or "the promise of the Father," as he made it by John (Acts 1: 5), they were ready to preach the good news. What did Peter preach? Commencing with the manifestation of the Spirit as they then saw it, he goes on to show that Jesus was the Christ; that they ignorantly put him to death; and calls on them to believe on his name. They were convinced that what he had said was the truth; and, finding themselves in a lost condition, they cry out in the anguish of their souls, "Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, [something else is to be done, not by the disciples, but by the Lord, in accordance with the promise] and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 37, 38). Now so far as the disciples were concerned, their work was accomplished when they had done as Jesus had told them to do, viz., baptize those that believe. Mark 16: 16). Then came the work God did not entrust even to an apostle: "It shall come to pass in the last days, SAITH GOD, I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh," etc. (Acts 2: 17).

It now remains for us, in the second place, to show what was the practice of the apostles. Did they immerse in water? The first instance of baptism we call attention to, is the case of Philip and the eunuch. He was found by Philip reading Isaiah. Beginning with what he was reading, the apostle preached Christ to him. He was convinced of the truth, and was ready to confess it; and understanding the requirements of the gospel, when the fountain of water presented itself, his first inquiry was, "See, here is WATER. What doth hinder ME to be immersed?" Now did Philip tell him that water baptism was not one of the requirements of the christian faith? Did he tell him the baptism of the Holy Spirit was the only christian baptism? Not a word of it. But, "If thou believest with all thine heart thou mayest." Mayest what? Why, be immersed. "And they went down both into the WATER, both Philip and the eunuch; and he immersed him. (Acts 8: 36–38.*) Here, then, is an instance, where baptism by water was practiced by an apostle.

Some were immersed in the name of the Lord Jesus, and did not for some time after receive the Holy Spirit; for when Philip came down to Samaria and preached Christ, many believed on him. "And as soon as the apostles at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent Peter and John; who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Spirit. For as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were immersed in the name of the Lord Jesus." (Acts 8: 12–17).

Another instance of an apostle immersing in water is found in the case of Peter at the house of Cornelius. And there is a peculiarity in this case worthy of notice. The Holy Spirit fell on them even before they were immersed. God had taught Peter by vision an important lesson; and so when he was sent for to preach Christ to Gentiles, he did not stop to confer with flesh and blood, but went immediately, and at once declares that the word of the gospel began to be preached after the baptism which John preached; and instructed them that Jesus was to be the judge of the living and the dead, as attested by the prophets. "While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Spirit fell on all them that heard the word." Now what conclusion did Peter draw from all this? His question at once answers this inquiry, "Can any man forbid WATER that these should not be immersed, which have received the Holy Spirit as well as we?" Would Peter have asked such a question, had he not have understood that "water baptism" was a christian institution? Surely not. For "he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." (Acts 10: 34–48). . . .

I will now simply refer to the practice of the Lord himself. John's immersion ceased with his death, and it seems from the narrative that Jesus immdiately began to preach the good news, saying, "The time is fulfilled" (Mark 1: 14, 15), and calling on them to reform, baptizing those that believed. Jesus had manifestly qualified his disciples for this work, so that, though he himself did not do it, he directed it; the work being done by the disciples. (John 4: 1, 2; 3: 22).

This most plainly sets forth both the practice of Jesus, during his ministry, and the practice of the apostles after Jesus had ascended; and the word of the gospel still sounds to every one, "He that believeth and is immersed shall be saved," while, on the other hand, "He that believeth not shall be condemned." How important, then, that we obey the requisitions of the gospel: first to believe, then to repent, and then be baptized. May we, "as children of obedience, not conforming yourselves to the former lusts in your ignorance; but as he who called you is holy, be ye yourselves holy in all your departments: because it is written, Ye shall be holy, for I am holy."*

Are you looking for the soon coming of the Lord? see to it, that all your acts comport with your profession. "The willing and the obedient shall eat the good of the land."—Voice of the West.

MISSHAPEN CHRISTIANS.

BY REV. G. B. WILCOX.

Mr. Theodore Parker declared of a great revival in Boston, that a score of such excitements would never close a dram shop or liberate a slave. Mr. Parker saw through jaundiced eyes; and yet he caught the shadow of a truth. What was it? Not that christians have no religion, but that their religion needs to be better distributed over the character. It does not fit them. There is cloth enough, perhaps, in the garment; but here it draws and pinches, and there it bulges out too far to even touch the wearer.

We have in mind, for example, a good brother, who, in some things, is a model. He is orthodox as the Catechism. He is generous in giving. He loves prayer and prayer-meetings. But he has a temper like a bomb-shell! We have heard it explode in the parlor, and at the dinner-table, to our utter consternation. We remember also a christian woman, whose good works were carried on night and day at high pressure. There was hardly a ragged boy in the neighborhood who had not been clothed by her busy fingers. No box went out to any home-missionary personage without its generous contribution from her needle. But her self-will was simply a nuisance to her husband and her friends. Conceited, sour, censorious, squeamish—she seemed to feel that anybody so efficient could afford to be unlovely. What if a machine shop is a perfect Babel of harsh noises, and a den of ugly Vulcans, all begrimed with oil and dust—provided the establishment turns out good work? She considered herself a sort of spiritual machine shop.

Now, why do christians make this sorry figure of mingled beauty and deformity, like statues finished half by a sculptor and half by a stone mason; or trees, loaded with foliage and fruit on the one side, and gnarled and blasted on the other? If we only were creatures of a normal growth and development, doubtless either good or evil would wholly pervade us. There would be no mixture. When angels ceased to be angels, they became devils. A healthy, vigorous body digests a poison, and sends it with quick pulsations through the arteries, to envenom every limb. A diseased, enfeebled circulation leaves it in the stomach, to gangrene and inflame. So too with the mind. Some men have a logical straight-forwardness that darts right on from the premises to its conclusion. Their chain of reasoning flashes, like chain-lightning, in an instant through its length. They can hardly imbibe an error without becoming all error. But many a good soul, short-sighted, logically and self-contradictory, will hold a truth and a deadly heresy, lying snugly side by side—the peacefulest bed-fellows in the world. "If it were not for the blessed inconsistencies in the logic of our Arminian brethren," Dr. Taylor, of New Haven, used to say, "we should have to give them up as sheer infidels."

But what is the remedy for all the distortion in christian lives? "More religion"—many reply. But more religion, merely, will never answer. The fact is that genuine piety, true love to God, may go on increasing, and yet hardly touch these strange self-contradictions. The Baptist Watchman and Reflector declared, just after the great revivals of 1857, that there were, at that time, more dissensions and bickerings in their churches than almost ever before. And, worse than that, this mischief was brewing in the very churches which had largely shared in the great awakening. And, worse than that, the ferment began, often, in the very midst of the revival itself! Probably churches of every sect might make the same confession.

Look South for another example. Say what you will, and however truly, of the spuriousness of pro-slavery religion, no candid man will deny that they have genuine churches in the rebel states, and that some of those churches have enjoyed genuine seasons of special grace. But with what effect on the hideous iniquities of slavery? Take that whole southern horizon, in imagination, into one view; and you have a grand vision, grotesque and horrible—hymn-books and whips, hallelujahs and screams, prayer-meetings and auctions for "niggers;" young converts going into the church and long coffles going into the slave-pen.

The difficulty in all the instances we have cited is not chiefly the want of religion. It is the want of a special application and enforcement of religion on the special sin of the church or individual. We have gone on the false assumption that religion, once received, would apply itself. We have expected that, in its liquid flow, it would diffuse itself through all the channels of the soul; as it would in any warm, generous nature uncursed by depravity. We have forgotten that the coldness of a sinner's nature chills the stream to a sluggish current, that stops while half the channels yet are dry.

The good brother we mentioned, with the explosive temper, apparently never thought of bringing his religion to bear on that infirmity. The redoubtable sister, with her bustling charities and her ugly will, asked God for everything but the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. The churches, in the great revival, were more anxious to save souls than to temper their zeal with love. Southern christians trained the guns of their rebuke upon every unpopular sin, shooting clear of the hydra-heads of slavery. Here, too belonged the shallow sophism of the New York American Tract Society, that christianity, carried to the South, would somehow apply itself to slavery, without any unpleasant necessity of running the risk of tar and feathers or a "hempen necklace" by any more special allusion to that disagreeable subject.

Now there are disciples who, it may be with no more sincerity or self denial than the one-sided christians we have alluded to, have a rounded and admirable beauty of character. Take them in any state of fortune or misfortune, turn them upside down and over and over with agitations and calamities; and somehow, like a kaleidoscope, they will come up as orderly and beautiful as ever! The reason is plain. They carry their religion around the whole scope of their character, bringing the whole equally under its power. They "grow up into Him in all things which is the Head, even Christ."....

A few years since a good deacon in a town of Massachusetts offered a tract to a mechanic whom he found strolling about on the Sabbath. The man turned it over, noticed the imprint of the same society to which we have already alluded, and flung it behind him, crying, "Confound the cowardly craft! I won't sail under that flag!" Now the officers of that society were better men than this Sabbath breaker. But, nevertheless, at the point of contact with him, they were weaker than he. He held to a bold rebuke of a giant evil, in spite of its popularity. He stood, as to that, on higher ground than they, and he knew it. Thank God, they have come to a better wisdom! "Let the dead past bury its dead."

We need more religion in every church and every heart. But if we can learn to make the best use of what religion we already have, the gain will be immeasurable! We want a balanced character, every grace holding every other in counterpoise. We want the circle of virtues complete. A break in it is like a break in the magic circle of the old astrologers, letting in some demon unawares. We want to remember that doing good is a small matter compared with being good.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

Or, Sectarianism opposed to Reform.

NUMBER TEN.

"Brethren of Jesus, sons of love,
How love-like, godlike, these should be;
In earth beneath and heaven above,
One undivided family."

The limits of our work require us to close this branch of our subject with the present chapter; and we shall be compelled to turn from our hasty and imperfect view of the evils of sectarianism, to search out and apply the remedy. We trust that we shall convince the reader that we have not drawn the dark picture, presented in these articles, unnecessarily. We have no pleasure in the contemplation of such a picture. We love christianity and the church of God, and do not delight in exposing the faults of christians, or the weaknesses of the church. Surely, if the picture we have drawn is true to the reality, it is time that the church was aroused to the importance of action on this subject. To mourn over divisions as unfortunate, but continue to build our various sects, will not reach the case. Immediate and unconditional repentance is the great law of the gospel. No repentance for any sin is genuine unless the sin is put away. This law applies to the church as well as to the people of the world. Christians, above all others, should hasten to put away what is wrong. The sins of the church, above all others, must be exposed and denounced, that the church may be saved. And among the sins of the church of modern times, sectarianism stands up pre-eminent in ruinous consequences. Under it a score of lesser abuses and wrongs hide, as under the wing of a protecting demon. There is no conscience on this subject among the mass of christians.

The sin of schism is committed with as much complacent coolness as if it were a cardinal virtue. He who can build up the sect most rapidly, is the most popular clergyman. Appeals to the spirit of the party, instead of being looked upon as a shame and a scandal, are regarded as the climax of eloquence in a home-missionary sermon, or a speech before some high ecclesiastical assembly. Hymns, expressive of attachment to "old-fashioned Methodism," or the expression of a hope to "live and die a Baptist," are to be found among the cherished literature of these sects. Those who applaud such sentiments, do not understand that they are thus applauding the spirit of one of the most destructive sins of a long line of ages. So dreadfully perverted by popular teaching is the public conscience on this subject, that to arouse it to the sin of sectarianism, will require the most earnest and pointed repesentation of its enormity. That there are difficulties in the way of the removal of this evil is not to be denied for a moment. An evil so wide-spread as sectarianism, so deeply imbedded in the world's religious history, and strongly entrenched behind the religious education of ages, can never be removed without a struggle. But when among any considerable number of earnest christians there is an honest desire to put away a sin of the church, that desire will find ways and means to work out its results. To awaken such a desire is our first work,—a work that would seem easy of accomplishment, in the light of the facts and reasonings of these few articles. A sin which has marked its track through the ages in blood and ruin, and which still lingers in the bosom of our christianity, like a poisonous monster in the temple of God, ought to arouse every christian heart for its instant destruction. WHAT OF THE DAY?

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

A sound of tumult troubles all the air,
Like the low thunders of a sultry sky,
Far-rolling ere the downright lightnings glare:
The hills blaze red with warnings; foes draw nigh,
Treading the dark with challenge and reply.
Behold the burden of the prophet's vision—
The gathering hosts—the Valley of Decision,
Dusk with the wings of eagles wheeling o'er.
Day of the Lord, of darkness and not light!
It breaks in thunder and the whirlwind's roar!
Even so, Father! Let thy will be done—
Turn and o'erturn, end what thou hast begun
In judgment or in mercy; as for me,
If but the least and frailest, let me be
Evermore numbered with the truly free
Who find thy service perfect liberty!
I fain would thank thee that my mortal life
Has reached the hour (albeit through care and pain)
When Good and Evil, as for final strife,
Close dim and vast on Armageddon's plain;
And Michael and his angels once again
Drive howling back the spirits of the night.
O! for the faith to read the signs aright,
And, from the angle of thy perfect sight
See Truth's white banner floating on before;
And the good cause, despite of venal friends
And base expedients, move to noble ends:
See Peace with Freedom make to Time amends,
And, through its cloud of dust, the threshing-floor,
Flailed by thy thunder, heaped with chaffless grain.

THE LAST PHASE OF THINGS MARKED IN THE METALLIC IMAGE.

As we approximate the end, the second chapter of Daniel does not lose its interest in the minds of those who are making prophecy their study, which bears upon the end of this dispensation. Neither does it leave us in its order of events destitute of a definite point at which we may constantly look for the coming of the Lord.

Such is the familiarity of the minds of the readers of the Crisis with this portion of sacred truth, that to enter upon a minute exposition of every part of it would be a waste of time and of space in our paper. But there are some jots and tittles we have carelessly overlooked, which it would be well for us to consider, inasmuch as their development marks the very point of time at which we have arrived; and at which time we may look for the setting up of the everlasting kingdom of God.

To prepare our minds to duly consider the events now transpiring in the political world, let us bestow a passing thought upon the interpretation Daniel gave to Nebuchadnezzar's dream. "Thou art this head of gold." "After thee shall arise another kingdom, [corresponding with the Medo-Persian government], and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth"; which answers to the kingdom of Grecia. "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron; forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all these shall it break in pieces and bruise." None can doubt that Rome in its imperial and consolidated strength is here represented. Iron is here used to represent Rome as a great military power. And in this form it existed until the fourth century, when by the barbarians from the north it was dismembered, which brings us to a new era in Roman history, represented by the feet of the metallic image,—part iron, and part clay. Thus: "And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with the miry clay."

Now the important ideas we wish to bring out here are these: The iron legs representing the military power, which was the governing element in the Roman kingdom, the iron feet must represent the same thing. And if so, the clay must represent a different element; viz., the great masses ruled. And again the mixing of iron and clay must represent the loyalty of the people towards the ruling power.

But in tracing this prophecy, we discover the division of the fourth kingdom is not the last change brought to view before the stone smites the image. For in the 43d verse we read, "And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay." First it is stated when the fourth kingdom is divided the iron and clay do mix, and lastly they do not mix. Now, if in the divided state of Rome the iron represents the ruling faculty, and the clay represents the great masses ruled over, and the mixing of the iron and clay the loyalty of the people to their sovereigns; then the language, "iron is not mixed with clay," must represent the people finally as occupying a different attitude than that of loyalty. And it is this state of things thus described in the scripture, when iron and clay no longer mix, which marks the point of time when the stone shall smite the image and grind it to powder. In order to see how strikingly this has been fulfilled, all we are under the necessity of doing is to cast a few reflections upon past history, and study the present signs of the times.

In considering the past, we see a general loyalty of the people of the old countries to their sovereigns, from the breaking up of the Roman empire until the French Revolution. And that Revolution was induced by certain events on this continent. Let us take a retrospect of civil matters just before the American Revolution.

At this time, every court in Europe was in a state of profligacy. Sovereigns talked loudly of the divine rights of kings; overlooking the fact that the design of civil government was not royal avarice, but to secure and maintain for the people the divine bequest of inalienable rights, common to all men. The church had grown old, says the historian, and did not possess the means of renovating her doctrines, or improving her constitution, so as to keep pace with the enlargement of the human understanding. It was at this time that England became oppressive in her policy towards the American colonies. And it was this that awakened the general feeling of discontent which eventually broke out in popular revolution.

The people of this country, perhaps more enlightened at that time than any upon the face of the earth, arose, and not only stated their rights, but pledged life, fortune, and honor, for their maintenance, trusting in a just God for their success. The struggle between despotic usurpation and enlightened sentiment was long and bloody, and while it raged upon this continent with unabated fury for seven years, all Europe watched with the deepest solicitude the course of events as the tide of war rolled on.

At length liberty triumphed, and the sentiment that all men are born free and equal became enthroned in the heart of the new-born nation.

The effect of this in Europe was striking. The common people, who had been so long ground down under the iron heel of despotism, arose and clamored for liberty. The nucleus of this popular outbreak was France. But unfortunately for their cause, they made infidelity their ally, and failed. We can but think that the Catholic church is responsible for French infidelity, because they claimed to be the true representatives of Christ and his government; and as the philosophers of the nation who led off in the revolutionary movement ignored all tyranny, they denounced alike the church and him whom papists declared to be its founder.

But though liberty in Europe was crushed, the above is enough to show that the iron and clay at that time began to separate; and the gulf has been growing greater and greater ever since. It is since that terrible political earthquake that the governments of Europe have been under the necessity of augmenting their military power for the purpose of keeping down home insurrection, as they never were before. But it seems to me the culminating point of this grand drama is not yet reached, though from every appearance it is just upon us.

When the United States government was established, the system of slavery was allowed by its founders, with the expectation it would die out of its own accord, and thus obviate the necessity of any legislative action on the part of the general government. But in the room of that, the slave power grew to a giant, and in the end claimed the sole right of giving direction to affairs in this nation; and when it found that it could not, it arose in organized rebellion, and threatened the life of the government, and the overthrow of every free institution; and once more we have seen in our own country, despotism, the representative of the southern oligarchy, and the principles of free government meet in deadly conflict.

During the last four years of bloody strife between these two principles, all Europe has been gazing upon the belligerents in wild amazement. Held back by an unseen power from any interference, the sovereigns of the old world have gloried in pronouncing our system of free government an exploded experiment; while the great masses, growing more and more enlightened upon the subject of popular suffrage and constitutional liberty, have always sympathized with this government in its struggle for existence and life.

Once more liberty has triumphed. The rebellion no longer exists; and, as in the case of the old revolution, so now Europe must realize an effect. There will be greater clamoring for free government than ever before. The iron and clay no longer mix. In all probability within the territory of the beast and false prophet, in a little from this, all will be civil commotion. All Europe to-day is like a magazine ready for the match. One single spark is enough to ignite the political combustion of the whole continent. Now is the time for the cry of "peace and safety" to be raised; but destruction cometh suddenly.

May we be found watching and praying always, that we may be able to escape all these things that are coming to pass, and to stand before the Son of man. A. ROSS.

FROM THE EAST.

(Extract from the "German Temple.")

"The Emperor Napoleon III. says in his work of Julius Cæsar, which has just made its appearance, that it was high time that the beautiful countries of Palestine (or the East), after nearly two thousand years' desolation, should be given back again to civilization. How much greater is the mind of this man than that of the Germans, who altogether, governments, churches, professors, and editors of newspapers (shut up in their narrow sphere of thinking), cannot think further than Vienna, Berlin, Munich, Dresden, Stuttgardt, etc. What Napoleon understands by civilization we all know; it is nothing else but what they do in Germany, namely: industry, trade, a little of science and art, all things which cover the misery of man; a glory that rests upon the basis of a tax-paying and laboring mass, and by which the many perish in want, the few in luxury and extravagance.

But Napoleon is free from German narrow-mindedness, that takes the present state for eternity, and their own narrow sphere of moving for the universe, and therefore the eyes of the East as well as of the West are directed upon him. We have always, not based upon Napoleon, but upon the prophets, believed in the future of the holy land; but as the so-called christians are lazy and stupid, but Napoleon active and mindful, therefore we conclude from his work that he is destined also to prepare for the kingdom of God the way in the East.' For the World's Crisis.

I HAVE YET MANY THINGS TO SAY UNTO YOU."—Jno. 16: 12.

And by this time you ought to be able to bear them. Keeping continually in view that great Bible truth, that when man dies, his spirit returns to God; and knowing that the spirit of Christ did so return; then should that declaration of his to Mary completely, effectually, entirely and forever overthrow, annul and destroy the validity of the argument predicted on that doctrine which affirms that the spirit is the essential, thinking, reasoning, intelligent man, existing as a conscious entity, independent of the body, and while the body is subject to corruption in death. "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus"; and if "the spirit" is "the man," and the body is not," then was not Christ crucified; then was not he dead; then did not he rise again; then was he not born of the virgin; for it was the visible BODY which was born, crucified, dead, buried, rose again, and which ascended into heaven, and is mediator between God and men; and it was this body which the apostles looked upon, saw with their eyes, handled with their hands, with whom they ate and drank, both before and after his resurrection; and this body was the "word of life," manifested, made visible, made flesh, had or was "flesh and bones," to which God the Father giveth the Spirit not by measure, "seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory"; the MAN Christ Jesus. But if, as some affirm, there are two men in one; the body,—the dust, flesh, outer, perishable, corruptible, or natural-man; and the spirit,—the inner, spiritual, hidden, invisible, immaterial, imperishable, incorruptible, indestructible, immortal, indivisible, intangible, or incorporeal man; then are there TWO mediators, the corporeal and the incorporeal; and if the incorporeal be the essential man, the corporeal must be the unessential, and the work of creating the first Adam of the dust of the ground altogether an unessential piece of business. Not only so, but if the spirit be the man-essential, then it is properly "the MAN," and we have a mediator that never has DIED in our behalf; and the doctrine of the atonement, as taught in the "good news" of our salvation, on the ground of compassion, loses all its beauty, all its force, all its harmony, and all its saving excellency and power. But that—though more than enough—is not all; for if the spirit be the man proper, and goes to God when the man improper dies, as Christ's spirit did; then he could not have said truthfully, as he did say to Mary, "I am not yet ascended to my Father"; for if the spirit of Christ be Christ, then was Christ with the Father during the the very time that he told Mary he was not; and the spirit of Christ being undeniably with the Father, then most clearly, most distinctly, most assuredly, it was not with the thief's spirit in some intermediate state, or any other place called paradise. Now the game of "fast and loose," "open or shut," in "that's the body," "that's the soul," "that's the spirit," and "that's the human nature," may be played ad libitum; it will avail nothing. One—the body, was in the TOMB; the other—the spirit, was WITH GOD.

The case of Stephen (Acts 7: 59) is not unfrequently cited as presumptive evidence of the thief's consciousness in death, because he said, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit"; but this fails to prove any thing of the kind, for some renderings read "Lord Jesus, take away my—pneuma—spirit"; and if he was stoned to death, unquestionably his life was taken away; his spirit, like our Lord's, did return to God, as does the spirit of every living being, when it dies,—the wicked as well as the good, for there is no distinction made. But that does not prove it to be either a conscious entity, or in a conscious state; and it is also added in verse 60, "when he had said this, he fell asleep."

"Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day."—2 Cor. 4: 16. If the inward man, here mentioned, referred to the "spirit of man," and that, as is claimed, be immaterial, incorruptible, imperishable, and immortal, it would not need to be "renewed" at all; but there is a more truthful solution of this. In 1 Cor. 15: 46, we learn that the spiritual man was not first, but the natural man; and afterwards the spiritual man, the "Lord from heaven." In Eph. 3: 6, and Col. 1: 27, we are taught that this is "Christ within us," dwelling in our hearts "by faith." In 1 Pet. 3: 4, he is called "the hidden man of the heart," and is "renewed day by day," thus: "Give us this day our daily bread"; for "man shall not live by [earthly] bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"; but an immortal, never-dying soul-man, a deathless spirit-man, surely, could live alone, without bread, natural or spiritual.

"But ye are come . . . to the spirits of just men made perfect."—Heb. 12: 23. Dr. A. Clarke applies the whole of this, from verse 22 to 24, to believers living in the church here on the earth now. See N. T. Com., pp. 744, 746. But grant that it refers to the "heavenly state," as some claim; then examine the context, and we discover that we are come to the perfected spirits, or lives "of just men" "by faith"; and these "just men" are not "in heaven"; they are only enrolled, found written in the Lamb's book of life. But these were "made perfect," and the "CAPTAIN of their salvation" was made "perfect through sufferings" (Heb. 2: 10), and his sufferings terminated in death; but he was not pefected so long as he remained under and was subject to death; not perfected until he "rose again," "for in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God"; "being raised from the dead," he "dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him."—Rom. 6: 10, 9. Now these "spirits of just men" must be "made perfect," brought to glory, in the same way that their Captain was; and that is, by a resurrection from the dead, when mortality will be swallowed up of life, when we shall no longer be imperfect "earthern vessels," but "vessels of honor," fitted for the Master's use, perfected, and that which is perfect is come," we shall no longer see and walk by faith, uncertainly, but see face to face; walk and not faint, run and not be weary, and know also as we are known. Now this resurrected, perfected state in glory is the very sum and "substance of things hoped for," and our faith comprehending them is the evidence. G. W. STETSON.

PSALM TWENTY-ONE.

There's a whisper of comfort, O weak one, for thee,
When thy sins rage within like the waves of the sea;
The voice of the Master shall calm them at length;
Look up mid the breakers! the Lord is thy strength.

The night of thy sorrow is starless and cold;
It is dark on the mountain and dark on the wold;
Press onward! lone traveler, fear not the night,
Thy God is thy glory, the Lord is thy light.

Thou art old, weary pilgrim, and hastening on
To the dark silent land where thy fathers have gone;
But the Spirit hath written in letters of flame,
"Throughout all generations thy God is the same."

What ill can betide if the Lord is our own?
There's a fullness in him which can more than atone
For the losses we feel, for the crosses we bear,
If the Lord is our portion we need not despair.

Still closer and closer I'll cling to thy side,
Then boldly press onward whate'er may betide;
And if forms of affection lie crumbled in dust,
May I sing mid the ruins, "The Lord is my trust."

When death, the grim phantom, shall bid me depart,
And exultantly wreathe his cold arm round my heart,
I shall conquer though conquered, in this my last strife;
I shall smile on the tyrant—the Lord is my life!

IS WATER BAPTISM A CHRISTIAN INSTITUTION?

In the Voice of May 2d I noticed an inquiry concerning baptism: whether our Savior intended that his disciples should baptize "with water," when he gave them the great commission; or did he refer only to the baptism of the Holy Spirit, with which John the Baptist said Jesus should baptize (Matt. 3: 11): and did baptism by water cease with the "baptism that John taught."

I regard this subject as of vital importance to the christian faith; for if baptism by water is required of the believer in order to "put on Christ," (Gal. 3: 27), then before we are truly and fully "in Christ" we must be "buried with him by baptism;" and to refuse to obey the Lord in this ordinance manifests a spirit that will lead to the rejection of every requirement of the gospel.

It is hardly necessary for me to enter into argument to show that the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ is a religion of obedience. We all know that he came not to do his own will but the will of him that sent him, and he says, "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself." (John 14: 10). And in John 12: 49, he gives as a reason why we ought to believe on him and keep his word, that his word "shall judge us in the last day." "For I have not spoken of myself: but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak." And again, "If a man love me, he will keep my words." Just what Jesus requires is just what we want to do. This does not stop alone with the outward manifestation of our faith to the world, but "we must obey from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto us." (Rom. 6: 17). Now what was "the form" to which the apostle refers, and which the ROMAN CHRISTIANS had obeyed? Notice: "Know ye not, that all we who were immersed into Jesus Christ were immersed into his death? We were buried, therefore, with him [How, or with what form?] by the immersion into his death, that AS Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, so we, also, should walk in newness of life. For if we have become united with the likeness of his death, we shall be also with that of his resurrection." (Rom. 6: 3–5.*)

This form was that that was practiced by the christians at Rome, they receiving it from the apostle.

The practice of the apostles, then, becomes the criterion from which we shall judge, and their acts the interpretation of the manner in which they understood the "great commission." John came preaching in the wilderness "the baptism of repentance" (Acts 13: 24). "Saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus." (Acts 19: 4). What he says do, that we must do, in order to gain eternal life. "The "great commission" reads, "Go, therefore, and disciple all nations, immersing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. And behold, I am with you alway, unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28: 19, 20.*) This was addressed to the disciples long after the baptism which John taught had ceased or come to its end; or, if you please, after it had fulfilled its work; since which time the "good news" had been preached, first by the Lord himself, and afterward by them that heard him, God bearing them witness, both by signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will (Heb. 2: 3, 4). Jesus, about to be taken up from them to the right hand of God, gives them their work. Now it was their business to do all and no more than he commanded them. First they were to "disciple," or preach the "good news" (Mark 16: 15), to every creature, all nations. Now what was the object to be obtained by preaching? plainly, it was in order to obtain faith; "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." The command was, "teach all nations," baptizing them," etc., not "teach baptizing." Whom did Jesus tell, "Teach all nations"? Plainly, it was the disciples. Now whom did he tell to baptize? Why, his disciples. And whom shall the disciples baptize? Clearly, those that believe. But John the Baptist said that it was JESUS that should baptize with the Holy Spirit. Now Jesus tells his disciples to teach all nations, and to baptize those that believe. It was the Master's work to baptize with the Holy Spirit. Says Jesus, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of truth." (John 14: 16, 17.) And on the day of Pentecost the Holy Spirit did come, in accordance with the promise of the Father. "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel."

Having "received power," or "the promise of the Father," as he made it by John (Acts 1: 5), they were ready to preach the good news. What did Peter preach? Commencing with the manifestation of the Spirit as they then saw it, he goes on to show that Jesus was the Christ; that they ignorantly put him to death; and calls on them to believe on his name. They were convinced that what he had said was the truth; and, finding themselves in a lost condition, they cry out in the anguish of their souls, "Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, [something else is to be done, not by the disciples, but by the Lord, in accordance with the promise] and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2: 37, 38). Now so far as the disciples were concerned, their work was accomplished when they had done as Jesus had told them to do, viz., baptize those that believe. Mark 16: 16). Then came the work God did not entrust even to an apostle: "It shall come to pass in the last days, SAITH GOD, I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh," etc. (Acts 2: 17).

It now remains for us, in the second place, to show what was the practice of the apostles. Did they immerse in water? The first instance of baptism we call attention to, is the case of Philip and the eunuch. He was found by Philip reading Isaiah. Beginning with what he was reading, the apostle preached Christ to him. He was convinced of the truth, and was ready to confess it; and understanding the requirements of the gospel, when the fountain of water presented itself, his first inquiry was, "See, here is WATER. What doth hinder ME to be immersed?" Now did Philip tell him that water baptism was not one of the requirements of the christian faith? Did he tell him the baptism of the Holy Spirit was the only christian baptism? Not a word of it. But, "If thou believest with all thine heart thou mayest." Mayest what? Why, be immersed. "And they went down both into the WATER, both Philip and the eunuch; and he immersed him. (Acts 8: 36–38.*) Here, then, is an instance, where baptism by water was practiced by an apostle.

Some were immersed in the name of the Lord Jesus, and did not for some time after receive the Holy Spirit; for when Philip came down to Samaria and preached Christ, many believed on him. "And as soon as the apostles at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent Peter and John; who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Spirit. For as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were immersed in the name of the Lord Jesus." (Acts 8: 12–17).

Another instance of an apostle immersing in water is found in the case of Peter at the house of Cornelius. And there is a peculiarity in this case worthy of notice. The Holy Spirit fell on them even before they were immersed. God had taught Peter by vision an important lesson; and so when he was sent for to preach Christ to Gentiles, he did not stop to confer with flesh and blood, but went immediately, and at once declares that the word of the gospel began to be preached after the baptism which John preached; and instructed them that Jesus was to be the judge of the living and the dead, as attested by the prophets. "While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Spirit fell on all them that heard the word." Now what conclusion did Peter draw from all this? His question at once answers this inquiry, "Can any man forbid WATER that these should not be immersed, which have received the Holy Spirit as well as we?" Would Peter have asked such a question, had he not have understood that "water baptism" was a christian institution? Surely not. For "he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." (Acts 10: 34–48). . . .

I will now simply refer to the practice of the Lord himself. John's immersion ceased with his death, and it seems from the narrative that Jesus immdiately began to preach the good news, saying, "The time is fulfilled" (Mark 1: 14, 15), and calling on them to reform, baptizing those that believed. Jesus had manifestly qualified his disciples for this work, so that, though he himself did not do it, he directed it; the work being done by the disciples. (John 4: 1, 2; 3: 22).

This most plainly sets forth both the practice of Jesus, during his ministry, and the practice of the apostles after Jesus had ascended; and the word of the gospel still sounds to every one, "He that believeth and is immersed shall be saved," while, on the other hand, "He that believeth not shall be condenmed." How important, then, that we obey the requisitions of the gospel: first to believe, then to repent, and then be baptized. May we, "as children of obedience, not conforming yourselves to the former lusts in your ignorance; but as he who called you is holy, be ye yourselves holy in all your departments: because it is written, Ye shall be holy, for I am holy."*

Are you looking for the soon coming of the Lord? see to it, that all your acts comport with your profession. "The willing and the obedient shall eat the good of the land."—Voice of the West.

MISSHAPEN CHRISTIANS.

BY REV. G. B. WILCOX.

Mr. Theodore Parker declared of a great revival in Boston, that a score of such excitements would never close a dram shop or liberate a slave. Mr. Parker saw through jaundiced eyes; and yet he caught the shadow of a truth. What was it? Not that christians have no religion, but that their religion needs to be better distributed over the character. It does not fit them. There is cloth enough, perhaps, in the garment; but here it draws and pinches, and there it bulges out too far to even touch the wearer.

We have in mind, for example, a good brother, who, in some things, is a model. He is orthodox as the Catechism. He is generous in giving. He loves prayer and prayer-meetings. But he has a temper like a bomb-shell! We have heard it explode in the parlor, and at the dinner-table, to our utter consternation. We remember also a christian woman, whose good works were carried on night and day at high pressure. There was hardly a ragged boy in the neighborhood who had not been clothed by her busy fingers. No box went out to any home-missionary personage without its generous contribution from her needle. But her self-will was simply a nuisance to her husband and her friends. Conceited, sour, censorious, squeamish—she seemed to feel that anybody so efficient could afford to be unlovely. What if a machine shop is a perfect Babel of harsh noises, and a den of ugly Vulcans, all begrimed with oil and dust—provided the establishment turns out good work? She considered herself a sort of spiritual machine shop.

Now, why do christians make this sorry figure of mingled beauty and deformity, like statues finished half by a sculptor and half by a stone mason; or trees, loaded with foliage and fruit on the one side, and gnarled and blasted on the other? If we only were creatures of a normal growth and development, doubtless either good or evil would wholly pervade us. There would be no mixture. When angels ceased to be angels, they became devils. A healthy, vigorous body digests a poison, and sends it with quick pulsations through the arteries, to envenom every limb. A diseased, enfeebled circulation leaves it in the stomach, to gangrene and inflame. So too with the mind. Some men have a logical straight-forwardness that darts right on from the premises to its conclusion. Their chain of reasoning flashes, like chain-lightning, in an instant through its length. They can hardly imbibe an error without becoming all error. But many a good soul, short-sighted, logically and self-contradictory, will hold a truth and a deadly heresy, lying snugly side by side—the peacefulest bed-fellows in the world. "If it were not for the blessed inconsistencies in the logic of our Arminian brethren," Dr. Taylor, of New Haven, used to say, "we should have to give them up as sheer infidels."

But what is the remedy for all the distortion in christian lives? "More religion"—many reply. But more religion, merely, will never answer. The fact is that genuine piety, true love to God, may go on increasing, and yet hardly touch these strange self-contradictions. The Baptist Watchman and Reflector declared, just after the great revivals of 1857, that there were, at that time, more dissensions and bickerings in their churches than almost ever before. And, worse than that, this mischief was brewing in the very churches which had largely shared in the great awakening. And, worse than that, the ferment began, often, in the very midst of the revival itself! Probably churches of every sect might make the same confession.

Look South for another example. Say what you will, and however truly, of the spuriousness of pro-slavery religion, no candid man will deny that they have genuine churches in the rebel states, and that some of those churches have enjoyed genuine seasons of special grace. But with what effect on the hideous iniquities of slavery? Take that whole southern horizon, in imagination, into one view; and you have a grand vision, grotesque and horrible—hymn-books and whips, hallelujahs and screams, prayer-meetings and auctions for "niggers;" young converts going into the church and long coffles going into the slave-pen.

The difficulty in all the instances we have cited is not chiefly the want of religion. It is the want of a special application and enforcement of religion on the special sin of the church or individual. We have gone on the false assumption that religion, once received, would apply itself. We have expected that, in its liquid flow, it would diffuse itself through all the channels of the soul; as it would in any warm, generous nature uncursed by depravity. We have forgotten that the coldness of a sinner's nature chills the stream to a sluggish current, that stops while half the channels yet are dry.

The good brother we mentioned, with the explosive temper, apparently never thought of bringing his religion to bear on that infirmity. The redoubtable sister, with her bustling charities and her ugly will, asked God for everything but the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. The churches, in the great revival, were more anxious to save souls than to temper their zeal with love. Southern christians trained the guns of their rebuke upon every unpopular sin, shooting clear of the hydra-heads of slavery. Here, too belonged the shallow sophism of the New York American Tract Society, that christianity, carried to the South, would somehow apply itself to slavery, without any unpleasant necessity of running the risk of tar and feathers or a "hempen necklace" by any more special allusion to that disagreeable subject.

Now there are disciples who, it may be with no more sincerity or self denial than the one-sided christians we have alluded to, have a rounded and admirable beauty of character. Take them in any state of fortune or misfortune, turn them upside down and over and over with agitations and calamities; and somehow, like a kaleidoscope, they will come up as orderly and beautiful as ever! The reason is plain. They carry their religion around the whole scope of their character, bringing the whole equally under its power. They "grow up into Him in all things which is the Head, even Christ."....

A few years since a good deacon in a town of Massachusetts offered a tract to a mechanic whom he found strolling about on the Sabbath. The man turned it over, noticed the imprint of the same society to which we have already alluded, and flung it behind him, crying, "Confound the cowardly craft! I won't sail under that flag!" Now the officers of that society were better men than this Sabbath breaker. But, nevertheless, at the point of contact with him, they were weaker than he. He held to a bold rebuke of a giant evil, in spite of its popularity. He stood, as to that, on higher ground than they, and he knew it. Thank God, they have come to a better wisdom! "Let the dead past bury its dead."

We need more religion in every church and every heart. But if we can learn to make the best use of what religion we already have, the gain will be immeasurable! We want a balanced character, every grace holding every other in counterpoise. We want the circle of virtues complete. A break in it is like a break in the magic circle of the old astrologers, letting in some demon unawares. We want to remember that doing good is a small matter compared with being good.

CHRISTIAN UNION.
Or, Sectarianism opposed to Reform.

NUMBER TEN.

"Brethren of Jesus, sons of love,
How love-like, godlike, these should be;
In earth beneath and heaven above,
One undivided family."

The limits of our work require us to close this branch of our subject with the present chapter; and we shall be compelled to turn from our hasty and imperfect view of the evils of sectarianism, to search out and apply the remedy. We trust that we shall convince the reader that we have not drawn the dark picture, presented in these articles, unnecessarily. We have no pleasure in the contemplation of such a picture. We love christianity and the church of God, and do not delight in exposing the faults of christians, or the weaknesses of the church. Surely, if the picture we have drawn is true to the reality, it is time that the church was aroused to the importance of action on this subject. To mourn over divisions as unfortunate, but continue to build our various sects, will not reach the case. Immediate and unconditional repentance is the great law of the gospel. No repentance for any sin is genuine unless the sin is put away. This law applies to the church as well as to the people of the world. Christians, above all others, should hasten to put away what is wrong. The sins of the church, above all others, must be exposed and denounced, that the church may be saved. And among the sins of the church of modern times, sectarianism stands up pre-eminent in ruinous consequences. Under it a score of lesser abuses and wrongs hide, as under the wing of a protecting demon. There is no conscience on this subject among the mass of christians.

The sin of schism is committed with as much complacent coolness as if it were a cardinal virtue. He who can build up the sect most rapidly, is the most popular clergyman. Appeals to the spirit of the party, instead of being looked upon as a shame and a scandal, are regarded as the climax of eloquence in a home-missionary sermon, or a speech before some high ecclesiastical assembly. Hymns, expressive of attachment to "old-fashioned Methodism," or the expression of a hope to "live and die a Baptist," are to be found among the cherished literature of these sects. Those who applaud such sentiments, do not understand that they are thus applauding the spirit of one of the most destructive sins of a long line of ages. So dreadfully perverted by popular teaching is the public conscience on this subject, that to arouse it to the sin of sectarianism, will require the most earnest and pointed repesentation of its enormity. That there are difficulties in the way of the removal of this evil is not to be denied for a moment. An evil so wide-spread as sectarianism, so deeply imbedded in the world's religious history, and strongly entrenched behind the religious education of ages, can never be removed without a struggle. But when among any considerable number of earnest christians there is an honest desire to put away a sin of the church, that desire will find ways and means to work out its results. To awaken such a desire is our first work,—a work that would seem easy of accomplishment, in the light of the facts and reasonings of these few articles. A sin which has marked its track through the ages in blood and ruin, and which still lingers in the bosom of our christianity, like a poisonous monster in the temple of God, ought to arouse every christian heart for its instant destruction. THE FEMALE CONVENTION.

Our meeting commenced Wednesday, according to appointment. On my arrival in the afternoon train from Rutland, I made my way to the Stone Church, and found sisters there from New York, Sr. Smith, and others from other places; and as we commenced our work, the Lord was with us. As for the business of the convention, we have nothing to say in this article; that will be given by the President of the Association there organized. After consultation, it was thought best after the first day to have preaching three times daily, instead of spending so much time in business and conference meetings. As soon as it was announced there would be preaching, there were ears to hear, and the people gathered in to listen to the women. Some prejudice existed among the good citizens of Poultney against females taking so bold a stand, but an increase of hearers showed that prejudice was fast giving way; and the falling tear among the crowd told louder than words that God was able to soften the heart through the preaching of females, and ere we were aware of the fact, the fatted calf was killed.

Our meeting commenced in the Spirit, and continued in the Spirit (with few exceptions), and wound up to the glory of God. We had one little kid to make merry with, praise the Lord. We asked for one, and we got it; we are asking for more, and we shall have them, for they are already coming. But two of our brethren attended the meeting from a distance, and continued with us through the meeting. They were willing to help those women that labor in the gospel by advice and counsel, which help we kindly solicited. We hope we shall never think of running alone, without the aid of our brethren, and the strong arm of the Lord to lean upon; and truly, if we think we are something, we shall find we are nothing.

The friends in Poultney have been very kind in receiving us into their houses,—have given us homes, for which we feel very grateful; and a promise is left on record—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Such will have their reward at the resurrection of the just.

Sunday evening a collection was taken for us, which amounted to thirty-five dollars, and together with some that had been sent in by friends abroad, we received five dollars each, which was kindly appreciated. Our female attendance from abroad was not large, but enough came to gladden our hearts and to show us we were not alone in the gospel field, and that God is able to choose his own instruments in these last days to help give the last note of warning to a perishing world.

The church in Poultney were in a low, discouraged state when our meeting commenced; but seeing the zeal which we manifested for God, the spirit we brought here with us, and the love for our dying fellow men, an interest has been awakened in their hearts to break from their slumbers, and to take hold of the work of the Lord afresh. By invitation, I tarry and labor with them awhile, while others have taken their departure this morning to their homes. May God help me to labor in the Lord for the good of souls. We think our dear friends in Poultney will not say this Female Convention has been any injury to them.

Dear sisters, be encouraged to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. Preach the word. Warn the sinner. Comfort the feeble-minded. Support the weak. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, "Be strong; fear not; behold your God will come with a recompense and save you." And may we all feel our entire dependence upon the Lord, knowing without him we can do nothing. And may the God of peace sanctify us wholly, and preserve us blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Thy sister in strong bonds of christian love and union with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity,

Poultney, Vt. A. MUSSEY.

A NEW CHART.

I have just arranged the principles of an easy and simple chart that all can understand, and have found the man who can paint copies for $5.00 each, with the Great Image, and the beasts, with seven lines of prophecy, with dates running down to these times. Every lecturer ought to have one. There is no profit made on them. The painting would cost more than $5.00 by a city painter. The chart is rolled up on a good cane, three feet long, with a good case about one inch in diameter, light and convenient. I have made arrangements with Bro. Hiram Johnson to furnish them to those who wish. Those who may want them can address me at Chicopee Falls, Mass.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Bro. Munger:—I am very much pleased with the style of your new chart, it is so convenient. It can be used as a cane, when walking; and, when preaching, without the trouble of hanging it up in the usual manner, it can be held in the left hand as you would hold out a cane horizontally, while the right hand points to the chart. For convenience it is ahead of anything yet. H. K. FLAGG.

CAMPMEETING.

The yearly meeting at Alton Bay, N. H., will soon be upon us. It is to commence Monday, the 28th of Aug., and there will be meetings on the ground the Sunday previous.

It is high time to begin preparations for this feast. And as there are wooden buildings more or less to be put up, I would say they must be put in readiness the week previous, so as not to interfere with the meetings. The building of tents was a great annoyance last year while the meeting was in progress. Let the wooden buildings be all ready to receive their company by Saturday, the 26th, and as many tents pitched as is convenient. This would help perfect our arrangements at an early time in the week, which is quite desirable. The meeting is designed for the good of all; not to discuss those controverted points of doctrine among us, but to bring out and present before the public those sublime, saving truths on which is suspended the great plan of redemption, through Jesus Christ our Lifegiver. Let preparation be made right early, and let there be a grand rally to Alton Bay this year, in the name of the Lord of Hosts.

The call for the meeting may soon be expected. L. BOUTELL, for Committee.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, June 27, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ APPOINTMENTS.—Those who wish to put their appointments in the next paper, should have them at the office as early as Monday morning, July 3d, as we are obliged to issue our paper one day earlier, on account of the stoppage of the printing business July 4th.

THE IMAGE.—We would call attention to the article by Bro. A. Ross, on the metallic image of Daniel second chapter. There are some points in the latter part of his article that are worthy of the special attention of the student of prophecy.

"A HOPE."—Do not fail to read the article in another column, headed, "I have a hope." It is from "The Witness," an excellent monthly published in New York, edited by James Inglis.

ECLIPSES.

It may be a question with some, why say so much about eclipses? What have they to do with the time of the Lord's coming? Others say, if we are dependent on the correctness of the calculation of eclipses for our understanding of the evidences of Christ's coming, we must believe just because some astronomer says it is so, which we do not like to do, where so much interest is at stake; and besides, say they, we believe that when the true time is proclaimed, it will be simple, and the arguments and evidences will be so plain that the common people can comprehend them without difficulty. We would say to all such, that is just what we have believed for the past nine years.

Now a word about eclipses. The reason why so much is said about them is, because it is believed by many that an erroneous chronology, conflicting with the Bible and correct history, has been based upon unreliable astronomical data. The object of Bro. Thurman and his friends has been to show where the error is, and bring people to rely more upon the Bible, and less on men's opinions that conflict with the sacred record. That a part of Ptolemy's Canon is in conflict with the Bible chronology, we think has been most fully demonstrated, and much more strong evidence may be given to prove this point. Now, if it can be shown by eclipses where Ptolemy is wrong, and that the ancient eclipses, when correctly located, are in full harmony with the Bible events, then the skeptic is disarmed, the christian strengthened and comforted.

The time argument does not rest on astronomical calculations. When one is about to erect a building, he must first remove the obstacles that are on the spot where the edifice is to stand. They are no part of his building, yet some of them may be turned to good account, for scaffolding and other purposes. So in this case; before we could have a solid foundation for a chronological argument on the age of the world, and the fulfillment of the prophetic period; there were certain obstacles in the way, put there by Ptolemy over seventeen hundred years since, and dating back over two thousand five hundred years ago, that must either be removed, or the periods must remain sealed up. No other alternative was left. Hence the importance of a thorough investigation of this matter, which we think has been done by Bro. Thurman.

Some of Ptolemy's dates are found to be correct, and may come in to strengthen arguments from other sources. As all chronologies, so far as we know, have been based on Ptolemy's Canon, it follows that if the basis is wrong, the results arising from it cannot be correct; and so long as we adhere to him we must be against the Bible. Therefore the object of saying so much on this point, is to help the people to see the cause of our past difficulties and mistakes, and thus prepare the way for the simple Bible argument, which we think is so plain, that it may be comprehended by all the saints of the Lord. "The end of all things is at hand."

THE JUSTINIAN CODE.

It is thought the issuing of the Justinian Code, by the title of Pandects or Digest, was the time that "the abomination that maketh desolate" was "set up" spoken of by Daniel the prophet, and that the 1260, 1290 and 1335 days begin at the same point.

Justinian began his sole reign as Emperor of the eastern division of the Roman empire, on the death of Justin, Aug. 1st, A. D. 527, and "reigned thirty-eight years and seven months."—Universal History, Vol. 16, p. 627. He was a very able and earnest supporter of the Roman Catholic church, and also a bitter persecutor of those who would not submit to her authority. About this time, it is thought the woman became associated with the scarlet-colored beast, described in Revelation, seventeenth chapter; and at the same time took place the union of church and state, or the woman began to commit "fornication" with "the kings of the earth"; for whenever a union of church and state takes place, the Scriptures show that it is an act of adultery on the part of the church.

It appears important in the examination of the subject under consideration, to fix the date where the "Justinian Code" of "Pandects," or "Digest," was published. Gibbon says, Justinian "was preparing to publish the Pandects of the Roman laws," "at the time" "he received the messengers of victory," announcing that Belisarius had defeated the Vandals at Carthage, in Africa. Gibbon, Vol. 4, pp. 133–4. Belisarius, the general of Justinian, who had command of the expedition against the Vandals, "sailed from Constantinople in June, 533, and after a voyage of three months the army disembarked in the vicinity of Carthage, and a series of victories soon brought that capitol and the person of Gelimer himself [the Vandal king] into the power of the Byzantines."—New Amer. Encyclopedia, Vol. 10, p. 90.

Townsend says in his "Manual of Dates," p. 228, "The Institutes [of Justinian] were completed Nov. 21st, 533, and the Pandects, or Digest, Dec. 16, 533."—In J. Aspin's "Universal Chronology" it is stated on p. 175, "The Digest of Justinian" was "published on the 30th of December," "A. D. 533."

There appears to be a complete harmony among historians and chronologists as to the date of this "famous code;" all placing it in the latter part of A. D. 533. If there is any year in the reign of Justinian, and any event in his life to mark the commencement of the temporal power of the Pope, or the setting up of the abomination, it appears to be in A. D. 533.

"IT DOES ME MORE GOOD."

There is much truth in the above heading, as applied in the following extract from Bro. Reuel Willis' business note. We hope all will prove the truth of the saying by experience. It will also be a source of much comfort to those who have the care of the Crisis. Please consider this matter, in a practical manner. Bro. W. writes from East Auburn, Me., as follows:—

"I send you a dollar and a quarter to pay for the Crisis six months longer. I choose to pay for it six months at a time in advance. It does me more good to read it when it is paid for. It is so good that I feel as if I could not well do without it. I believe the sentiments it advocates. I love the doctrine of the Savior's coming; the anticipation of it affords me comfort, though I may not live to see it. And the thought that he is coming soon must be a source of joy and consolation to all that love him. I do not see how it can be otherwise. I have watched the course of events in the world for a number of years with deep interest; and when anything occurs which seems to me to be a fulfillment of prophecy, it strengthens my faith, and gives me hope and encouragement. But a preparation for that day should be the chief concern of every believer. "Seeing" we "look for such things, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversation and godliness." May the blessing of God attend you, in all your labors to spread light on this blessed doctrine."

Yours respectfully, REUEL WILLIS.

"THE SOLDIER'S TRACT."

The following extract is from "The Soldier's Tract," published July 4th, 1861. It has been circulated among the soldiers, and is said to be received by them with much interest and preserved in preference to all others:

"A spiritual prophecy, foreshowing the termination and final result as purposed by the Divine Spirit, to be effected by this strange American war." "Delivered in trance, by Mr. L. J. Pardee, at Allston Hall, Boston, on Sunday afternoon, May 26th, 1861." "We hold that this adminstration has a mission to perform, though it is perhaps the last adminstration elected under the present constitution. . . . Any man who believes that this grand [Spiritual] philosophy comes to do a little work and then die away, to stir the church up a little, and not to walk into the government to cleanse the Augean stables there with its fire-blood of divine light, . . . does not apprehend that this truly is the day of judgment. . . . You must be prepared for such times as you never yet dreamed of. What is the mission of this nation? Abraham Lincoln, in the hands of God, has a mission to dislocate the neck of Southern arrogance and influence, and to break the backbone of its slavery; but the government will get its own backbone broken too. The higher life will control the secret springs which guide the nation. . . . This is not merely a political revolution; it is a spiritual revolution, reaching the heart of hearts of things in state, church, and society. First, indeed, the power of Spiritualism was felt in the church, somewhat, ; then, in the sphere of politics; now it has got to go back again into the church, and stir up a deeper religious sense of the wants and defects of the people . . .

The next government which shall arise over this people, and which is even now drawing nigh from out the angel world, will be a Theocratic Democracy—God ruling through mediumistic man. . . . And then, as Spiritualism and celestialism march over the land, the master souls, once denizens of time, will influence men's acts; the spiritual congress above will guide in all wisdom and truth the councils assembled here below. . . . The true men and women of the crisis are not out yet, . . . but in . . . due season they will come forth. . . . The ancient heroes and law-givers, the teachers and guides of the race, come back to guide mediumistic men and women."

CORRECTION.—In Bro. Dixon's letter of last week, third page, last paragraph, instead of "and preaches," etc., read, "Preachers, who have the real good of the cause at heart, and feel for perishing men, will find there are," etc.

CORRECTION.—In Bro. Preble's article, of June 13th, for "shab-bah-thohri," read shah-bah-thohn." And for "katapaus," read katapauo. Also, for "anapano," read anapauo.

SOUTH BUTLER CONFERENCE.

This was one of the best and largest meetings we have attended for a number of years. Many of the lovers of truth and peace came over one hundred miles. They came, expecting to enjoy a good meeting; and from what was manifested in their expressions, we think none were disappointed. If the same spirit was always carried out by all who profess the same "blessed hope," then love and union would prevail, instead of strife and division.

Minds differently educated from the great fountain of truth, were there, and different views of the glorious future reign of Christ were presented in the spirit of the gospel. And as we have not yet come to the more perfect age, when they will see eye to eye, but here we yet see through a glass darkly, or imperfectly; hence we must not expect that all will see all things alike. But the great foundation truth, the coming of our Lord, the resurrection, life and immortality through Christ, the fulfillment of prophecy, the signs of the times, of which all can see enough to unite all their efforts with greater zeal than in days past; for now of a truth we can say our salvation is nearer than when we first believed; and the few brief days, or years, at most, that yet are before us, should not be spent in idleness, or slumbering and sleeping, or being wearied of the journey of the past, or discouraged by the many hindrances that we may see in our onward march; for victory and the unfading crown are sure to be given to all who endure unto the end.

CALLS FOR TRACTS.

We receive many calls for tracts to distribute, from those who have no money to pay for them,—like the following from a brother in Fort Wayne, Indiana:—

"I am in a city of over 17,000 inhabitants, and I find no Advent people here, and sectarianism dominates. If I had a few thousand tracts to distribute in the State of New York, I think much good would result from it. I wish I was able to purchase the same, but I am not. I am in my 60th year, and have a family to support by daily labor. If the Society or brethren, who have the money, wish me to act for them, I will do all I can for them in the work of distribution; but I have no money to invest in any enterprise whatever. If I had, some of my good brethren would find it out before many hours."

We have sent you $5.00 worth, with the money which the good brethren have sent in for such purposes. May they shed much light in that region of darkness, and bring many to the knowledge of the truth.

FREEDMEN'S AID SOCIETIES.

The immense field which Providence has opened to the labors of the church among the freedmen South, and the immense work which is to be done in their behalf, demand immense agencies and a more than ordinary exercise of liberal and large-hearted benevolence. Accordingly we find, within the past three years, missionary and philanthropic organizations springing up in large numbers all over the land, and even beyond the ocean, among all who have a heart to feel and a hand to do for the cause of God and the lifting up of the down-trodden and oppressed.

We give below the names of some of these Societies, that our readers may see what other Christian people are doing, and be stirred up with a noble emulation to go and do likewise.

The New England Freedmen's Aid Society, organized Feb. 7, 1862.

The New England Freedmen's Aid Commission (Baptist), organized Oct. 26, 1863.

The National Freedmen's Relief Association, of New York, organized Feb. 22, 1862.

The Penn. Freedmen's Relief Association, organized Mar. 5th, 1862.

The Western Freedmen's Aid Commission (Ohio).

The North Western Freedmen's Aid Commission (Illinois).

The National Freedmen's Relief Association of the District of Columbia.

The New Hampshire Freedmen's Relief Association.

The Freedmen's Relief Association, at Worcester, Mass.

The Freedmen's Aid Society, of London, England.

The Union and Emancipation Society, of Manchester, England.

These two last mentioned Societies have sent liberal contributions to America.

The Boston and New York societies have numerous branches in the Northeastern States, and many of these branches support their own missionary and teachers.

To the above should be added the American Missionary Association, which is doing more for the mental and religious instruction of the blacks than perhaps any other.

There are many other Associations which are not named in the above list.

The aggregate amount of monies, etc., contributed to, and expended by, these societies, for the benefit of the freedmen, we have not the statistics at hand to show. We judge, however, from such reports as we have, that it must be very large.

The Treasurer of the Pennsylvania Freedmen's Relief Association reports that the cash receipts for the fiscal year 1864 were over $61,000, which has been mostly expended for clothing, medical stores, fitting up school houses, etc., etc., and the maintenance of teachers. But this is but a small part of what has been done for the freedmen by that State. The Friends have contributed some $130,000, which, with other contributions, swells the doings of the Keystone State to over $200,000.

The subscriptions to the New England Freedmen's Aid Society, the last year, were over $35,000, to which, from the sales of clothing, books, etc., and a balance on hand, is to be added about $10,000 more. In the list of donations to this society we find some eighty names giving from $50 to $100 each; over one hundred who have given from $100 to $500 each; ten, from $500 to $1000 each; two, $1000 each; and one $2000.

The American Missionary Association reported at their last annual meeting a total disbursement for the freedmen during the year of $100,000. The cash receipts for the first eight months of this fiscal year are $76,500, of which $52,000 have been expended, and whole amount of clothing sent is about two thousand barrels.

While others are contributing so largely, and doing so much, how much shall we do?

W. B. H.

IT MUST BE DONE QUICKLY!

A missionary in Virginia, in the employment of the Christian Commission, writes from City Point:—"I am under the growing conviction that what is done for the freedmen must be done quickly. This is their transition state; now they regard us as friends. It is not the 'bread that perisheth' they ask for, but food for their minds, instruction that will enable them to read God's Word. With such a motive governing them (and it seems to be a general thing with them), who can say nay?"

Another writes from Mobile:—"There never was presented to any people so vast a field for the exercise of benevolence as is presented here in the South to-day to the good Christian people of this world";—in connection with which, the New York Independent remarks:—"The crisis is urgent; the necessity great; and what can be done, in sending clothing or money for these poor, should be done quickly."

A great work is before us, and the time is short. A million of colored youth are crying for moral and religious instruction; and two or three million of freed men and women are waiting to be taught in evening and Sabbath schools, and to have the gospel preached to them. To instruct so vast a multitude in letters and in the principles of Christianity, so that they can read and understand God's Word for themselves, will require twenty or thirty thousand teachers and missionaries. In this great work, every denomination of Christian people is called upon to do their part. Shall we do ours?

Before another six months have passed, we ought to have twenty or thirty missions established among them (each having its duly appointed missionary, teacher and assistants), with a Fund of $15.000 or $20,000 for their support, until they shall become self-sustaining.

We have already, among us, a goodly number who are ready and anxious to go. There is money enough, and liberality enough, to provide the means to send them. Shall it not be forthcoming—now?

Our christian brethren of other denominations are awake to the importance and urgency of the work, and are sending in their thousands, and hundreds, and fifties. The question, kind reader, for you and me is,—"How much is it MY duty to give? Let that question be considered in the light of approaching judgment, and when we have decided how much God has given us to do, let us do it quickly! W. B. H.

TERMS OF THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

The Young Pilgrim will be continued semi-monthly the ensuing year, at the following rates:

For a single copy,—Fifty Cents a year; and at the same rate for any number of copies under ten.

Ten copies, or any number of copies under fifty, when sent to one address,—Forty Cents a year for each copy.

Fifty copies, and any number of copies over fifty, when sent to one address,—Thirty-five Cents a year for each copy.

To Canada subscribers,—at the same rates, with no extra charge for American postage.

All subscriptions for the coming year must be made at the above rates.

The friends will understand that these advanced terms are necessary to make the paper self-sustaining. Should the expenses of publication another year be less, and the circulation advanced so as to warrant a lower price, the terms will doubtless be decreased accordingly. It is hoped, therefore, that all, in the mean time, will bear this slight advance in their expenditures cheerfully, and help the Young Pilgrim on his way with a free and liberal hand.

The call for donations to the Sunday School Fund, to make up the past year's deficiency, is withdrawn.

We shall send the July numbers of the new volume to all of our present subscribers, and hope to hear from every one before the 1st of August. After that, no more will be sent, except to those who have renewed their subscription.

CLUBS.

Sunday Schools and neighborhoods, by taking the paper in clubs, at the above rates, and having them all sent to one address, with no other name on them, will save, in clubs of fifty and over, 37 cents a year on each copy; in clubs of ten to fifty, 32 cents a year on each copy; and, in smaller clubs (of less that ten), from 12 to 21 cents a year on each copy.

Subscriptions may commence with January, April, or July, and at no other times. Back numbers will be sent from either of these dates.

All communications, orders, and remittances, should be addressed to the YOUNG PILGRIM, BOSTON, MASS.

FABLES OF INFIDELITY, AND FACTS OF FAITH

Are going off rapidly, and as the next lot may come a little higher, now is your chance to secure them cheap. A better investment of 30 cts. or $1.00 cannot be made. The Crisis readers, above all Christians, are interested in the integrity of the Bible, whether assailed in matters of fact, or by specious and false modes of interpretation. And so they, above all others, should be "light-bearers." Many of you know what it is to be sceptical, and you know how strange and mighty the spell that bound you. Nothing but GOD'S TRUTH is able to break it.

Many of you know the value of these tracts. Shall we not hear from some of these? And if any one sees fruit springing from the circulation of these tracts, let us hear from you too. X.

CHRISTIAN BAPTISM.

The above work, long needed and looked for, is just published, and we feel at liberty to recommend it to all, as well worth the money. Perhaps nothing of the size and price has ever been written which will compare with it in value. It is filled with extracts from writers of all denominations,—just such remarks as will effectually silence those who call immersion a modern thing. It may be obtained of the author, or at this office. X.

LEAFLETS FOR LETTERS.

We have just printed more than ONE MILLION pages of small tracts, envelope size, on colored paper, written on practical subjects, and well worthy of a wide circulation. They are eminently adapted for the unconverted, and in a measure will supply the want that has long been felt in this direction. We hope to issue others soon. Meanwhile, let these be scattered freely. Set the "little preachers" to working, and so furnish funds for a new delegation. Come, brother! Come, sister! Send in your odd dime, your spare dollar, and so secure a share in the Lord's Safety Fund. Keep them on hand, and let every letter sent to your friends bear a message from the Lord to some sin-sick, weary soul.

In another column you will find a full notice of the tracts and their price. Those who have already sent us money for these tracts, will receive the amount ordered in a few days. X.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

La Tour, Pellice, via Turin, Italy, June 1st, 1865.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I am very sorry I have nothing of particular interest to write you of the beautiful month of May which has passed since I wrote my last report for the United States. The weather has been most delightful—pleasant, and quite warm, and air very fresh, so that one does not feel the languor that usually accompanies warm weather in most climates. The first haying season commenced the middle of May, grass being cut here three times during the warm season, so that the farmers have plenty of occupation. They work early and late, and have but little time for repose during the week, except in the intense heat of mid-day. For this reason I have preached but twelve times the past month. Nevertheless my time has been fully occupied, as much so as at any time since our arrival here, in trying, in the name of our Master, to lay a good foundation for the future of this Mission, that it may be prosecuted with more efficiency in the future than in the past year.

My heart is often very sad that so many millions of money are wasted in the service of Satan, while the work of God is so straitened for lack of means. I often find it impossible to sleep during the night watches, my heart is so moved in view of this great field, in which I feel called of God to labor, and which is so destitute of workmen; while those who would most gladly wear out their lives in this holy work, are so crippled for lack of some of the means that is wasted. How will this subject be viewed in the great day of accounts? May God grant that those who read these lines, may be impressed with the great responsibility that rests upon them of laboring to convert sinners to Christ, that they may be prepared for his glorious coming, which is not a dream of the imagination, but a great and solemn reality. But notwithstanding many discouragements arising from straitened circumstances which have bound us, and the power of our great enemy, yet we are not discouraged; our trust being in God, who we have firm trust will not leave us, but will open our way to broader efforts than we have as yet been able to make, that with our dear young brethren, Jean Gemete and Francois Besson, we may give ourselves entirely to this important work of the Lord.

The very sad news of the assassination of our dear chief magistrate, Hon. Abraham Lincoln, and the attempt upon the life of Hon. Secretary Seward, struck us as with a thunderbolt, nearly paralyzing us—not because we did not believe that great republic of America was able to elevate immediatly to the office of President another good and capable man, as her people have well done, but because the Devil, through his agents intended, by destroying liberty and freedom of conscience, to overthrow the church of God; and by establishing slavery and despotism to trample under foot all knowledge, all true christian civilization, all missionary operations, leaving in their place the barbarian aristocracy of the South. But we are very happy that the enemy of all good made another great mistake! We hope that some of the ministers of the National Vaudois church will now see their mistake and no longer speak of Jeff. Davis as "a very pious, good man," and of the slaveholders of the South as "benevolent christian people" who have done much for their churches and school establishments.

We gratefully acknowledge the receipt of twenty-one francs from German friends of Wirtemburg, through Bro. Hardegg. With much love to christian friends, I am your brother, waiting for the kingdom.

CONVENTION AT POULTNEY, VT.

BRO. GRANT:—I had the privilege of attending this meeting. And although there were circumstances which rendered the beginning rather discouraging, yet the meeting was a success. There were three things which made the commencement of it rather disheartening to the delegates who attended the convention.

1. The Advent church in P. have been without stated preaching for something like a year past, if I remember correctly; and the church were in a low and somewhat discouraged state in consequence. Of the three ruling elders, or officers of the church, one had left the place, one was sick, and the other lived some three miles distant from the place of meeting; hence there could not be that attention paid to the general interest of the meeting, and to strangers, at the commencement which would have been desirable.

2. There was strong opposition to the meeting on the part of some, as they were fearful that "women" could not conduct a meeting of the kind without bringing a "disgrace" upon the cause of Christ.

3. In the call for the convention, there was an oversight in stating that there would be preaching only in the evening of each day, and business meetings in the day-time. This no doubt had a tendency to keep some from the meeting.

But notwithstanding all these embarrassments, on the second day and evening there was a good attendance of the people of Poultney, and the preaching and other exercises of the meeting were so interesting that the people began to feel a deep interest, which continued to increase until the close of the convention, with full meetings. Opposition which was very strong at the beginning was compelled to give way; and public confession was made to that effect.

The preaching by our sisters during the entire meeting would not suffer in comparison with some of our best male preachers in its results. We have seldom witnessed a deeper interest, on the part of saints and sinners, than was manifested during this meeting. But as it is not my intention to give a report of this convention, as this will be done by others, I will just say to those who oppose female preaching, I am of the opinion that, if they had been present during this meeting, their opposition would have somewhat abated.

PRAYERS FOR SIGHT REQUESTED.

Sister Huldah Rollins, who has suffered much for several years from partial loss of sight, and who has suffered several surgical operations on the eyes with some beneficial effects, but restoring the sight only partially, and fails to hope for recovery unless the Lord in mercy to her imparts his healing power,—requests the special prayers of the Lord's children that her sight may be restored. She is a faithful, widowed sister, and worthy the sympathies of the household of faith.

ASTRONOMY CONTINUED.

In Prof. Hudson's article in the last Crisis, in paragraph sixth, is a point which deserves some attention. He says that his friend "Mr. X. informed" him that, "if the eclipse of B. C. 457 was total at Celænæ, there were two errors in Eld. Thurman's computation of it." As truth fears nothing from investigation, I would keep nothing behind the curtain. I have offered my astronomical tables to the world; and if any astronomer, who has confidence enough in his calculations to suffer his name to be used, and will say that my tables do not make the eclipse of Dec. 16th, B. C. 457 total at Celænæ, I will publish it to the world as something reliable; for my desire is not to deceive the people, but to give the light of truth.

I have before mentioned that the correctness of my tables is here sustained by Pingre, who makes the eclipse within two minutes of the same with mine; and it is evident from Herodotus that a total eclipse of the sun did pass over the army of Xerxes at the time he invaded Greece, and those who are willing to examine the subject are compelled to admit that this total eclipse occurred either on the 16th of Dec. B. C. 457, or nowhere. Hence we think those tables that fail to make a total eclipse at Celænæ at that time, are incorrect. And if the "Oracle" was unable to make any eclipse at all, where Herodotus had a total one; he is not only at variance with all learned astronomers, but in this eclipse he is at variance one hour and thirty-eight minutes with himself as to time, and more than seven digits as to the quantity eclipsed; for he says that "Mr. T. made the time of new moon almost three hours later than himself"; and yet sets down the middle of the eclipse at seven hours fifty-three minutes, which is only one hour and twenty-two minutes earlier than we have it; and if in this he has made no mistake, his tables must have made an eclipse there of more than seven digits; and yet he says he "could not make any eclipse at all at Sardis; or, at least, a very small one, if any."

Thus it will be seen that when the "Oracle" had an error of about three hours in his calculations, he was unable to make any eclipse at all at Sardis; but after correcting his error by adding one hour and thirty-eight minutes to his former calculations, his tables make one more than seven digits; and now he must add one hour more to make Prof. Hudson's standard eclipse of A. D. 136, and enough to the node to make it as full as Ptolemy informs us that it really was, and then his tables will make the eclipse of B. C. 457 total.

In defense of our Bible, I have more than once declared that no astronomical tables can make those eclipses in harmony with Ptolemy's Canon, which occurred before the year 431. Prof. Hudson, when claiming to be able to prove that I am incorrect in this assertion, said: "If you would like authority, good friends, please trust that of my word, when I say that the "Oracles" I have consulted may satisfy some of you, when they come to speak." We have with much patience been waiting for him to comply with his promise. Despairing of any proof on his part, we will now examine the testimony of the "Oracle." He declares that the "Oracle" is worthy "to be relied on as far as any authority may be appealed to in the case." We will therefore call him in as our first witness in the case.

Mr. X., will you inform us how much your tables eclipsed on the 8th of Mar., B. C. 720?

Ans. "Two digits and five-tenths."

Tell us now how much your tables eclipsed on the 25th of April, B. C. 491?

Ans. "There was no eclipse at all at that time."

Thus Prof. Hudson's "Oracle" proves the correctness of the statement that I made on page 34 of the "Book of Daniel Opened," about which there has been so much said to show that I was incorrect.

Says Prof. Hudson, "The eclipses of Ptolemy's Canon were actually observed, recorded and dated, and were no mere result of Ptolemy's calculations"; and if so, the eclipse of March 8th, B. C. 720, must be according to the record; that is, "three digits." Therefore, the "Oracle" must subtract enough from the moon's distance from the node to make this eclipse as full as called for; but this will throw the moon that much farther from the node on the 25th of April, B. C. 491, which, according to the authority of him of whom Prof. Hudson says he is "worthy to be an 'oracle' in this dispute," is already too far from the node for any eclipse at all. Hence, on page 34 of the "Book of Daniel Opened," we have remarked that no astronomical tables properly arranged can make all of those eclipses of the moon.

When Prof. Hudson thought his "Oracle" was rather against our position, he tried to console us by saying that "facts are not our enemies, if they may help us to the truth"; and now with the same words we would console him by saying, "Facts are not our enemies," even if, to the ruin of Ptolemy's Canon, they should establish the correctness of the true Bible chronology.

The reader will observe that Prof. Hudson is now under the necessity either of admitting that it is impossible for any astronomical tables to make those eclipses, according to the record; or that the "Oracle," whom he has introduced to the public as "an accomplished astronomer, worthy to be an 'oracle' in this dispute," is really unworthy of credit.

Correspondence.

From Sr. C. Hill.

To my Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—Once more am I permitted to write of the great mercy of my Heavenly Father, for which mercy I feel myself unable to return suitable thanks and praise. Since I experienced so much of his healing favor in my poor, dying body, (an account of which I sent to the Crisis one year ago) I have been made to feel that it was indeed for a purpose, that I might be enabled to endure the keenness of the furnace fire, increased, it would almost seem at times, to a seven-fold heat. But we feel in all a joyful confidence in Him whose ways are far above our limited comprehension, and wait for the "eternal weight of glory" that is to be brought to us at the revelation of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. And I feel continually called upon to lay upon the altar of sacrifice all the mercy of health and strength given, to receive again by faith day by day according to my needs, and God's favor to us in Christ. And I have also to record one of those seasons of refreshing, best appreciated by wanderers in a desert land, surrounded almost entirely by strangers to the blessed hope.

When I saw the call in the Crisis of Bro. Turner, for a general meeting of the scattered flock of Western New York and vicinity, I felt that it was of God and would result in good; and when through his mercy I was permitted to meet with them there, my heart was melted within me in grateful praise, at witnessing the Spirit of love—love to God, love for his work, and love for each other, in these times of division and unholy strife. I could but feel that these were the children of God, and that we should go away better prepared to wield the weapons of our heavenly warfare, for encouragement and strength received at this meeting. Praise be to God, he still lives, more than a match for all his foes, therefore my heart doth rejoice in him, and under the shadow of his wing will I trust.

Brethren and sisters, beloved in the Lord, I feel like stirring up my energies anew, to watch, labor, and pray for my own salvation and that of my fellows in a land of evil and death. Ah! who that has tried strength with his foe but feels deepest sympathy for his fellows in the conflict, sorrow and regret for the beloved ones slumbering in enchanted vales, unaware that the pleasant gales that seem wafting them onward so prosperously are but lulling them to the sleep of eternal oblivion. O how shall notes of effectual warning be raised for such? How shall the blind eyes be opened, the deaf ears unstopped? How shall the perverted imagination be corrected? Thanks be to God there is One appointed to do his work, and while the ambassadors of Christ in his stead beseech men to come to life's healing waters, we, the least, may remember the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much. What an inducement, aside from our own salvation to put on Christ's righteousness. Ah! beloved, we are called with a holy calling. Let nothing rob us of our privilege. Aye, truly we are responsible. Heaven help us in God's name to meet that responsibility

But before closing I wish to call the attention of the praying ones to the sick. Those who have long lain upon beds of affliction, or are in close confinement by sufferings, that neither pen nor tongue can describe. Is it God's will? Then we say, "Even so, Father," but while not thus assured, what a subject for earnest, agonizing prayer. O ye who have never known such sorrow, stop and contemplate this matter, and pray for the afflicted. Read their heart-melting tales in the columns of our paper. Think of them as you move around, in at least comparative health, and remember them when you go to God with your own sorrows, and may he be pleased to answer prayer in their behalf. And pray for us also, who have come up in a measure from such affliction, into a new world. Pray that we may be made efficient laborers for God; that we may have courage to face all opposition, wisdom for every necessity, and conquer, in Jesus' name. In christian love, yours,

CAROLINE HILL.

From Bro. S. Hale.

Dear Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad, greeting:—Having a desire to speak a few words for the good of the scattered flock, to encourage them to watchfulness, patience, and endurance in all things, that the God of all peace, and comfort, and consolation may rest upon them, and be found at all times in patient waiting for the Son of God from heaven. I would say I am willing to suffer reproach for the cause of my blessed Savior; yea, I will rejoice, and pray God that I may have that experience which Paul had, having obtained the evidence that the promises of God were sure to Abraham through faith and obedience, and that what God had promised to Abraham and to his seed after him through faith, that as Abraham should become heir of the world, and all who, like faithful Abraham, should become heirs also, and believing God was able to perform that which he promised, Paul declares he was justified by the exercise of this faith, and he found peace through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. "And not only so, but we glory in tribulation also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope; and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." Now, brethren, our experience may be to us as profitable as it was to Paul, by keeping in lively exercise the faith that works by love, that purifies the heart and overcomes the world. Says Paul, "The life I now live I live by the faith of the Son of God." "Who by Him believe in God. Who raised him from the dead, that your faith and hope might be in God." So says Peter. "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God." But exhort one another daily, while it is called to-day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin, for we are made partakers of Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end. Let us see to it as a people, that we examine ourselves daily, take a higher standard of living, seek more earnestly the blessing and favor of our Heavenly Father, live more self-denying and cross-bearing, see to it that our thoughts, words and actions tell in our individual experience. As did Paul, so do we desire you that ye do all show the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end, that ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherited the promises.

It was my privilege on last Sabbath, June 18th, to spend the day in Castleton, at Bro. and Sr. Mathewson's. It was a precious privilege to hear him once more, who has so faithfully declared and defended the great and glorious truths of the gospel. "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him" (Col. 2: 6), were the words of his discourse in the morning, a subject full of interest and profit. May the Lord bless our good brother's labors with abundant success. They have an interesting little Sabbath school here. Altogether, my visit has been both pleasant and profitable among them.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been a free subscriber to the Crisis almost since the paper was first started. I love the paper and I look for its weekly visits with pleasure. I do not know how I could do without it, for I love the truths it inculcates. I am poor—have but one hand—and have a large family. We have not much Advent preaching here, consequently the Crisis fills a void that could not be filled in any other manner, for I love to hear of the Master's speedy return to earth, to deliver his saints from all their troubles, to raise the sleeping dead, and to give immortality to his children. O, hail happy day! Inclosed please find two dollars (a small sum) for the Crisis. I wish I could send more, but times are hard, and it is almost impossible to get money, especially the poor.

Dear brother, I hope the good Lord will bless you in your arduous labor, and cause the paper to be a means of bringing many to embrace the truth as it is in Jesus. From your brother, looking and hoping for redemption, when Jesus comes. R. B.

Bury, C. E.

BRO. GEO. NEEDHAM, Artesia, Ill., writes: "We now have a little church, organized a few weeks ago, of fourteen members. We now stand on the Bible alone. Last Lord's day was one of the most blessed of my life. I had the inexpressible satisfaction of planting my two oldest sons, in the likeness of Christ's death, and raising them again, in "the likeness of his resurrection," hoping that at the last day they may walk in the new life, —the resurrection life. Glory to God for his unspeakable grace.

We shall be happy to see any of our brethren who are servants of the word, who do not ride a hobby, should they be passing this way. They can inquire for me at Bulkley, on the I. C. R. R. My home is in sight of the station."

BROWN. In Troy, Vt., April 22d, Zelinda, wife of Anson Brown, and daughter of Israel and Mehitable Peck, aged thirty-seven years.

She experienced religion when she was ten years of age. At twelve united with the Methodist church in Irasburg; at fourteen united with the Baptists, and was so imbued with a missionary spirit as to be willing to devote her life and talents to that work, had a door been opened by Providence. At twenty-two years of age, during the Advent movement, she changed her church relation, and felt it her duty to improve in public, and after months of trial in mind, being satisfied that it was the will of God, she took up the cross, and although she had a numerous family to care for and poor health, being under the care of a physician for months, and at one time three or four years, yet when she felt able she was faithful to her high calling, and was faithful till death. Although a great sufferer, she was patient and resigned to the last. She chose for her funeral text—"I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth," etc.

In her death her family sustain a great loss. She was a most kind and affectionate wife and mother. The church has lost a most faithful and earnest member. She being dead yet speaketh.

SMITH. Died at Bangor, Me., May 23, 1865, after an illness of only a few days. Bro. Lemuel Smith, aged sixty-two years.

Bro. Smith was a lover of God and good men. For many years religion with him was no mystery, but a living, active principle. He heard the sayings of Christ and obeyed them, as many can testify who have been blest with acts of love and kindness which were continually dropping from his hand. The little church in Bangor, whom he loved, and with whom he labored, deeply feel their loss, and are tearfully asking, who can fill his place? Not only the church, but the citizens, and men of business, are saying, a good and trustworthy man is gone. He was of good report from them without,—a living epistle. Thank God, the memory of such is blessed. They rest from their labor, and their works follow them. The hope of soon seeing Jesus, which his sincere heart so faithfully cherished, grew firmer as he neared the end.

Bless'd hope has made for him a pillow,
And faith a garment rare,
To wrap him in his slumbers,
Till Christ his home prepare.

But when the dawn of morning
Breaks in his little room,
He'll rise and cry, "Hosanna,
Deliverance has come."

Sr. Smith has much comfort. She confidently believes the good Shepherd is near, and will soon gather his loved ones to his fold. Amen.

L. DAMMAN.

WHITTIER. Died in Athens, Me, June 15th, 1865, Lizzie S., daughter of Charles and Harriet Whittier, aged eighteen years.

In this death the parents are bereft of a dear daughter, brothers and sister of a kind and affectionate sister.

They have laid her away in deep sadness,
Yet not without hope in their breast;
For we hope they will join her in gladness,
And enter the heavenly rest.

Sermon from Pr. 17: 15. CHAS. STRATTON.

WARREN. Died in West Stafford, Ct., May 21, 1865, of dropsy, Charles A., only son of Bro. Austin and Sr. Margette Warren, aged eighteen years.

Charles was loved and respected by both relatives and acquaintance. He died in the triumphs of faith.

He sleeps in Jesus, sweet his rest,
Far from a world of pain;
No mortal cares disturb his breast,
Nor sickness racks his frame.

L. B. POTTER.

CRAIG. Died in Haverhill, June 13th, John Wesley, son of Bro. John Craig, of Westford, Mass., aged twenty-four years.

My thanks to the brethren and sisters of Haverhill for their kind aid and sympathy to me in my deep affliction. JOHN CRAIG.

Herald of Life please copy.

BURRIDGE. Fell asleep in Jesus, at Lunenburg, Mass., 27, 1865, Jonathan Burridge, aged seventy-nine years and ten months.

He was a good man. He died in the belief that he should not awake, nor be raised out of his sleep till the heavens be no more. A sermon was preached on Sunday, June 4th, by S. S. Brewer.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool June 10th, Londonderry 11th.

The Emperor Napoleon has returned to Paris.

A Paris letter in the Nord says: "The Emperor Napoleon astonishes everybody by his unalterable health. Bodily weariness, enormous heat, fatigue from work—nothing overcomes him. He is always bright and well, the first to be ready, while some of his suite appear singularly fatigued."

The resignation by Prince Napoleon of the Vice Presidency of the Council and Presidency of the Exhibition Commission is accepted.

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times, under date June 8, writes as follows: "It is certain that the Mexican agent who arrived in Paris was sent by Maximilian for the express purpose of explaining the critical state of affairs in Mexico, the menacing attitude of the Americans, and the fear of his Majesty that war would be declared by the United States now that the war with the South is over. The French Cabinet has, therefore, given the Washington Cabinet to understand very plainly that Mexico is under the protection of France; that France will not allow any power to attack it; that fillibusters and adventurers entering Mexican territory with hostile designs will, taken in arms, be hanged or shot without loss of time or mercy; and that the United States Government, whose good faith France of course does not doubt, will act wisely at well as humanely by doing all in its power to keep her subjects from injuring Mexico. The Washington Cabinet probably has no desire at this moment to be on bad terms with this country, and will, no doubt, act with prudence in this affair. The language and tone of France is what may be called decidedly energetic, and may not be literally correct as I mention, but it is substantially so."

From Queenstown the 15th.

The English armor plated fleet, by invitation of Napoleon, is to make a tour around the French coast. The French armor plated fleet is to do the same around England. The combined fleets will be at Plymouth by the middle of July.

Parliament will be dissolved about the 10th of July.

The Morning Post says the negotiations between England and Canada are about to be satisfactorily concluded. Canada is expected to undertake the whole Western defence; the canals will be deepened and an efficient militia will be maintained. The Imperial Government will furnish the entire necessary armament and guarantee a loan to construct an inter-colonial railroad.

The Moniteur of the 13th, publishes a circular of the Minister of Marine, dated June 5th, closing French ports to confederate vessels.

Mrs. Lincoln had sent a reply to the Empress Eugenie's letter of condolence.

It is stated that the Emperor of Austria has agreed to reinstate Maximillian in all his rights in Austria in the event of his returning from Mexico.

Spain has ceased to extend belligerent rights to the confederates by a decree dated June 4th.

A conspiracy against the Government was discovered at Valencia and thwarted.

An agent of Juarez had arrived at Turin to attempt to procure Garibaldian officers and men for Juarez.

DOMESTIC.

Louisville, Ky., June 23. The New Albany Ledger reports a terrible accident on the Ohio and Mississippi railroad, near Loogootee, Indiana, yesterday. A freight train bound east and a soldier's train going west collided. The engineers and firemen of both trains were killed. While the conductors of both trains were engaged in angry dispute as to which was to blame, another freight train from the east ran into the soldier's train at the station, killing fifteen men, and wounding 150, many fatally. The soldiers belonged to Illinois and Mississippi regiments and were homeward bound.

Fortress Monroe, June 24. Jeff. Davis' health is much better than when he landed here off the steamer Clyde. He was seen this morning, smoking, and apparently in a calm state of mind. He is not in irons and his quarters are very comfortable.

New York, June 24. The Herald's Texas correspondence of the 10th says Gen. Steele was at Brazos Santiago, and Gen. Brown was still in command at Brownsville. There remained some rebel soldiers in the vicinity of the latter place awaiting parole. It was said that a rebel battery was run over into Mexico after Kirby Smith's surrender, which would be delivered up to the United States authorities.

Gen. Weitzel had not yet arrived in Texas, but was daily looked for.

The Mexican imperialists at Metamoras are much exercised in mind regarding the appearance of so many United States troops.

CONDITION OF AFFAIRS IN ARKANSAS.—Arkansas appears to be undergoing severe trials in consequence of the rebellion. Gov. Murphy says in a letter to Gen. Curtis:

"Our State and its loyal inhabitants have suffered terribly by this war. The people are now suffering from destitution more severely and more extensively than at any time since the commencement of the war.

After the defeat of Banks and the retreat of Steele, the rebel bands spread over the State, occupying the whole State, except fortified points. They stripped the country of stock, consumed the crop of the preceding year, and checked and disabled the labor of the State, so that little was raised or saved. This year the effort to raise corn has in a large portion of the State been defeated by the want of teams and fear of guerrillas. With the aid of Gen. Reynolds, I have since last fall formed fifty armed agricultural companies in upwards of thirty counties. They have had complete success in defending their neighborhoods and in cultivating large crops. Companies are being rapidly formed since the surrender of the rebel armies, principally of refugees from southern and southwestern counties.

A great blunder at least—strongly suspected to be by wicked design—has been committed by the rebel leaders. They have permitted their troops to disband themselves before surrender, and they have scattered in every direction, taking arms and ammunition with them, living on the country, robbing and plundering without discrimination. Several murders have already been committed. This state of things we trust will not last long. However it will strip the inhabitants of the little food saved, and increase the desolation of the country; and unless speedy relief can be furnished, hundreds will die of starvation. Gen. Reynolds is a most energetic and excellent man, and will do all that he can; but yet I fear that his means are entirely insufficient to meet the demand for relief."

RECONSTRUCTION.—President Johnson is pushing his plan of reconstruction along rapidly. All the States which seceded have been supplied with loyal Governors except Alabama, South Carolina and Georgia, and it is expected that these States will be provided for before the Fourth of July, when all the States will be back again in the Union. Seven of the States have Governors of their own choice and four have provisional Governors appointed by the President.

☞ The latest information from Mexico says the Empire is waning fast. The Emperor Maximilian is a mere puppet in the hands of Marshal Bazaine. The Empress displays more firmness and decision of character than her husband, and exerts great control over him. She is really Empress of Mexico. The foreign and Mexican troops are bordering on disorganization. The French are only reliable, and look to Bazaine for orders. The Mexicans will rebel on the first opportunity.

☞ Admiral Du Pont died at Philadelphia this morning, June 23d, after only an hour's illness.

LOCUSTS IN SYRIA.—A letter from Syria, May 3d, says: "The second crop of locusts are now hatching out, and a new swarm of the flying kind has also come on from the South. In some parts of the country they are devouring every green thing. Millions have fallen into the sea, and the waves have cast them upon the shores in winrows. Yesterday they almost darkened the sky, and the noise of their flying was like the noise of a flock of quails."

☞ Secretary Seward's family are still further afflicted by the death this morning, June 21st, of Mrs. Wm. H. Seward, in the sixtieth year of her age. The anxiety and exertion incident to the late misfortunes of her family probably produced the fever which ended her life. After embalming, the remains will be conveyed to Auburn, N. Y., by a special train to-morrow morning. The State Department is closed until further orders. Mr. Fred. Seward's recovery is seriously delayed by this bereavement.

☞ The Presidential proclamation removing the blockade from the last of the Southern ports is regarded here as being equivalent to a formal declaration of peace. All laws made by Congress which expire by limitation, on the suppression of rebellion, will be no longer enforced.

☞ Mr. Abraham Day died at Cornish, Me. on the 14th inst., at the extraordinary age of one hundred and nine years and eight months! He is reported as having been the proprietor of the first iron foundry ever established in America.

☞ Persecution still prevails in Turkey. Two Mohammedans at Sidon who lately professed christianity have suddenly and mysteriously disappeared.

☞ At the British Museum about 4150 volumes are used in the reading room daily; the number of readers has been about 106,000, or 360 per diem.

☞ The Paymaster's Department is disbursing over one million dollars per day to officers and soldiers discharged here.

☞ Francis Joseph of Austria has submitted to his popular assembly a law giving the women of his empire a right to vote.

☞ The season is said to be about a fortnight earlier than usual in England, and the harvest promises to be very abundant.

☞ Great destitution prevails in the interior of the Southern States, where there are no communications by water or rail.

☞ The New York Board of Aldermen have appropriated $20,000 for celebrating the Fourth of July.

☞ An English missionary was recently devoured by some discontented members of his parish in New Zealand.

Tremont Grove and Campmeeting.

This meeting will be held upon the same ground as last year, one-half mile from the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., on the Old Colony and Cape Cod Railroad, thirty-five miles from Boston, and eighteen from New Bedford. It will commence July 25th, and continue over the Sabbath. We hope to greet the many we have met there before, and many more beside. Shall we not see many from Portsmouth, Concord, Lawrence, and from towns round about Boston? Encouraged by the blessings of God upon this meeting in the past, we expect a larger and a better one this year.

Preachers who may come in the name of the Lord will find a cordial welcome. We, however, assume no responsibilities save with such as are engaged. None are desired who come in their own name, or in the name of some strange doctrine. The objects of this meeting are to comfort and strengthen the saints, and save men "from the wrath to come."

H. MUNGER, for the Committee.

Grove Meeting.

There will be a grove meeting held in the town of Alganse, Branch Co., Mich., in the neighborhood of Bro. Eli Wakeman, eight miles south of Quincy Station, to commence Sunday, July 2d, at 10½ A. M., and continue over the 4th. A cordial invitation is extended to all, both professors and non-professors, to attend this meeting, and celebrate the anniversary of our American independence in a manner becoming christians who are looking forward to a day when the saints of God shall be made free. Brethren, one all, lay by the cares of life and come up to this feast, that our hearts may all be made glad. Bro. A. N. Seymour is expected to be there to assist in preaching the word. Will Bro. J. V. Himes arrange to be at this meeting, to gladden the hearts of old friends, and assist in proclaiming the glad tidings of salvation to men?

A. E. BABCOCK, for the friends.

N. B. If any friends should come from abroad by railroad, if they would write to Bro. Eli Wakeman, at Quincy, arrangements will be made to take them to the meeting. A. E. B.

Basket Meeting in New Sharon.

THE YOUNG PENITENT.

Almighty God, supreme, divine,
To thee I lift my voice,
And ask of thee, ere I repine,
To bid my heart rejoice.

For I, my God, thou knowest well,
Have sinned in thy pure sight,
But wilt thou not my fears dispel,
And help me love what's right?

Then send thy Spirit, mighty One,
And make me now consent
To fly to him, thy well loved Son,
And of my sins repent.

Wilt thou my trembling soul appease,
And help me seek thy truth?
Thus may I find eternal peace
In these my days of youth.

Yes, cause me, Lord, to shun that road
Which leads to endless death;
Teach me to love thy holy word
As long as I have breath.

And having learned to sin no more
In this sad life of pain,
I'll hope, as thousands have before,
Eternal life to gain.

Thrice happy then I'll surely feel,
With all past sins forgiven;
With peace of mind I then can kneel
To thee my God in heaven.

Then when in death these eyes shall close,
Midst worldly grief and fear,
I'll sweetly in my Lord repose,
Until he does appear.

Mt. Vernon. B. J. Burnett, Jr.

DEMONISM ALIAS SPIRITUALISM.

One characteristic of the demon-teaching of the last days remains to be considered, viz.: The seducing spirits command to abstain from meats, that is, from food. In the Popish foreshadowing, this is seen in the feigned holiness of asceticism, and the prohibition of meat on Fridays. But how does it apply to Spiritualism? We have no doubt that this characteristic will be found not a whit less marked than the others. It must be remembered, however, that the system is not yet fully developed; and this mark is, as yet, less prominent than the rest. It is likely that the prohibition to abstain from meats, or food, will arise, like other parts of the system, from a pretended sympathy for "suffering creation," and a pretended superior refinement, inasmuch as the eating of meat, in its restricted sense, involves the taking of life. But we suspect that the chief object is to make the human frame more susceptible to supernatural impressions, by reducing the system through a course of training, and correspondingly exalting the psychological element. It is a well-known fact that many persons who had been weakened by lingering and emaciating disorders have become the subjects of trances and clairvoyant phenomena. We also find in Col. 2: 23 a warning concerning this sort of "neglecting of the body." Perhaps, too, the spirits, when they shall have obtained full control, will prescribe abstinence from certain articles, as a sort of test of spiritual membership.

We should be glad if any of our readers could throw a little more light on this part of the subject, derived from their personal knowledge of the practice of spiritual circles.

Frequent indications are, however, already, not wanting, of the prohibition in question. The following has been reported to us, from a trustworthy source.

"The fifth mark, commanding to abstain from eating meats, is still more unmistakably manifested. And it is remarkable that the spirits command these things, not the Spiritualists. Even the mediums do not pretend to teach it themselves, except as they receive it by direct communication from the spirits. These Spiritualists abstain from everything that is derived from an animal. They take no milk in their tea, nor butter, nor eggs, because these articles of food are of animal origin. One Spiritualist bookseller went to his bookbinder, and told him to take all the leather bindings off his books, and bind them in cloth. The binder told him he must use glue, and that came from an animal. He said he would have them without binding, if he couldn't get a mucilage without animal substance. He succeeded in getting a mucilage of that character from a chemist, but the binder refused to bind for him out of the regular way. Whether he succeeded in getting a more accommodating binder, I never heard."

The modern demonism, commonly called "Spiritualism," bears, as we have shown, all the marks of the latter-day invention of Satan, predicted in the opening verses of 1 Tim. 4. If it is true that there is nothing new under the sun, yet it can hardly be denied that this is a new phase of sorcery, adapted, in Satan's usual manner, to the aspect of the times, and brought out on a far more extensive scale than ever heretofore. Formerly, witchcraft was in bad repute, and was exceptional in its character; but now, ways and means have been devised to make it attractive, fashionable, and universal, by allying it with progress, liberty, refinement, enjoyment, and the prevalent ideas of the ungodly age. Men are being insensibly accustomed to intercourse with supernatural beings; and if, in a little while, the character of the spiritual agents should be discovered to have an origin heretofore associated with the regions of darkness, it will make but little difference, provided that compensation shall be found in the advantages bestowed. They will be first "endured," then "pitied," then "embraced." It will be discovered that many of the repulsive features were only imaginary, or were greatly distorted by "superstitious tradition," "prejudice," etc., etc. And thus the field will be left clear for the open manifestation of the great enemy, when he shall marshal his forces for his supreme effort, and for the open alliance between himself and the race of man, in the shape of the predicted antichristian confederacy. Already multitudes have been seduced from the christian faith. And no one who is acquainted with the blasphemous denial and perversion of all the cardinal doctrines of grace which "Spiritualism" makes, can fail to see the prophetic mark of "doctrines of devils." It speaks lies in hypocrisy, without compunction, as only those can whose conscience is seared as with a hot iron. It forbids to marry, and commands to abstain from meats.

And, besides all this, it bears other marks pointed out in the Holy Scriptures, which the Holy Spirit hath spoken expressly concerning it. All its pompous and lying pretensions about angelic intercourse were, long since, pointed out by him. It has, indeed, a "show of wisdom, in will-worship, and humility, and neglecting of the body." (Col. 2: 23). It makes a great pretence to "philosophy," which, however, is only "empty deceit, according to the precepts of men, and according to the elementary arrangements of the world." (Col. 2: 8). We find in it a "voluntary humility and worshiping of (so-called) angels." We find men that are misled by it, "intruding into those things which they have not seen, vainly puffed up by their fleshly minds." (Col. 2: 18). We find them speaking "great swelling words of vanity," and "catching souls by a bait," through "the lusts of the flesh, and through much wantonness;" yea, even those "that were (for a little while) clean escaped from those who live in error." And there are multitudes ever ready to be enticed by such loud trumpetings of pompous transcendental nothings, the chaff in which the deadly poison is concealed. These have "LIBERTY" promised them; whereas, in fact, the spirits and their duped and duping mediums are themselves the slaves of corruption; "for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought into bondage." (2 Pet. 2: 18, 19).

These experts in the new "Harmonial Philosophy" profess that they know God; but in their conduct they deny him, being "abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate." (Titus 1: 16). Their doctrines are the commandments of men that turn from the truth (v. 14); for even their mind and conscience are defiled (v. 15). These are the false teachers who privily have brought in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord who bought them; who shall bring upon themselves swift destruction. We find many following their pernicious ways; and by reason of them the way of truth in Jesus is evil spoken of. And it is also true that through covetousness, they, with feigned words, and pretended love of virtue, make merchandise of souls. (2 Pet. 2: 1). These are they that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government, full of revolutionary and socialistic teachings. Presumptuous are they, self-willed; they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities. As natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, they speak evil of the things that they understand not; ridiculing the holy and divine religion of Jesus Christ, through which, alone, we can be saved. These are they that even sport themselves with their own deceivings. They have eyes of adultery, that cannot cease from sin, beguiling unstable souls; a heart have they exercised with covetous practices—cursed children. (2 Pet. 2: 10–14). These are they that creep into houses, and lead captive silly women, laden with sins, led away with divers lusts; women who are always learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of what is really truth. (2 Tim. 3: 6, 7). It is in them, also, that we find the characteristics mentioned in verses 2–5.

And as for their other features, as traced in the sacred word, our readers will now hardly be at a loss to discover them. No wonder, then, that the time has now come, when so many in christendom, and even in the Evangelical churches, will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. No marvel, then, that there are so many who turn away their ears from the truth, and are turned unto fables; who love orthodox evangelical teaching, in the abstract, but are dead set against any practical application of it, from the pulpit, to the times, and to their fashionable wickednesses. (2 Tim. 4: 3, 4). No wonder there are scoffers at the second advent as ever to occur, much less in our generation! How "unscientific," "visionary," and "low!" (2 Pet. 3: 3). And what have we to expect but that these evil men and seducers will wax worse and worse, DECEIVING AND BEING DECEIVED? (2 Tim. 3: 13).

Should these remarks fall under the eye of any one that has been entangled in the snare of "Spiritualism," or that is disposed, from what he has seen or heard, to look favorably upon it, we would say to him, in the most earnest manner, Escape for thy life; look not behind! Stop not to parley, lest you should be lost; for these paths take hold on death, and lead to the place where the loving Savior and his blood-bought redemption cease to call the guilty to return, and be blest.—Prophetic Times.

For the World's Crisis.

PINGRE'S ECLIPSE OF B. C. 457.

The almanac makers are now exceedingly civil and kind. They used to give, for an eclipse of the sun, only a table, showing the times and places when and where the eclipse would begin, culminate, and end. Now they give also a diagram, a picture or map of the region eclipsed. This diagram sometimes looks funny enough. When the eclipse is total, a narrow black line shows the path in which it is seen total, or the sun totally unseen. And on each side of this path is a broad district of penumbra, or partial eclipse. The funny thing is that the outlines of this penumbra sometimes cross the path of total eclipse, and the eclipsed region appears somewhat like an hour-glass, or figure 8.

The path of the total eclipse is always more or less curved. Aware of this, but not knowing how to determine the curvature, I could not say whether Pingre's data for the eclipse of B. C. 457 would make it total at Celænæ or not. I had run a few lines in surveying mother earth; but I was not master of that higher and celestial art of surveying which would enable me to run this curved line. Mons. Pingre, indeed, gives a method for doing it, but I did not master it. I was content to know and to say what I did say about this gentleman's wholesale computation of eclipses by the thousand, with modest remark that the errors, he hoped, would not exceed half an hour in time.

I observed the reckoning upon Pingre's data, made by the editor of the Crisis. But I saw at once that there was no estimate of the course of the total eclipse. It was simply computed that the eclipse would be total on the meridian of Celænæ at such an hour. But no attempt was made to show that the total phase would not appear either north or south of Celænæ.

The path of this eclipse, according to Pingre's numbers, was queried when Mr. X. first called on me. He called on me again last week, and told me he had made the desired estimate, and had found the path running north of Celæpæ. So, if he can be trusted in this matter, the eclipse was not total at Celænæ according to Mons. Pingre, as has been claimed.

By the way, in the last Crisis Eld. T. two or three times over calls Mr. X. my "Oracle." I have given the full history of his being consulted, and the reader will say whose "Oracle" he should be called.

Again, Eld. T. calls the eclipse of A. D. 136 my "test eclipse." But I have never named any eclipse as a test. I have read some interesting remarks by Prof. Airy on certain kinds of eclipses, naming one or two, as specially valuable for tests. And I might lecture upon them, but I have resigned my lecturer's chair. As to the eclipse of A. D. 136, I think I recollect that Eld. T., setting out from a statement of mine, claimed this eclipse as verifying his tables. His tables make it, he says, very near the record of it. Very well. This may be good luck, or something better than luck. Only the test eclipse seems to me to be properly his, not mine.

Suppose I had selected an eclipse, e. g., that of the moon, B. C. 413, which was total according to Ferguson, Petavius, Heis, Zech, and X., but which Eld. T. makes only partial, viz. 10½ digits; and suppose I had taken occasion, from some remark of Eld. T., to call this his test eclipse, after having thus selected it myself; would he think this proper? Suum cuique; "each one his own," is a good rule always.

Eld. T. speaks of "that total eclipse, which all correct tables make at Celænæ, the 16th of December, B. C. 457." Will Eld. T. furnish a list of the correct tables, and also one of the incorrect tables? C. F. H.

P. S. After I wrote one of the above paragraphs, it occurred to me that Eld. T. might simply mean that I had called Mr. X. an oracle. Still I regarded his language as inaccurate, and concluded to send in the article as it was.

In the last Crisis Eld. T. calls Mr. X. my oracle half a dozen times over, and twice speaks of him as "employed" by me to expose Eld. T.'s errors.

Mr. X. was originally employed by Bro. Grant to compute certain eclipses in question. Mr. X., I have reason to think, was well recommended for such consultation.

I have never asked Mr. X. to spend more than ten minutes upon any computation for me. I did not ask him to run the line for Pingre's eclipse of 457 B. C. I have neither offered nor made any compensation, unless a little exchange of literary favors may be called a bargain. C. F. H.

NUMBER TWENTY-TWO.

JEPHTHAH'S DAUGHTER.

A shadow rested on Gilead. The people had forgotten God and joined themselves unto idols. Then they were sold to the heathen around them, and their fruitful fields were occupied by the oppressor. The Ammonites had surrounded them, and were preparing to retake the possessions they had lost in former times. In their extremity the people cried to heaven for succor, and when they had cast away their idols of wood and stone, the Lord raised up for them a deliverer. Jephthah was recalled from his exile in the land of Tob, and placed in command of the warriors of Gilead. But the danger seemed so great, and the foes so numerous, that Jephthah vowed if successful to devote to the Lord whatever should come forth to meet him on his return from victory. This was a rash vow, and in the sequel proved a source of unhappiness to the valiant leader.

Jephthah skillfully marshalled his forces, and fell like a thunderbolt upon the proud hosts of Ammon, and covered the fields with the slaughtered foes of his people. He pursued their retreating forces from Minnith beyond the Abarim mountains to Aroer, overthrowing the power of twenty cities in his victorious career. Then flushed with success, he led his conquerors back to Mizpeh to celebrate his victory.

In the door of her tent at Mizpeh sat the maiden daughter of Jephthah, impatiently waiting the return of her father from the strife of war. Fairest of the maidens of Israel was the chieftain's daughter. Her father loved her, not alone for her peerless beauty, but for her gentleness and goodness of heart, and because she was his only child and hope. Alone she sat under the white folds of the tent, gazing out upon the far off plain, watching intently for the first glimmer of the spears, or the waving of the returning standard of Gilead. She heeded not the joyous song of the birds; saw not the bright, sweet flowers that bloomed around her; enjoyed not the loving whisper of the zephyr, as it fanned her brow, or toyed with her raven tresses; but her heart was rapt in prayer for her father's success, and she confidently expected his return to announce the overthrow of the enemy.

Slowly the hours moved on; higher rose the sun, till the zenith was reached and passed; then at last, as the luminary of heaven stooped towards the mountains of Gilead, the eye of the maiden caught glimpses of a fluttering banner in the far distance; then the forest of spears and the forms of warriors were seen. Her quick ear soon drank in the sound of victorious song, and the radiance of joy lighted up her pale, beautiful face, as she prepared to meet her father whom she loved with all a daughter's sweet affection. Onward swept the warriors of Gilead, led by the triumphant Jephthah.

Thoughtfully the returning chief ascended the slope where reposed his tent amid the embowered scenes of Mizpeh, thinking sadly, yet hopefully, of the result of his vow to the Lord. Still the smile of triumph was on his brow as he passed quickly on, gazing intently on the circle of tents that circled his own. A few moments and he would be there. Another moment and a form radiant with beauty rushed to meet him, with song of joy and dance of youth. His confiding child came to embrace him, twined her arms around him, and lovingly called him "father!" The agony of a lifetime was on him; the thoughts of lately-gained victory left him; the remembrance of his vow like a dark vision pressed upon him, and he could not return the embrace of his daughter.

The seeming coldness of her father troubled the maiden, and tremblingly she inquired the cause of his gloomy silence. A sigh of anguish answered her appeal; then in the sorrow of his heart he told her all; how in the dark hour of Israel's oppression, when the foe was gathering fast around his feeble band, he vowed if victorious that whatsoever should come forth from his house to meet him should surely be the Lord's,* or should be offered as a burnt offering. A momentary flush of despair passed over the angelic face of the listener, then in the heroic meekness of her womanly nature, she answered: "As thou hast said, so let it be unto me." She only pleaded for two months in which to lament her sad fate with her mates upon the mountains.

Sadly among the by-ways of Gilead wandered the chieftain's daughter and her maidens. No joyous laughter rang out upon the breeze where erst they chanted the sweet hymns of girlhood; but the requiem of lamentation was heard wherever they went. The groves caught up the strain, and the rocks echoed it; till the passer by covered his face and wept. Swiftly passed the destined days, and the resigned maiden returned to her father. There was a look of meekness on her face more angelic than earthly, with traces of the struggles she had endured; for it was no slight thing in Israel to be separated from the domestic joys of earth forever, and live through the years in seclusion. She had returned to be consecrated to the service of Heaven, and severed from the enjoyments of earth. Jephthah met his loved daughter, still struggling with destiny, and fondly embraced her for the last time. He essayed to say farewell, but his lips moved not; he was silent in his sorrow, and his daughter moved away to her sacred duties and seclusion.

As the years rolled away, the daughters of Israel never failed to devote four days yearly to lament with the daughter of Jephthah, the Gileadite, and mourn over her destiny.

Orrin P. Allen.

* The writer is aware that there exists a difference of opinion in regard to the fate of Jephthah's daughter; but after a close examination of the subject, has arrived at the conclusion that she was not offered as a burnt offering, but devoted to the service of the Lord in the state of perpetual virginity.

For the World's Crisis.

RESTING AT WATERING PLACES.

Christian friend, are you seeking rest in places of public resort, at springs medicinal? Be sure to take Jesus with you. The sure way to rest body, mind and soul, is to go forward in duty, in public and in private, "fight the good fight," "cry aloud, spare not." No matter where you are; at watering places, springs medicinal—the healing Bethesdas; plant the Cross; "stand for Jesus"; burnish your armor; "quit you like men; be strong." Nothing so surely and effectually invigorates, produces healthful activity, physical and spiritual, as persevering in God's service. This closing our lips, taking the easy chair, or sleeping at our post, at Saratoga or elsewhere, while the serpent iniquity darts his forked, fiery tongue on every side, is not gospel. Would Paul do this so long as he could raise a finger? How did he at Mars' hill? Was the idolatry of Athens equal to that of Saratoga? "Paul's spirit was stirred within him when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry."

Christian invalids resorting to these healing streams for physical restoration, may "kill two birds with one stone." First of all, seek God and his righteousness; lay the axe at the root of all evil; strike a death-blow at every sin; "reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." Then, rest assured, the healing properties of these medicinal waters will be doubly beneficial, invigorating, and salutary. Never, beloved, allow the triumphing of Satan under the very droppings of the sanctuary.

"Never be ashamed of Jesus—
Glory ever in his cross;
Count it most exalted honor
To advance his blessed cause."

"While men slept, the enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat." Go forward; keep your faith and hope in lively exercise everywhere; and rest assured, God will bless the simplest means for your physical restoration.

Pray on; preach on; labor on.

These summer resorts for physical health and strength should never be abandoned to the devil. The salt of divine grace should be cast in so powerfully and continually as to purify the whole fountain, that the streams henceforth "make glad the city of our Lord." Brother, sister, are you at these public resorts where Satan has his seat? What are you doing to save souls, to elevate, purify and sanctify? Are your feet swift to do good, swift as lightning? Do you speed hither and thither on errands of mercy and salvation; fly on wings of love, up stairs, down stairs? While others are swift to do evil, are you swift in God's service, flashingly?

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand." Go forward where duty calls.

"No matter where, if duty calls thee, go
Amid contagion, poverty, and death:
Do, suffer, die, at duty's call divine,
Nor rest from battle till the victory's won;
Then, Soldier of the Cross, a crown is thine—
Thou faithful servant, hear thy glad well done."

D. F. Newton, Author of Home Thrusts.

"I HAVE A HOPE, BUT HOW CAN I KNOW THAT I AM SAVED?"

A correspondent writes: "It is seven years since I first hoped in Christ, but never during all these years have I known surely that I was a child of God. I have tried to serve him because I believed it right to do so; because I believed his right to the love and obedience of all his creatures; because I believed him worthy of it, but I have never known that he was reconciled to me." Nothing can be more exquisitely sad than the despondency and restless anxiety which the letter reveals; and yet such a condition seems to be the rule, rather than the exception, among the more earnest of professing christians in our day. How strongly is the language we have quoted contrasted with all that is recorded of the faith of those who first trusted in Christ! The matter at issue is of far too great moment to allow of mere criticism of language. But the language here employed cannot possibly be the expression of evangelical ideas.

First, there is the expression "hoped in Christ," which is a very common one among professing christians; and what does it mean? Those who use it are either believers or unbelievers. If they are believers, then they have God's word for it that they are justified from all things, that they are children of God, and have everlasting life; and what they are and have cannot be spoken of as objects of hope. If they are unbelievers, they are condemned already, and the wrath of God abideth on them; and what have they to hope for in that condition? The believer, indeed, has a hope in Christ; but what is it? It is not a hope that he will some day be justified, but "being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom, also, we have access into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God." It is not a hope that he will some day become a child of God; but: "Now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him (Christ) purifieth himself as he is pure."

This is the hope—"hope of the glory of God;" but how can any one rejoice in it who is not justified? Can one who is condemned rejoice in hope of the glory of God? This is the hope—no mere human probability, but "we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him;" and how can any one have "this hope in Christ" who is not already a son of God? Can the children of the devil cherish the hope, and "know that when Christ shall appear they shall be like him?"

But is it a possible thing for those who assume the christian name, and who lay claim to the privileges of the christian, and who profess to serve God, to go on from year to year without knowing whether they are the children of God or children of the devil? The distinction is not so slight as to make it a matter of nice and difficult discernment, and the consequences are not so trivial as to leave it a matter of indifference. We do not wonder at their uneasiness. How can they leave it undetermined for a day, whether they are children of God or children of the devil? Dear reader, to which of these two families do you belong? for it is most certain that you belong to the one or to the other. Do not rest the answer upon any thing short of the word of God. If you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, then you have the word of God for it that you are born of God, (John 5: 1;) that you are a child of God, (Gal. 3: 26.) Is that not enough? Can you not believe the word of God?

"Oh! I wish I could believe," said a poor troubled soul. "I try hard to believe, but it seems as though I cannot." How would that sound if it were said with reference to the testimony or the promise of a fellow-man? 'I wish I could believe it. I try hard to believe it.' Would it be possible to express our complete distrust of a person's veracity in stronger terms? But men inconsiderately speak thus of the word of the living God! Inconsiderately indeed, but it is none the less true that "he that believeth not God, hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."

"Yes" says one, "but how may I know that I believe? What is faith?" Would not the proper question rather be, Is Christ worthy of confidence? is the testimony of God true? An incident which we find related in an English paper may illustrate this: A large fire broke out in a city. The fire-engines and ladders were speedily at work, and it was supposed that all had been rescued from the flames. The father of the now houseless family discovered that one of his children, a boy of twelve, was still missing; and in breathless suspense he hurried to and fro, endeavoring vainly to find him. All at once his eye rested on an object in the uppermost story, apparently enveloped in flames. To get at the child was impossible. Every moment increased his danger. The roaring and crackling of the flames, the falling bricks, almost made the father despair. If he shouted, could the child understand? In the agony of soul, the father, with stentorian voice, shouts to the boy to jump and he will catch him in his arms; not to fear, he will save him. The little fellow recognizes his father's voice, though the denseness of the crowd collected in the street prevented him seeing his father's face. Full well he knows that his loving father had never broken his promise, and surely now, in this time of imminent peril, he will not—he cannot. Such were the boy's thoughts as he takes one tremendous leap into his father's arms. A leap in the dark it was, but simple trust in his father's word saved him; had he hesitated, he would inevitably have been swallowed up in the raging flames. There was no question about kinds of faith—nor doubt about whether he believed or no—or seeking for the fruits of faith, such as gratitude and love, as his warrant for believing. His father was able and willing to save—his father's promise was sure, it could never deceive him; he believed, and was safe in his father's arms.

What a confusion of thought there is here, when one speaks of believing in Christ, hoping in Christ, and then trying to serve God because it is right and he is entitled to the love and service of all his creatures, and all the while never knowing whether he is reconciled; endeavoring, therefore, to reconcile God, or to get an assurance of his reconciliation, by the performance of all that God is entitled to from his creatures! Who is Christ? and how is he the sinner's hope and trust? He is the Son of God, whom the Father in love sent into the world, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life. He hath put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, and is now at the right hand of God to make good the acceptance and salvation of every believer. Now, what is the meaning of hoping in Christ and yet seeking peace in one's own love and obedience? What is the meaning of hoping in Christ and yet not knowing that God is reconciled?

Suppose that an official in a place of high trust in the Treasury of the United States should become a defaulter in a large sum, say a hundred thousand dollars. Then suppose that his security, actuated by simple love to him, should go to the President, and not only pay the amount of his defalcation, but present such arguments and persuasions for the pardon of the offender, and give such securities for his future fidelity, that the President was persuaded to continue him in the office. Suppose, now, that the defaulter, in ignorance of all this, should go to the President and confess all, and plead for forgiveness with apparent contrition and the promise of restitution.

"Your promise of restitution is vain," says the President, "the sum is too large; you could never make it up. But I am happy to tell you that your promise is needless, also; for your security has already paid the whole amount. He has also secured your forgiveness. I have told him that I will not only pardon you, but restore you to your office, to which you may now return, and you will never be reproached for the past."

Overwhelmed with the unexpected favor, the man goes out and immediately begins to say; "I hope my security has paid the debt. I wish I could believe the assurance of the President. I would give all the world if I could believe it." Then, as though not a word had been said about the friendly interposition of his security, or of the great favor of the President, the man writes an earnest petition for pardon, and renews his promise to pay the debt; and, as an instalment of it, accompanies his petition with some trifling sum in fractional currency—say three cents—and renews his plea: "Have patience with me and I will pay thee all." The President might reply "The trifle you send as an instalment on the amount of a hundred thousand dollars is insulting; but it is still more insulting that you should speak of paying the debt when I have told you that it is already paid. Have I not already told you that your pardon is secured, and that you have only to return to your post?"

"Oh! yes," says the wretched man, "I have hope in my security, and must not question the President's veracity and generosity; but how can I know that I believe? how can I know that my debt is paid? or that I am pardoned? Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all."

And thus he goes on from day to day, sending a new petition for pardon, and accompanying it with the instalment of three cents, acknowledging the debt of a hundred thousand dollars, and renewing the promise: "Have patience with me and I will pay thee all." But insulting as this conduct would be; worse than insulting as the denial of the President's veracity would be; and absurd as well as insulting as it would be to continue to send daily a three-cent fractional currency note, even this would be far too favorable a representation of the state of the case between God and the professing christians of whom we speak. We must further suppose that even that insignificant note which he sends is a counterfeit; and, therefore, the very act of sending it is the commission of a new and more heinous crime. This is your case, professing christian. Your endeavors, which practically deny the record which God has given us concerning his Son; your services, which, in themselves imperfect, are offered as a substitute for the righteousness of God which is by faith in Christ, and which are offered in distrust of the love which has made Christ unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, are base counterfeits. And how can you seek among them for the fruits of faith, or expect either pardon or the assurance of pardon from that which nothing but the grace of God through the blood of Christ can pardon?

"I have never known that God was reconciled to me;" and yet you profess to believe the gospel which testifies that God beseeches you to be reconciled to him, for "he hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we may be made the righteousness of God in him." Dear friends, how have Satan and human systems so obscured the truth and bewildered you? Pause, I pray you. Cease from your vain striving. Believe and live. Is Christ a sufficient Savior? Is his sacrifice a sufficient propitiation? Is God satisfied? Is Christ at the right hand of God? Is God's word true? There, and there only, can a poor sinner ever find assurance of salvation. But then this ground is so secure that nothing can be added to it. Least of all can any thing be added to it by a sinner who can be saved only by grace, and that the grace of God; by blood, and that the blood of Christ. —The Witness.

To Preserve Milk.—Milk can be preserved for several weeks in the following simple manner: Pour fresh milk into glass bottles, then set the bottles into a kettle of cold water—placing a board for the bottles to stand on—and gradually bring the water to boiling point, and then cork and seal tight.

Asparagus Beds.—While dressing asparagus beds, give them a good dose of salt, or drench of brine. The asparagus is a marine plant, and rejoices in salt. The salt has the further use of destroying worms in the soil, and is particularly useful to sandy soils.

Cure for Bleeding and Cracked Teats in Cows.—Another cure, and one which I have successfully tried, is this: Wash the teats in cold water, wipe dry, and anoint them freely with Goodriche's salve. A sure cure.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

For the World's Crisis

THE EDUCATION OF LABOR.

The following recently appeared in the Home Journal of N. P. Willis. It is from the pen of Dr. J. B. F. Walker, of the New York City Hygienic Institute.

Industry and good health lie at the foundation of all national greatness. It may almost be said that good health springs from industry, since it is true that the idle are proverbially weak and unhealthy. A man, to become mentally superior to his fellow-man, must have a solid foundation upon which to build, in the shape of a good, strong, healthy, organic system. We know this has been the fact with those great luminaries of intellectual strength who have shed a halo of true glory around their day and generation; with those generals and statesmen who have won the applause and admiration of the world on the battle-field and in the senate chamber. Men must use their muscles as well as their brains, for the baneful effects of muscular inactivity not only show themselves in the weakened arm and the impaired organs of locomotion; but upon the brain, the lungs, and all the instruments which aid in the support of life. In crowded cities, counting-houses, colleges, and the departments at Washington, where men are confined to narrow streets, small rooms, easy chairs, benches and desks, the effects of muscular inactivity are observable in the great vital functions of nutrition, circulation, and absorption, all of which languish, producing a tendency to disease in the form of inflammation or congestion.

When the flat-boatman of the Mississippi, or the rail-splitter of Illinois, was hard at work in the backwoods of the great West, using his muscular system as only the laboring man can use it, he was laying the foundations, sure and solid, of that sublime greatness which, to-day, calls forth the admiration of the world; which, at its departure from us, shrouds the heavens in black, and makes even kings and queens to mourn! When the great American General who was never defeated, and who has conducted to a successful close the most gigantic war the world ever saw, was quietly at work in his tannery, or standing by the side of his load of wood in the St. Louis market, he was educating his brain as well as his body for the position he now occupies. Chief Justice Chase, as a pioneer boy in the wilds of Ohio; Garfield, driving horses for a canal boat; Wilson, the shoemaker of Natick, with the lap-stone upon his knees; Douglass, the cabinet-maker of Vermont; Webster a farmer, and Washington the surveyor, all had splendid health, good, well developed bodies, strong muscles, and, therefore, sound minds. For remember, the latter result is always dependent upon the former conditions.

A curious and interesting chapter might be written on the physiology, or more properly speaking, the pathology of the late rebellion, for it had its causes and symptoms like any other disease of the "body politic," since disease it was. During the continuance of the war much was said about the loyalty of the mountainous regions of certain States, eastern Tennessee for one. Liberty has always dwelt among the mountains—slavery lives upon the plains. The importance of pure air united to vigorous exercise on the nervous and muscular systems, has also its influence upon the brains of men, their methods and habits of thinking, their ideas of right and wrong, the question of loyalty or disloyalty. Where do we find a more intensely loyal people than the Green Mountain boys, or those who dwell among the hills of New England? West Virginia remained loyal, and any one who has sailed up the beautiful Ohio cannot but have noticed the rugged mountains and lofty hills which fill up that new State. A medical writer of New York, who speaks from the knowledge gained by a residence of some years among those Virginia mountains, says:

"The inhabitants of those sections of our country can scarcely form an idea of nervous affections. No diseases dependent on specific affections of the nervous system are known among them. Accustomed rapidly to ascend and descend their lofty mountains, their muscular systems are well developed. Narrow, contracted chests cannot be seen among them; the shoulders are wide apart from each other, and every motion of the system indicates pure blood, strong nerves and muscles, the result of an invigorating atmosphere, and constant muscular exertion."

How the world has learned to admire Switzerland, the home of liberty in Europe, and how vain have been all attempts to overthrow her. She sits among the Alps of God's own creating. She is as free as the mountain air that fills the lungs of all her people. And she has been the hearty friend of the Union during all its trials and struggles. If the leaders of the rebellion had been good physiologists, they never would have attempted the war which has brought ruin upon them, since all the laws which govern human action and thought proclaim that it was impossible for them to succeed. Have Europeans ever been able to enslave the North American Indians? And where do we find better health, simpler methods of living, greater muscular activity, or such unerring dexterity as among them?

Labor taught the black man of the South to be loyal. The white man should have thought of this before he attempted to bind their fetters closer by going to war with the industrious, working population of the North. Said Mr. Phillips in a recent speech:

"Is education the exclusive prerogative of colleges? O, No! The masses of all men have their faculties educated by work, not by reading. When God declared as a condition of our being, that we should earn our living in the sweat of our brows, he gave the guarantee of the development of brain. Whoever works develops his intellectual faculties; and taking men in the main, taking them in classes, the masses who work and don't read are half a century ahead of the masses who read and don't work. And this is the reason why the negro is half a century ahead of the poor white man of the South. The negro inherited a brain which work had cultivated for four generations, and he added to it the skill of a practical hand. The consequence is, that whether the soldier goes to him for advice, or the merchant for counsel among the masses of the South, the negro is the only man who can give him either. The white man inherited a brain sodden by the idleness of four generations. Infinitely better, if you can have but one, is the education of work."

Physics, as well as morals, require strict discipline; and the muscular system of man without constant and proper training will not fulfill the important function assigned to it, any more than a brain which is left uncultivated. Mental activity and muscular exertion should always balance each other; then will there be nerve and vigor imparted to the present life; healthy and bright anticipations given to us for the future; then as works the poet, the sculptor, and the artist, we shall forget and labor as the half formed thoughts, the rude block of marble, and the plain, dull canvass assume a form and beauty, giving us an "Enoch Arden," a "Zenobia," the "Heart of the Andes!"

There is a physical wealth superior to that produced in the mines of California, the proper heritage of nations; pure air, industry and temperance are its handmaids, health, intelligence, and prosperity its offspring; it stifles the voice of avarice, stays the uplifted rod of oppression, knows no treason, and lives in brotherly love with all mankind.

OUR HAIR.

God covered the skull with hair. Some people shave it off. Mischievous practice. It exposes the brain. God covered a part of man's face with hair. Some people shave it off. Mischievous practice. It exposes the throat and lungs—the eyes, likewise, say wise physiologists.

Men become bald. Why? Because they wear close hats and caps! Women are never bald except by disease. They do not wear close hats and caps. Men never lose a hair below where the hat touches the head, not if they have been bald twenty years. The close hat holds the heat and perspiration. Thereby the hair glands become weak; the hair falls out. What will restore it? Nothing, after the scalp becomes shiny. But if in process of falling out, or recently lost, the following is best: Wash the head freely with cold water once or twice a day. Wear a thoroughly ventilated hat. This is the best means to arrest the loss and restore what is susceptible of restoration.

What will beautify a woman's hair? What ever will invigorate the hair glands! Oils and most other applications debilitate the hair glands. Cold water is best. At first the head looks like a witch, but after a few weeks it makes the hair luxuriant. By the persistent use of cold water I have seen thin, poor hair become rich and curly. Only the part of the hair next the scalp should be wet. It must be thoroughly dried.—Dio Lewis M. D.

CARE OF THE EYES.

Looking into a fire is very injurious to the eyes, particularly a coal fire. The stimulus of light and heat united soon destroys the eyes. Looking at molten iron will soon destroy the sight. Reading in the twilight is injurious to the eyes, as then they are obliged to make great exertions. Reading or sewing with a side light injures the eyes, as both eyes should be exposed to an equal degree of light. The reason is, the sympathy between the eyes is so great, that if the pupil of one is dilated by being kept partially in the shade, the one that is most exposed, cannot contract itself sufficiently for protection, and will ultimately be injured. Those who wish to preserve their sight should preserve their general health by correct habits, and give their eyes just work enough, with a due degree of light.

For the World's Crisis.

THE YOUNG PENITENT.

Almighty God, supreme, divine,
To thee I lift my voice,
And ask of thee, ere I repine,
To bid my heart rejoice.

For I, my God, thou knowest well,
Have sinned in thy pure sight,
But wilt thou not my fears dispel,
And help me love what's right?

Then send thy Spirit, mighty One,
And make me now consent
To fly to him, thy well loved Son,
And of my sins repent.

Wilt thou my trembling soul appease,
And help me seek thy truth?
Thus may I find eternal peace
In these my days of youth.

Yes, cause me, Lord, to shun that road
Which leads to endless death;
Teach me to love thy holy word
As long as I have breath.

And having learned to sin no more
In this sad life of pain,
I'll hope, as thousands have before,
Eternal life to gain.

Thrice happy then I'll surely feel,
With all past sins forgiven;
With peace of mind I then can kneel
To thee my God in heaven.

Then when in death these eyes shall close,
Midst worldly grief and fear,
I'll sweetly in my Lord repose,
Until he does appear.

Mt. Vernon. B. J. BURNETT, JR.

DEMONISM ALIAS SPIRITUALISM.

One characteristic of the demon-teaching of the last days remains to be considered, viz.: The seducing spirits command to abstain from meats, that is, from food. In the Popish foreshadowing, this is seen in the feigned holiness of asceticism, and the prohibition of meat on Fridays. But how does it apply to Spiritualism? We have no doubt that this characteristic will be found not a whit less marked than the others. It must be remembered, however, that the system is not yet fully developed; and this mark is, as yet, less prominent than the rest. It is likely that the prohibition to abstain from meats, or food, will arise, like other parts of the system, from a pretended sympathy for "suffering creation," and a pretended superior refinement, inasmuch as the eating of meat, in its restricted sense, involves the taking of life. But we suspect that the chief object is to make the human frame more susceptible to supernatural impressions, by reducing the system through a course of training, and correspondingly exalting the psychological element. It is a well-known fact that many persons who had been weakened by lingering and emaciating disorders have become the subjects of trances and clairvoyant phenomena. We also find in Col. 2: 23 a warning concerning this sort of "neglecting of the body." Perhaps, too, the spirits, when they shall have obtained full control, will prescribe abstinence from certain articles, as a sort of test of spiritual membership.

We should be glad if any of our readers could throw a little more light on this part of the subject, derived from their personal knowledge of the practice of spiritual circles.

Frequent indications are, however, already, not wanting, of the prohibition in question. The following has been reported to us, from a trustworthy source.

"The fifth mark, commanding to abstain from eating meats, is still more unmistakably manifested. And it is remarkable that the spirits command these things, not the Spiritualists. Even the mediums do not pretend to teach it themselves, except as they receive it by direct communication from the spirits. These Spiritualists abstain from everything that is derived from an animal. They take no milk in their tea, nor butter, nor eggs, because these articles of food are of animal origin. One Spiritualist bookseller went to his bookbinder, and told him to take all the leather bindings off his books, and bind them in cloth. The binder told him he must use glue, and that came from an animal. He said he would have them without binding, if he couldn't get a mucilage without animal substance. He succeeded in getting a mucilage of that character from a chemist, but the binder refused to bind for him out of the regular way. Whether he succeeded in getting a more accommodating binder, I never heard."

The modern demonism, commonly called "Spiritualism," bears, as we have shown, all the marks of the latter-day invention of Satan, predicted in the opening verses of 1 Tim. 4. If it is true that there is nothing new under the sun, yet it can hardly be denied that this is a new phase of sorcery, adapted, in Satan's usual manner, to the aspect of the times, and brought out on a far more extensive scale than ever heretofore. Formerly, witchcraft was in bad repute, and was exceptional in its character; but now, ways and means have been devised to make it attractive, fashionable, and universal, by allying it with progress, liberty, refinement, enjoyment, and the prevalent ideas of the ungodly age. Men are being insensibly accustomed to intercourse with supernatural beings; and if, in a little while, the character of the spiritual agents should be discovered to have an origin heretofore associated with the regions of darkness, it will make but little difference, provided that compensation shall be found in the advantages bestowed. They will be first "endured," then "pitied," then "embraced." It will be discovered that many of the repulsive features were only imaginary, or were greatly distorted by "superstitious tradition," "prejudice," etc., etc. And thus the field will be left clear for the open manifestation of the great enemy, when he shall marshal his forces for his supreme effort, and for the open alliance between himself and the race of man, in the shape of the predicted antichristian confederacy. Already multitudes have been seduced from the christian faith. And no one who is acquainted with the blasphemous denial and perversion of all the cardinal doctrines of grace which "Spiritualism" makes, can fail to see the prophetic mark of "doctrines of devils." It speaks lies in hypocrisy, without compunction, as only those can whose conscience is seared as with a hot iron. It forbids to marry, and commands to abstain from meats.

And, besides all this, it bears other marks pointed out in the Holy Scriptures, which the Holy Spirit hath spoken expressly concerning it. All its pompous and lying pretensions about angelic intercourse were, long since, pointed out by him. It has, indeed, a "show of wisdom, in will-worship, and humility, and neglecting of the body." (Col. 2: 23). It makes a great pretence to "philosophy," which, however, is only "empty deceit, according to the precepts of men, and according to the elementary arrangements of the world." (Col. 2: 8). We find in it a "voluntary humility and worshiping of (so-called) angels." We find men that are misled by it, "intruding into those things which they have not seen, vainly puffed up by their fleshly minds." (Col. 2: 18). We find them speaking "great swelling words of vanity," and "catching souls by a bait," through "the lusts of the flesh, and through much wantonness;" yea, even those "that were (for a little while) clean escaped from those who live in error." And there are multitudes ever ready to be enticed by such loud trumpetings of pompous transcendental nothings, the chaff in which the deadly poison is concealed. These have "LIBERTY" promised them; whereas, in fact, the spirits and their duped and duping mediums are themselves the slaves of corruption; "for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought into bondage." (2 Pet. 2: 18, 19).

These experts in the new "Harmonial Philosophy" profess that they know God; but in their conduct they deny him, being "abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate." (Titus 1: 16). Their doctrines are the commandments of men that turn from the truth (v. 14); for even their mind and conscience are defiled (v. 15). These are the false teachers who privily have brought in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord who bought them; who shall bring upon themselves swift destruction. We find many following their pernicious ways; and by reason of them the way of truth in Jesus is evil spoken of. And it is also true that through covetousness, they, with feigned words, and pretended love of virtue, make merchandise of souls. (2 Pet. 2: 1). These are they that walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government, full of revolutionary and socialistic teachings. Presumptuous are they, self-willed; they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities. As natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, they speak evil of the things that they understand not; ridiculing the holy and divine religion of Jesus Christ, through which, alone, we can be saved. These are they that even sport themselves with their own deceivings. They have eyes of adultery, that cannot cease from sin, beguiling ustable souls; a heart have they exercised with covetous practices—cursed children. (2 Pet. 2: 10–14). These are they that creep into houses, and lead captive silly women, laden with sins, led away with divers lusts; women who are always learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of what is really truth. (2 Tim. 3: 6, 7). It is in them, also, that we find the characteristics mentioned in verses 2–5.

And as for their other features, as traced in the sacred word, our readers will now hardly be at a loss to discover them. No wonder, then, that the time has now come, when so many in christendom, and even in the Evangelical churches, will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. No marvel, then, that there are so many who turn away their ears from the truth, and are turned unto fables; who love orthodox evangelical teaching, in the abstract, but are dead set against any practical application of it, from the pulpit, to the times, and to their fashionable wickednesses. (2 Tim. 4: 3, 4). No wonder there are scoffers at the second advent as ever to occur, much less in our generation! How "unscientific," "visionary," and "low!" (2 Pet. 3: 3). And what have we to expect but that these evil men and seducers will wax worse and worse, DECEIVING AND BEING DECEIVED? (2 Tim. 3: 13).

Should these remarks fall under the eye of any one that has been entangled in the snare of "Spiritualism," or that is disposed, from what he has seen or heard, to look favorably upon it, we would say to him, in the most earnest manner, Escape for thy life; look not behind! Stop not to parley, lest you should be lost; for these paths take hold on death, and lead to the place where the loving Savior and his blood-bought redemption cease to call the guilty to return, and be blest.—Prophetic Times.

PINGRE'S ECLIPSE OF B. C. 457.

The almanac makers are now exceedingly civil and kind. They used to give, for an eclipse of the sun, only a table, showing the times and places when and where the eclipse would begin, culminate, and end. Now they give also a diagram, a picture or map of the region eclipsed. This diagram sometimes looks funny enough. When the eclipse is total, a narrow black line shows the path in which it is seen total, or the sun totally unseen. And on each side of this path is a broad district of penumbra, or partial eclipse. The funny thing is that the outlines of this penumbra sometimes cross the path of total eclipse, and the eclipsed region appears somewhat like an hour-glass, or figure 8.

The path of the total eclipse is always more or less curved. Aware of this, but not knowing how to determine the curvature, I could not say whether Pingre's data for the eclipse of B. C. 457 would make it total at Celænæ or not. I had run a few lines in surveying mother earth; but I was not master of that higher and celestial art of surveying which would enable me to run this curved line. Mons. Pingre, indeed, gives a method for doing it, but I did not master it. I was content to know and to say what I did say about this gentleman's wholesale computation of eclipses by the thousand, with modest remark that the errors, he hoped, would not exceed half an hour in time.

I observed the reckoning upon Pingre's data, made by the editor of the Crisis. But I saw at once that there was no estimate of the course of the total eclipse. It was simply computed that the eclipse would be total on the meridian of Celænæ at such an hour. But no attempt was made to show that the total phase would not appear either north or south of Celænæ.

The path of this eclipse, according to Pingre's numbers, was queried when Mr. X. first called on me. He called on me again last week, and told me he had made the desired estimate, and had found the path running north of Celænæ. So, if he can be trusted in this matter, the eclipse was not total at Celænæ according to Mons. Pingre, as has been claimed.

By the way, in the last Crisis Eld. T. two or three times over calls Mr. X. my "Oracle." I have given the full history of his being consulted, and the reader will say whose "Oracle" he should be called.

Again, Eld. T. calls the eclipse of A. D. 136 my "test eclipse." But I have never named any eclipse as a test. I have read some interesting remarks by Prof. Airy on certain kinds of eclipses, naming one or two, as specially valuable for tests. And I might lecture upon them, but I have resigned my lecturer's chair. As to the eclipse of A. D. 136, I think I recollect that Eld. T., setting out from a statement of mine, claimed this eclipse as verifying his tables. His tables make it, he says, very near the record of it. Very well. This may be good luck, or something better than luck. Only the test eclipse seems to me to be properly his, not mine.

Suppose I had selected an eclipse, e. g., that of the moon, B. C. 413, which was total according to Ferguson, Petavius, Heis, Zech, and X., but which Eld. T. makes only partial, viz. 10½ digits; and suppose I had taken occasion, from some remark of Eld. T., to call this his test eclipse, after having thus selected it myself; would he think this proper? Suum cuique; "each one his own," is a good rule always.

Eld. T. speaks of "that total eclipse, which all correct tables make at Celænæ, the 16th of December, B. C. 457." Will Eld. T. furnish a list of the correct tables, and also one of the incorrect tables? C. F. H.

P. S. After I wrote one of the above paragraphs, it occurred to me that Eld. T. might simply mean that I had called Mr. X. an oracle. Still I regarded his language as inaccurate, and concluded to send in the article as it was.

In the last Crisis Eld. T. calls Mr. X. my oracle half a dozen times over, and twice speaks of him as "employed" by me to expose Eld. T.'s errors.

Mr. X. was originally employed by Bro. Grant to compute certain eclipses in question. Mr. X., I have reason to think, was well recommended for such consultation.

I have never asked Mr. X. to spend more than ten minutes upon any computation for me. I did not ask him to run the line for Pingre's eclipse of 457 B. C. I have neither offered nor made any compensation, unless a little exchange of literary favors may be called a bargain. C. F. H.

NUMBER TWENTY-TWO.

JEPHTHAH'S DAUGHTER.

A shadow rested on Gilead. The people had forgotten God and joined themselves unto idols. Then they were sold to the heathen around them, and their fruitful fields were occupied by the oppressor. The Ammonites had surrounded them, and were preparing to retake the possessions they had lost in former times. In their extremity the people cried to heaven for succor, and when they had cast away their idols of wood and stone, the Lord raised up for them a deliverer. Jephthah was recalled from his exile in the land of Tob, and placed in command of the warriors of Gilead. But the danger seemed so great, and the foes so numerous, that Jephthah vowed if successful to devote to the Lord whatever should come forth to meet him on his return from victory. This was a rash vow, and in the sequel proved a source of unhappiness to the valiant leader.

Jephthah skillfully marshalled his forces, and fell like a thunderbolt upon the proud hosts of Ammon, and covered the fields with the slaughtered foes of his people. He pursued their retreating forces from Minnith beyond the Abarim mountains to Aroer, overthrowing the power of twenty cities in his victorious career. Then flushed with success, he led his conquerors back to Mizpeh to celebrate his victory.

In the door of her tent at Mizpeh sat the maiden daughter of Jephthah, impatiently waiting the return of her father from the strife of war. Fairest of the maidens of Israel was the chieftain's daughter. Her father loved her, not alone for her peerless beauty, but for her gentleness and goodness of heart, and because she was his only child and hope. Alone she sat under the white folds of the tent, gazing out upon the far off plain, watching intently for the first glimmer of the spears, or the waving of the returning standard of Gilead. She heeded not the joyous song of the birds; saw not the bright, sweet flowers that bloomed around her; enjoyed not the loving whisper of the zephyr, as it fanned her brow, or toyed with her raven tresses; but her heart was rapt in prayer for her father's success, and she confidently expected his return to announce the overthrow of the enemy.

Slowly the hours moved on; higher rose the sun, till the zenith was reached and passed; then at last, as the luminary of heaven stooped towards the mountains of Gilead, the eye of the maiden caught glimpses of a fluttering banner in the far distance; then the forest of spears and the forms of warriors were seen. Her quick ear soon drank in the sound of victorious song, and the radiance of joy lighted up her pale, beautiful face, as she prepared to meet her father whom she loved with all a daughter's sweet affection. Onward swept the warriors of Gilead, led by the triumphant Jephthah.

Thoughtfully the returning chief ascended the slope where reposed his tent amid the embowered scenes of Mizpeh, thinking sadly, yet hopefully, of the result of his vow to the Lord. Still the smile of triumph was on his brow as he passed quickly on, gazing intently on the circle of tents that circled his own. A few moments and he would be there. Another moment and a form radiant with beauty rushed to meet him, with song of joy and dance of youth. His confiding child came to embrace him, twined her arms around him, and lovingly called him "father!" The agony of a lifetime was on him; the thoughts of lately-gained victory left him; the remembrance of his vow like a dark vision pressed upon him, and he could not return the embrace of his daughter.

The seeming coldness of her father troubled the maiden, and tremblingly she inquired the cause of his gloomy silence. A sigh of anguish answered her appeal; then in the sorrow of his heart he told her all; how in the dark hour of Israel's oppression, when the foe was gathering fast around his feeble band, he vowed if victorious that whatsoever should come forth from his house to meet him should surely be the Lord's,* or should be offered as a burnt offering. A momentary flush of despair passed over the angelic face of the listener, then in the heroic meekness of her womanly nature, she answered: "As thou hast said, so let it be unto me." She only pleaded for two months in which to lament her sad fate with her mates upon the mountains.

Sadly among the by-ways of Gilead wandered the chieftain's daughter and her maidens. No joyous laughter rang out upon the breeze where erst they chanted the sweet hymns of girlhood; but the requiem of lamentation was heard wherever they went. The groves caught up the strain, and the rocks echoed it, till the passer by covered his face and wept. Swiftly passed the destined days, and the resigned maiden returned to her father. There was a look of meekness on her face more angelic than earthly, with traces of the struggles she had endured; for it was no slight thing in Israel to be separated from the domestic joys of earth forever, and live through the years in seclusion. She had returned to be consecrated to the service of Heaven, and severed from the enjoyments of earth. Jephthah met his loved daughter, still struggling with destiny, and fondly embraced her for the last time. He essayed to say farewell, but his lips moved not; he was silent in his sorrow, and his daughter moved away to her sacred duties and seclusion.

As the years rolled away, the daughters of Israel never failed to devote four days yearly to lament with the daughter of Jephthah, the Gileadite, and mourn over her destiny.

ORRIN P. ALLEN.

* The writer is aware that there exists a difference of opinion in regard to the fate of Jephthah's daughter; but after a close examination of the subject, has arrived at the conclusion that she was not offered as a burnt offering, but devoted to the service of the Lord in the state of perpetual virginity.

RESTING AT WATERING PLACES.

Christian friend, are you seeking rest in places of public resort, at springs medicinal? Be sure to take Jesus with you. The sure way to rest body, mind and soul, is to go forward in duty, in public and in private, "fight the good fight," "cry aloud, spare not." No matter where you are; at watering places, springs medicinal—the healing Bethesdas; plant the Cross; "stand for Jesus"; burnish your armor; "quit you like men; be strong." Nothing so surely and effectually invigorates, produces healthful activity, physical and spiritual, as persevering in God's service. This closing our lips, taking the easy chair, or sleeping at our post, at Saratoga or elsewhere, while the serpent iniquity darts his forked, fiery tongue on every side, is not gospel. Would Paul do this so long as he could raise a finger? How did he at Mars' hill? Was the idolatry of Athens equal to that of Saratoga? "Paul's spirit was stirred within him when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry."

Christian invalids resorting to these healing streams for physical restoration, may "kill two birds with one stone." First of all, seek God and his righteousness; lay the axe at the root of all evil; strike a death-blow at every sin; "reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." Then, rest assured, the healing properties of these medicinal waters will be doubly beneficial, invigorating, and salutary. Never, beloved, allow the triumphing of Satan under the very droppings of the sanctuary.

"Never be ashamed of Jesus—
Glory ever in his cross;
Count it most exalted honor
To advance his blessed cause."

"While men slept, the enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat." Go forward; keep your faith and hope in lively exercise everywhere; and rest assured, God will bless the simplest means for your physical restoration.

Pray on; preach on; labor on.

These summer resorts for physical health and strength should never be abandoned to the devil. The salt of divine grace should be cast in so powerfully and continually as to purify the whole fountain, that the streams henceforth "make glad the city of our Lord." Brother, sister, are you at these public resorts where Satan has his seat? What are you doing to save souls, to elevate, purify and sanctify? Are your feet swift to do good, swift as lightning? Do you speed hither and thither on errands of mercy and salvation; fly on wings of love, up stairs, down stairs? While others are swift to do evil, are you swift in God's service, flashingly?

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand." Go forward where duty calls.

"No matter where, if duty calls thee, go
Amid contagion, poverty, and death:
Do, suffer, die, at duty's call divine,
Nor rest from battle till the victory's won;
Then, Soldier of the Cross, a crown is thine—
Thou faithful servant, hear thy glad well done."

D. F. NEWTON, Author of Home Thrusts.

"I HAVE A HOPE, BUT HOW CAN I KNOW THAT I AM SAVED?"

A correspondent writes: "It is seven years since I first hoped in Christ, but never during all these years have I known surely that I was a child of God. I have tried to serve him because I believed it right to do so; because I believed his right to the love and obedience of all his creatures; because I believed him worthy of it, but I have never known that he was reconciled to me." Nothing can be more exquisitely sad than the despondency and restless anxiety which the letter reveals; and yet such a condition seems to be the rule, rather than the exception, among the more earnest of professing christians in our day. How strongly is the language we have quoted contrasted with all that is recorded of the faith of those who first trusted in Christ! The matter at issue is of far too great moment to allow of mere criticism of language. But the language here employed cannot possibly be the expression of evangelical ideas.

First, there is the expression "hoped in Christ," which is a very common one among professing christians; and what does it mean? Those who use it are either believers or unbelievers. If they are believers, then they have God's word for it that they are justified from all things, that they are children of God, and have everlasting life; and what they are and have cannot be spoken of as objects of hope. If they are unbelievers, they are condemned already, and the wrath of God abideth on them; and what have they to hope for in that condition? The believer, indeed, has a hope in Christ; but what is it? It is not a hope that he will some day be justified, but "being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom, also, we have access into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God." It is not a hope that he will some day become a child of God; but: "Now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him (Christ) purifieth himself as he is pure."

This is the hope—"hope of the glory of God;" but how can any one rejoice in it who is not justified? Can one who is condemned rejoice in hope of the glory of God? This is the hope—no mere human probability, but "we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him;" and how can any one have "this hope in Christ" who is not already a son of God? Can the children of the devil cherish the hope, and "know that when Christ shall appear they shall be like him?"

But is it a possible thing for those who assume the christian name, and who lay claim to the privileges of the christian, and who profess to serve God, to go on from year to year without knowing whether they are the children of God or children of the devil? The distinction is not so slight as to make it a matter of nice and difficult discernment, and the consequences are not so trivial as to leave it a matter of indifference. We do not wonder at their uneasiness. How can they leave it undetermined for a day, whether they are children of God or children of the devil? Dear reader, to which of these two families do you belong? for it is most certain that you belong to the one or to the other. Do not rest the answer upon any thing short of the word of God. If you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, then you have the word of God for it that you are born of God, (John 5: 1;) that you are a child of God, (Gal. 3: 26.) Is that not enough? Can you not believe the word of God?

"Oh! I wish I could believe," said a poor troubled soul. "I try hard to believe, but it seems as though I cannot." How would that sound if it were said with reference to the testimony or the promise of a fellow-man? 'I wish I could believe it. I try hard to believe it.' Would it be possible to express our complete distrust of a person's veracity in stronger terms? But men inconsiderately speak thus of the word of the living God! Inconsiderately indeed, but it is none the less true that "he that believeth not God, hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."

"Yes" says one, "but how may I know that I believe? What is faith?" Would not the proper question rather be, Is Christ worthy of confidence? is the testimony of God true? An incident which we find related in an English paper may illustrate this: A large fire broke out in a city. The fire-engines and ladders were speedily at work, and it was supposed that all had been rescued from the flames. The father of the now houseless family discovered that one of his children, a boy of twelve, was still missing; and in breathless suspense he hurried to and fro, endeavoring vainly to find him. All at once his eye rested on an object in the uppermost story, apparently enveloped in flames. To get at the child was impossible. Every moment increased his danger. The roaring and crackling of the flames, the falling bricks, almost made the father despair. If he shouted, could the child understand? In the agony of soul, the father, with stentorian voice, shouts to the boy to jump and he will catch him in his arms; not to fear, he will save him. The little fellow recognizes his father's voice, though the denseness of the crowd collected in the street prevented him seeing his father's face. Full well he knows that his loving father had never broken his promise, and surely now, in this time of imminent peril, he will not—he cannot. Such were the boy's thoughts as he takes one tremendous leap into his father's arms. A leap in the dark it was, but simple trust in his father's word saved him; had he hesitated, he would inevitably have been swallowed up in the raging flames. There was no question about kinds of faith—nor doubt about whether he believed or no—or seeking for the fruits of faith, such as gratitude and love, as his warrant for believing. His father was able and willing to save—his father's promise was sure, it could never deceive him; he believed, and was safe in his father's arms.

What a confusion of thought there is here, when one speaks of believing in Christ, hoping in Christ, and then trying to serve God because it is right and he is entitled to the love and service of all his creatures, and all the while never knowing whether he is reconciled; endeavoring, therefore, to reconcile God, or to get an assurance of his reconciliation, by the performance of all that God is entitled to from his creatures! Who is Christ? and how is he the sinner's hope and trust? He is the Son of God, whom the Father in love sent into the world, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life. He hath put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, and is now at the right hand of God to make good the acceptance and salvation of every believer. Now, what is the meaning of hoping in Christ and yet seeking peace in one's own love and obedience? What is the meaning of hoping in Christ and yet not knowing that God is reconciled?

Suppose that an official in a place of high trust in the Treasury of the United States should become a defaulter in a large sum, say a hundred thousand dollars. Then suppose that his security, actuated by simple love to him, should go to the President, and not only pay the amount of his defalcation, but present such arguments and persuasions for the pardon of the offender, and give such securities for his future fidelity, that the President was persuaded to continue him in the office. Suppose, now, that the defaulter, in ignorance of all this, should go to the President and confess all, and plead for forgiveness with apparent contrition and the promise of restitution.

"Your promise of restitution is vain," says the President, "the sum is too large; you could never make it up. But I am happy to tell you that your promise is needless, also; for your security has already paid the whole amount. He has also secured your forgiveness. I have told him that I will not only pardon you, but restore you to your office, to which you may now return, and you will never be reproached for the past."

Overwhelmed with the unexpected favor, the man goes out and immediately begins to say; "I hope my security has paid the debt. I wish I could believe the assurance of the President. I would give all the world if I could believe it." Then, as though not a word had been said about the friendly interposition of his security, or of the great favor of the President, the man writes an earnest petition for pardon, and renews his promise to pay the debt; and, as an instalment of it, accompanies his petition with some trifling sum in fractional currency—say three cents—and renews his plea: "Have patience with me and I will pay thee all." The President might reply "The trifle you send as an instalment on the amount of a hundred thousand dollars is insulting; but it is still more insulting that you should speak of paying the debt when I have told you that it is already paid. Have I not already told you that your pardon is secured, and that you have only to return to your post?"

"Oh! yes," says the wretched man, "I have hope in my security, and must not question the President's veracity and generosity; but how can I know that I believe? how can I know that my debt is paid? or that I am pardoned? Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all."

And thus he goes on from day to day, sending a new petition for pardon, and accompanying it with the instalment of three cents, acknowledging the debt of a hundred thousand dollars, and renewing the promise: "Have patience with me and I will pay thee all." But insulting as this conduct would be; worse than insulting as the denial of the President's veracity would be; and absurd as well as insulting as it would be to continue to send daily a three-cent fractional currency note, even this would be far too favorable a representation of the state of the case between God and the professing christians of whom we speak. We must further suppose that even that insignificant note which he sends is a counterfeit; and, therefore, the very act of sending it is the commission of a new and more heinous crime. This is your case, professing christian. Your endeavors, which practically deny the record which God has given us concerning his Son; your services, which, in themselves imperfect, are offered as a substitute for the righteousness of God which is by faith in Christ, and which are offered in distrust of the love which has made Christ unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, are base counterfeits. And how can you seek among them for the fruits of faith, or expect either pardon or the assurance of pardon from that which nothing but the grace of God through the blood of Christ can pardon?

"I have never known that God was reconciled to me;" and yet you profess to believe the gospel which testifies that God beseeches you to be reconciled to him, for "he hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we may be made the righteousness of God in him." Dear friends, how have Satan and human systems so obscured the truth and bewildered you? Pause, I pray you. 'Cease from your vain striving. Believe and live. Is Christ a sufficient Savior? Is his sacrifice a sufficient propitiation? Is God satisfied? Is Christ at the right hand of God? Is God's word true? There, and there only, can a poor sinner ever find assurance of salvation. But then this ground is so secure that nothing can be added to it. Least of all can any thing be added to it by a sinner who can be saved only by grace, and that the grace of God; by blood, and that the blood of Christ. —The Witness.

TO PRESERVE MILK.—Milk can be preserved for several weeks in the following simple manner: Pour fresh milk into glass bottles, then set the bottles into a kettle of cold water—placing a board for the bottles to stand on—and gradually bring the water to boiling point, and then cork and seal tight.

ASPARAGUS BEDS.—While dressing asparagus beds, give them a good dose of salt, or drench of brine. The asparagus is a marine plant, and rejoices in salt. The salt has the further use of destroying worms in the soil, and is particularly useful to sandy soils.

Cure for Bleeding and Cracked Teats in Cows.—Another cure, and one which I have successfully tried, is this: Wash the teats in cold water, wipe dry, and anoint them freely with Goodriche's salve. A sure cure.

THE EDUCATION OF LABOR.

The following recently appeared in the Home Journal of N. P. Willis. It is from the pen of Dr. J. B. F. Walker, of the New York City Hygienic Institute.

Industry and good health lie at the foundation of all national greatness. It may almost be said that good health springs from industry, since it is true that the idle are proverbially weak and unhealthy. A man, to become mentally superior to his fellow-man, must have a solid foundation upon which to build, in the shape of a good, strong, healthy, organic system. We know this has been the fact with those great luminaries of intellectual strength who have shed a halo of true glory around their day and generation; with those generals and statesmen who have won the applause and admiration of the world on the battle-field and in the senate chamber. Men must use their muscles as well as their brains, for the baneful effects of muscular inactivity not only show themselves in the weakened arm and the impaired organs of locomotion; but upon the brain, the lungs, and all the instruments which aid in the support of life. In crowded cities, counting-houses, colleges, and the departments at Washington, where men are confined to narrow streets, small rooms, easy chairs, benches and desks, the effects of muscular inactivity are observable in the great vital functions of nutrition, circulation, and absorption, all of which languish, producing a tendency to disease in the form of inflammation or congestion.

When the flat-boatman of the Mississippi, or the rail-splitter of Illinois, was hard at work in the backwoods of the great West, using his muscular system as only the laboring man can use it, he was laying the foundations, sure and solid, of that sublime greatness which, to-day, calls forth the admiration of the world; which, at its departure from us, shrouds the heavens in black, and makes even kings and queens to mourn! When the great American GENERAL who was never defeated, and who has conducted to a successful close the most gigantic war the world ever saw, was quietly at work in his tannery, or standing by the side of his load of wood in the St. Louis market, he was educating his brain as well as his body for the position he now occupies. Chief Justice CHASE, as a pioneer boy in the wilds of Ohio; Garfield, driving horses for a canal boat; Wilson, the shoemaker of Natick, with the lap-stone upon his knees; Douglass, the cabinet-maker of Vermont; Webster a farmer, and WASHINGTON the surveyor, all had splendid health, good, well developed bodies, strong muscles, and, therefore, sound minds. For remember, the latter result is always dependent upon the former conditions.

A curious and interesting chapter might be written on the physiology, or more properly speaking, the pathology of the late rebellion, for it had its causes and symptoms like any other disease of the "body politic," since disease it was. During the continuance of the war much was said about the loyalty of the mountainous regions of certain States, eastern Tennessee for one. Liberty has always dwelt among the mountains—slavery lives upon the plains. The importance of pure air united to vigorous exercise on the nervous and muscular systems, has also its influence upon the brains of men, their methods and habits of thinking, their ideas of right and wrong, the question of loyalty or disloyalty. Where do we find a more intensely loyal people than the Green Mountain boys, or those who dwell among the hills of New England? West Virginia remained loyal, and any one who has sailed up the beautiful Ohio cannot but have noticed the rugged mountains and lofty hills which fill up that new State. A medical writer of New York, who speaks from the knowledge gained by a residence of some years among those Virginia mountains, says:

"The inhabitants of those sections of our country can scarcely form an idea of nervous affections. No diseases dependent on specific affections of the nervous system are known among them. Accustomed rapidly to ascend and descend their lofty mountains, their muscular systems are well developed. Narrow, contracted chests cannot be seen among them; the shoulders are wide apart from each other, and every motion of the system indicates pure blood, strong nerves and muscles, the result of an invigorating atmosphere, and constant muscular exertion."

How the world has learned to admire Switzerland, the home of liberty in Europe, and how vain have been all attempts to overthrow her. She sits among the Alps of God's own creating. She is as free as the mountain air that fills the lungs of all her people. And she has been the hearty friend of the Union during all its trials and struggles. If the leaders of the rebellion had been good physiologists, they never would have attempted the war which has brought ruin upon them, since all the laws which govern human action and thought proclaim that it was impossible for them to succeed. Have Europeans ever been able to enslave the North American Indians? And where do we find better health, simpler methods of living, greater muscular activity, or such unerring dexterity as among them?

Labor taught the black man of the South to be loyal. The white man should have thought of this before he attempted to bind their fetters closer by going to war with the industrious, working population of the North. Said Mr. Phillips in a recent speech:

"Is education the exclusive prerogative of colleges? O, No! The masses of all men have their faculties educated by work, not by reading. When God declared as a condition of our being, that we should earn our living in the sweat of our brows, he gave the guarantee of the development of brain. Whoever works develops his intellectual faculties; and taking men in the main, taking them in classes, the masses who work and don't read are half a century ahead of the masses who read and don't work. And this is the reason why the negro is half a century ahead of the poor white man of the South. The negro inherited a brain which work had cultivated for four generations, and he added to it the skill of a practical hand. The consequence is, that whether the soldier goes to him for advice, or the merchant for counsel among the masses of the South, the negro is the only man who can give him either. The white man inherited a brain sodden by the idleness of four generations. Infinitely better, if you can have but one, is the education of work."

Physics, as well as morals, require strict discipline; and the muscular system of man without constant and proper training will not fulfill the important function assigned to it, any more than a brain which is left uncultivated. Mental activity and muscular exertion should always balance each other; then will there be nerve and vigor imparted to the present life; healthy and bright anticipations given to us for the future; then as works the poet, the sculptor, and the artist, we shall forget and labor as the half formed thoughts, the rude block of marble, and the plain, dull canvass assume a form and beauty, giving us an "Enoch Arden," a "Zenobia," the "Heart of the Andes!"

There is a physical wealth superior to that produced in the mines of California, the proper heritage of nations; pure air, industry and temperance are its handmaids, health, intelligence, and prosperity its offspring; it stifles the voice of avarice, stays the uplifted rod of oppression, knows no treason, and lives in brotherly love with all mankind.

OUR HAIR.

God covered the skull with hair. Some people shave it off. Mischievous practice. It exposes the brain. God covered a part of man's face with hair. Some people shave it off. Mischievous practice. It exposes the throat and lungs—the eyes, likewise, say wise physiologists.

Men become bald. Why? Because they wear close hats and caps! Women are never bald except by disease. They do not wear close hats and caps. Men never lose a hair below where the hat touches the head, not if they have been bald twenty years. The close hat holds the heat and perspiration. Thereby the hair glands become weak; the hair falls out. What will restore it? Nothing, after the scalp becomes shiny. But if in process of falling out, or recently lost, the following is best: Wash the head freely with cold water once or twice a day. Wear a thoroughly ventilated hat. This is the best means to arrest the loss and restore what is susceptible of restoration.

What will beautify a woman's hair? What ever will invigorate the hair glands! Oils and most other applications debilitate the hair glands. Cold water is best. At first the head looks like a witch, but after a few weeks it makes the hair luxuriant. By the persistent use of cold water I have seen thin, poor hair become rich and curly. Only the part of the hair next the scalp should be wet. It must be thoroughly dried.—Dio Lewis M. D.

CARE OF THE EYES.

Looking into a fire is very injurious to the eyes, particularly a coal fire. The stimulus of light and heat united soon destroys the eyes. Looking at molten iron will soon destroy the sight. Reading in the twilight is injurious to the eyes, as then they are obliged to make great exertions. Reading or sewing with a side light injures the eyes, as both eyes should be exposed to an equal degree of light. The reason is, the sympathy between the eyes is so great, that if the pupil of one is dilated by being kept partially in the shade, the one that is most exposed, cannot contract itself sufficiently for protection, and will ultimately be injured. Those who wish to preserve their sight should preserve their general health by correct habits, and give their eyes just work enough, with a due degree of light.

For the World's Crisis.

IN MEMORY.

Affectionately Inscribed to the Widow of Bro. Walter Pratt.

Shall we see him no more? Will the dark, lonely tomb
Imprison him always in silence and gloom?
Will they who with breaking hearts bade him farewell,
No more by his side in sweet reunion dwell?

Doth hope shed no ray o'er the portals that close
On the lone charnel-house where our dear ones repose?
Must we see the form waste, and the pale eyelids droop,
And consign them to dust without comfort or hope?

O no! for the Savior hath entered the grave,
And risen triumphant with power to save;
He hath strugged with death, and hath brought forth the key
That can open the tomb and the captives set free.

We shall meet him again—the same loved one that now
Lies silent and cold with death's seal on his brow;
The "strong man" may boast of his victims in vain,
For a stronger than he can restore them again.

We shall meet him again—but O, not as of old,
Pale and worn with disease shall his face we behold;
But with vigor and health from the dust he will spring,
And unite in the anthem the ransomed ones sing.

We shall greet him again—the same voice we shall hear
That so oft to the sad has brought comfort and cheer;
With the same noble heart that could feel for the wronged,
He will wake in the glory for which he has longed.

We shall meet him again, where disease comes no more,
Where the long nights of watching and weeping are o'er;
Where no weary mourner bends sad o'er the tomb—
We shall meet him again in our fair Eden home.

ABOUNDING IN THE WORK OF THE LORD.

A CHARITY SERMON.

Delivered in St. Luke's Church, Chelsea, by Rev. P. B. Morgan, and reported for the Crisis.

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."—1 Cor. 15: 58.

You will observe these words are found in the last part of the 15th chapter of the first epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians; and I am sure no christian man will say they are unworthy the place they occupy: they constitute the summing up—the grand, practical conclusion, to which the apostle comes after his masterly and elaborate teaching concerning the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. He has given this doctrine a thorough review; showing that Christ is risen from the dead, and that as Christ is risen from the dead, we shall also rise; that "this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality"; and therefore that our faith in Christ is not misplaced; they that have fallen asleep in Christ have not perished; and our hope of a life in the world to come has a sufficient and substantial foundation.

Christ is the resurrection and the life. And you will observe how the apostle here makes the whole matter of practical Christianity hinge upon this doctrine of the resurrection; much as he does in the tenth chapter of his epistle to the Romans:—"If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."

The apostle might have given as an incentive to practical godliness the moral obligation growing out of our relation to God. This he does when he urges our unreserved consecration to God, affirming that, to make such a consecration is our "reasonable service"; but he does not stop here; what he says here is truth—a great truth—sufficient in itself to control the moral universe; but it is not all the truth; and ignoring the metaphysics of the casuist, he reaches out and gathers in other truths—truths which commend themselves none the less to our judgment, but which he links with the moral sentiments of our hearts. This is the spirit of our text; and this you will find to be generally the manner in which christian duty is enjoined in all the epistles; duty growing not only out of the moral obligation that binds us to obedience with the rigor of law; but, too, with the joyful, elevating, sanctifying and ennobling influence of love and hope. "We love Him because he hath first loved us," says St. John. And again, "He that hath this hope in him (viz: of being made like Christ at his coming) purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

I wish you to notice particularly, brethren, the spirit of this text: how little of dogmatism; how by the pure reason, by a strictly logical process, he lays, not upon our heads, but upon our hearts, the mighty obligation of practical obedience to Christ. And observe how tenderly he does this, as to "beloved brethren."

But that we may personally drink in the spirit of the text, let us observe to whom these words are addressed. They are not addressed to the apostolic college, or to any particular order of the ministry; but to the church of God which was at Corinth, and "to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord." And therefore the text applies to us, if we are Christ's. It is a broad and catholic grasp, so characteristic of the gospel, although so unlike the narrow sectarianism of our own times; and it certainly applies to every man and woman who corresponds to the description given. And not only so, but we may say also that it applies to every man and woman incorporated into Christ, because Christ is one; because of the essential unity of the church. "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." There "are many members, yet but one body."

But why was this injunction made? Was it that, being grounded in the faith, we might be dogmatists? or that, abounding in good works, we might by good works be saved? No. St. Paul never taught us that "by the works of the law shall no man be justified"; that by grace we are saved "through faith"; that "not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us"; and then in another place enjoined abounding works of righteousness as the great means of salvation.

It is eminently important that we understand this matter. For if salvation be by works, then I would preach to you penance rather than repentance. But if there be no propitiatory character whatever in our good works,—and there certainly is not, although it seems as if christians can never learn this;—if Christ "by his one oblation of himself once offered" made "a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction, for the sins of the whole world," as is declared in the Communion office; if salvation is by grace; if eternal life is "the gift of God"; then why should we pause to consider the subject of charitable works? And our answer is this: We do not trouble ourselves to take into consideration works of charity,—to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, or to visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction,—that we may thereby be saved; but because, by faith in Christ, we are already saved. "He that believeth on the Son, hath life"; we believe, and therefore have life; and it is because we feel the inspiration and promptings of this new life that we immediately ask, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" True to the affinities of this new life, we seek orders from Christ. And this explains why it is that there is after all such exact uniformity in some things in christian experience the world over.

A man truly converted, whether from among those in the highest ranks of civilized life, or from among the most savage barbarians, instantly feels the melting and subduing power of divine love; the asperities of life, the rough, hard character of our nature is softened; instantly we are possessed of a humble, disinterested spirit, to which we were previously strangers; and instantly we desire to do something for Christ, something which is frequently conceived to be missionary work, and which really is the true spirit of missionarying. It is what is well expressed in that grand old missionary hymn by Bishop Heber—

"Salvation! O salvation! the joyful sound proclaim, Till earth's remotest nation has heard Messiah's name."

And all this is something so totally different from what we are accustomed to experience, that with St. Paul we can say, "The things I once loved, I now hate; and the things I once hated, I now love." And this is God working in us "both to will and to do of his good pleasure."

It is true that "it hath pleased God through the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe"; that the great commission says, Go, and preach. And "how can they preach except they be sent?" But it is likewise equally true that the New Testament contemplates every soul brought to Christ as a "worker together with God." Every person has one talent or more which they are as much in duty bound to improve, as is the man who has been formally set apart to minister in a holy office. Every person has duties to perform which no body on earth can perform for them. Hence the church is called "the light of the world," "a royal priesthood."

Now this is not mere fustian. The apostles never wrote for effect, but as they were moved by the Holy Ghost; and the meaning of this and many other similar expressions which I might quote you is, that every person giving him or herself to God is consecrated to a holy work, "to show forth the praises of Him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvelous light"; and it strikes me that this is among the things signified in "Confirmation"—that apostolic rite of "laying on of hands," which St. Paul places (Heb. 6) among the "principles of the doctrine of Christ." You have seen men ordained to the ministry, and you remarked how exceedingly solemn the services were; how very like the ancient anointing by prophets. And really this is the idea embodied in this service; it is consecration, and the anointing of the Holy Ghost. And it is this that makes us delight in the work of Christ; because we are baptized into one Spirit with him. And in just the measure we possess or enjoy this Spirit, will be the measure of our love and zeal in his work. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." It is when we have the joy of his salvation, and are upheld by his free Spirit, that with David we can say, "Then will I teach transgressors thy way, and sinners shall be converted unto thee." A cold, lukewarm, worldly people may be galvanized into a momentary sympathy with Christ's work, by earnest and patient appeals; but not so with living christians; with them labor is a delight; and even, if need be, to "fill up the measure of the sufferings of Christ"—to suffer with him, is a joy. Real, earnest, sturdy work is only the indication of a normal life.

And you will also observe, by studying the spirit of this text, by taking it in its connections, that we have it enjoined upon us to not only be steadfast in the faith and always abounding in the work of the Lord, but you will also easily observe the nature and character of that work. It is "the work of the Lord"; the Lord is the Redeemer, the Savior, who seeks to save men. And mark that we do not say men's spirits, but men—"soul, body and spirit." This is the work Christ has taken in hand; and this is the work which, thanks be to God! he will carry on to perfection. The body is as much God's work as is the spirit; it is as sacred before God, and is not to be defiled or destroyed. Therefore the work of Christ is to care for men's souls and bodies. This is the work our Lord did in person when on the earth; and this is "the work of the Lord" in which he would have his church "abound" during his absence.

For the World's Crisis.

THE JUBILEES.

BRO. GRANT:—May I be permitted, through the Crisis, to inquire what is the truth concerning the time and order of the jubilees spoken of in Lev. chap. 25? I know that much has already been said and written on this subject; but, hoping that the question may be settled, and the truth obtained and understood, I venture, in meekness, to propose a few questions. May they be answered correctly through the aid of the divine Spirit.

1st. Was the forty-ninth year a sabbatical year? (Lev. 25: 8), or,

2nd. Was the fiftieth year both a sabbatical and a jubilee year? Lev. 25: 10, 11.

3d. Were the cycles of the jubilees, cycles of forty-nine, or of fifty years?

For the sake of stating and starting these three questions fairly and understandingly, I will propose another fourth question; viz., Did the Spirit of the Lord intend that we should begin to number the sabbatical years with the first one kept; or at least, with some one of them? or did he intend to have us begin to number with some other year than a sabbatical year? If he did mean to have us begin to number with the first sabbatical year, or with any sabbatical year, then the second sabbatical year would be the eighth year, including the first one numbered. And if we number forty-nine years, including the first sabbatical year numbered, we necessarily make the next or following year, which is the fiftieth, both a sabbatical and a jubilee year. It may be more clearly seen by the following table of weeks; and I hope no one will fail to study it until they fully understand it.

EXPLANATION OF THE TABLE.

The first, or upper line, is composed of figures showing the number of years in each week of years.

The second, or middle line, contains the letters to designate the years of each week, with the names attached to the days of our common week; the sabbatical year being represented by a capital S at the beginning of the line of each week.

The third, or lower line of each week gives the continuous number of years up to the fiftieth; showing the number of each year on which the sabbatical years fall, from the first one to the fiftieth, showing that the first and fiftieth are sabbatical years.

50 This fiftieth year is here shown to be a sabbatical year, making it both a sabbatical and a jubilee year.

By this table we are shown that the first, eighth, fifteenth, twenty-second, twenty-ninth, thirty-sixth, forty-third, and FIFTIETH years, are sabbatical years; therefore the fiftieth year is both a sabbatical and a jubilee year. And yet the cycles of forty-nine years remain unbroken; consequently the jubilees are not cycles of fifty years each, any more than our common weeks are cycles of eight days each.

The second sabbatical year, including the first one numbered, is the eighth year, and the third is the fifteenth year, and so on to the fiftieth, which is the eighth sabbatical year after the first one numbered, and is also a jubilee year. In Lev. 25: 8, we read as follows:—"And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years."

Another translation gives this verse as follows:—"Thou shalt also number to thee seven WEEKS of years, that is to say, seven times seven, which together make forty-nine years."

I would ask, in much meekness, if there is any other proper way to number seven sabbaths of years, than to begin with a sabbatical year? If we number sabbaths, should we not begin to number with a sabbath? If we were about to number seven weeks of Mondays, should we not commence numbering with a Monday? Would any one in this case begin with Tuesday, or with any day of the week except Monday? Surely not.

Then, if we are to begin with a sabbatical year to number seven sabbaths of years, there is no getting away from the fact that the jubilee year comes on a sabbatical year, as the foregoing table plainly proves. "Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month; in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land; and ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof; it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family. A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you; ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed. For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy unto you; ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field. In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession."—Lev. 25: 9–13.

By the above quoted scripture, it seems to me that we are plainly taught that after numbering seven sabbaths of years, which make "forty and nine years"; "THEN," that is to say, in the next coming year, which is the fiftieth year, on the tenth day of the seventh month of that fiftieth year, the jubilee trumpet was to be sounded; and the whole of that fiftieth year, which, being a sabbatical year, was to be occupied and improved as a jubilee year. Dear reader, is not this the true meaning of the above scriptures? and if so, does it not settle the question in dispute?

I have endeavored, in this communication, to show by the table, and otherwise, that the forty and ninth year was not a sabbatical year but that the fiftieth year was really and truly a sabbatical year, as well as a jubilee year. I have also endeavored to show, by the table mostly, that the cycles of the jubilees were cycles of forty-nine years only, and that they were not cycles of fifty years each. If by the blessing of the Lord I have been enabled to do this, and if it is his truth, all praise be to his holy name for ever.

The foregoing table is not mine; that is, I am not the originator of it. It is the Lord's. If by his grace I have been enabled to write it correctly, then it answers the foregoing questions correctly and brings out the following important and interesting truths:

1st. That the forty-ninth year was not a sabbatical year.

2nd. That the fiftieth year was both a sabbatical and a jubilee year.

3rd. That the cycles of seven times seven sabbaths, or weeks, are cycles of forty-nine years only, and not of fifty years each.

The right way to number seems to be this: viz., to number seven times seven weeks or sabbaths, always beginning with a sabbatical year to number; and then the eighth year after the first one numbered will be a sabbatical year, and the fiftieth will be both a sabbatical and a jubilee year. And if we should number a hundred cycles of jubilees, we should only have a hundred times forty-nine years, and the next year following each forty-ninth would be a jubilee year, and also a sabbatical year.

If I have not written the table right, the fault is mine—not the Lord's; and if so, I hope to be forgiven, and also to be corrected through the instrumentality of some beloved brother in the Lord, so that the truth may shine forth clearly and cheeringly on this glorious subject of our near coming jubilee,—the great antitype of the foregoing typical jubilee.

But I presume some dear brother will say that we should begin to number with the year after the sabbatical year. Well, dear brother, if you think so, please give us a table that will harmonize the jubilees with the sabbatical years, so that there will always be six successive years of sowing, reaping, and gathering, in the harvest, and also one whole year of rest for the land in each seven. See Lev. 25: 3, 4. If you will do this, I shall be glad to have the light; for I can see no way that it can be done other than as the above table gives it. Now please remember, and harmonize these three things in your tables, viz.,

1st. That there were to be six successive and full years in which they were to sow and reap and gather in their harvest [See Lev. 25: 3], and

2nd. That in one year, and only one in each seven, they should neither sow nor reap, nor gather in their harvest, but the land should rest one whole and entire year, and only one, no more, no less. Lev. 25: 4–7, 20–22.

3rd. That all these seven years were to begin and end according to the commandment of the Lord; viz., "This month shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year to you."—Ex. 12: 2. I know of no other year recognized by the Lord, for his former people, the Jews, but the year here named, which begins with the month Abib. Ex. 12: 2, and 13: 4.

Our motive is to obtain light and truth, and we seek for it as for hidden treasure. O Lord, give us the true light on this subject, is our humble and hearty prayer.

THE "TWO WITNESSES."

There are several objections to the application of this prophecy to the Old and New Testament.

1. The time of their prophecy (1260 days), if interpreted 1260 years, does not cover the period of the prophecy of either the Old or New Testaments.

2. These "two witnesses" are cotemporary as to their period of prophecy, which cannot be said of the two Testaments.

3. If any one design to hurt them, fire issues from their mouth and eateth up their enemies, etc., which does not harmonize present or past records with such theory.

4. These witnesses have power to shut heaven, so that "no rain shall come down in the days of their teaching." (Wakefield's trans.) And they have power over waters to turn them into blood, and to smite the earth with any punishments as often as they choose.

5. When they are slain, "their dead bodies will lie in the streets of that great city, which is called spiritually Sodom and Egypt, where indeed our Lord was crucified," which was at JERUSALEM, and not in Paris.

6. It is to be peoples, and tribes, and tongues, and NATIONS, which are to look on their "dead bodies."

7. "And the inhabitants of the EARTH will rejoice over them," etc., "because these two teachers were a VEXATION to the inhabitants of the EARTH."

8. At the moment of their ascension there was "a great earthquake (not a political commotion), and the tenth of the city fell down, and seven thousand men were killed by the earthquake." What city? The city where our Lord was crucified. The city where the "two witnesses" shall be slain. The city JERUSALEM! The "seven thousand" are so definite, that destruction by "earthquakes in divers places," and in fives or tens of thousands, cannot be applicable to this prophecy; the scene of which is so definitely laid in JERUSALEM, and is to affect "peoples, tribes, and nations."

9. It is a judgment of the second woe, and its application is universal as the prophetic annunciation is general, and so also of "the rest" who "were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven."

10. Immediately following is the sounding of the seventh trumpet, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord—the time of wrath, of judgment, of the resurrection of the dead, and destruction of the enemies of God who "destroy the earth"; and the time of this destruction is defined by Ezekiel and the Revelator (Rev. 20) to be at the end of the thousand years of judgment and restitution; and hence the "plagues that are in the future."—Millennial Harbinger.

HYMN.

All of my ways are known to thee,
Before whom I shall stand
Condemned, or justified, to be,
Dear Lord, as thou'lt command.

Even until my latest breath
For my defense appear,
Govern and lead me until death,
Hide me when storms are near.

I then shall fear no evil thing,
Joyful in thee I'll wait,
Knowing thou canst not fail to bring
Life with a blest estate.

Make this my portion and delight,
Number me one of thine
On earth, where all is pure and bright,
Perfect, and all divine.

Youth then immortal will endure,
Zion's bright King doth say,
And every thing that is impure
Will finally decay.

For the World's Crisis.

THE BURIAL AND THE PLANTING.

Having thus (in the Supper) proclaimed his death, the next event, in the natural order of things, is his burial, or interment; and when these obsequies shall have been performed, the next all-prevailing idea in the minds of all truly orthodox and evangelical christians is, "the hope," that the dead will have a resurrection, to live again; knowing full well by the word of the living God, that abideth forever, that if there be no resurrection of that which is dead, then they that have fallen asleep—not fallen awake, but asleep in Christ, are perished. Our hope, then, being in the resurrection, by the power or spirit (Eph. 1: 19, 20; Rom. 8: 11) of God through Christ at his coming, in consequence of our faith in his death, we should, by some means show forth that hope as visibly, distinctly and specifically, as we did our faith in his death and second coming, when we ate of his broken body and drank of his shed blood, and the symbolized burial and resurrection of hope, should be as strong, forcible and illustrative, in this case, as was the symbol in the other. Now this symbolization can be found no where else than in our Lord's ordinance of water immersion of the believer, who is sealed with the Holy Spirit, as dead to sin, and dead to the world, but alive to God and righteousness.

But as Christ was buried because he was dead, so ought we to be dead indeed to sin, before we are "buried by baptism into his death," and none are fit subjects to be "buried with him by baptism into death," who have not previously been "baptized into Jesus Christ" by the one Spirit." Rom. 6: 3, 4; 1 Cor. 12: 13. "For he that is dead is freed from sin." Rom. 6: 7. "Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him. 8. That like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory—power or spirit of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life," or in a new life. 4. "In (or by) whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ:" then "buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him, through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." Col. 2: 11, 12.

Now it is apparent that in all these Scriptures the idea of a burial and a resurrection are clearly set forth, and the idea of an obligation resting upon the believer to enter into that symbolized grave, by burial in water (the emblem of spirit), that he or she may participate in that emblematical resurrection, is quite as clearly and definitely inculcated.

But circumcision is nothing, and baptism is nothing; "but the keeping of the commandments of God" is something—is everything. "Repent ye, therefore, and be baptized, every one of you in the name of the Lord Jesus." Tell me now that you have repented, but will not be baptized, and you will tell me one thing with your lips, and deny the same thing in actions, by your failing "to render obedience;" you will prove to me that you have not been circumcised in heart, that you have not received the spirit of Christ, for whosoever has his spirit will obey him in all things.

"For if we have been planted together, in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. 6: 5. "Else what shall they do who are baptized for the (as though they were) dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?" 1 Cor. 15: 29. Dr. Adam Clarke's remarks on this passage are so pertinent that I shall insert them verbatim.

"1. The doctrine of the resurrection of our Lord, was a grand doctrine among the apostles: they considered and preached this as the demonstration of the truth of the gospel. 2. The multitudes who embraced christianity, became converts on the evidence of this resurrection. 3. This resurrection was considered the pledge and proof of the resurrection of all believers in Christ, to the possession of the same glory into which he entered. 4. The baptism which they received, they considered as an EMBLEM of their natural death and RESURRECTION. THIS DOCTRINE ST. PAUL MOST POINTEDLY PREACHES. Rom. 6: 3, 4, 5. . . .—quotation—5. It is evident from this, that all who died in the faith of Christ, died in the faith of the resurrection: . . . they receive baptism as an emblem of death, in voluntary going UNDER the water; so they receive it as an emblem of the resurrection unto eternal life, in coming up out of the water; thus are they baptized for the dead, in perfect faith of the resurrection." See Clarke in loc. The small caps are mine; the italics are his. See also On Col. 2: 12, N. T. Com., vol. 2, p. 497.

"Planted together—in the likeness." Like begets like, but different kinds planted together, intermix and produce hybrids; but here the apostle has them grown together, like the scion grafted into a root, then planted in the earth, from whence nourishment is drawn, and grown together into one, forming one plant, vine, or tree. But man is one kind,—the psuchikon, natural, earthy, soulual,—while Christ is of another kind,—the pneumaticon, the spiritual. Now, how can we change the natural or soulual seed into a spiritual seed, so that it shall produce a spiritual body when "planted," and spiritual fruit when grown; and how can we illustrate it? First, then, the illustration. Take black corn, plant it, and when it comes to the tasseling and silking, cut off all the tassels before they blossom, and leave it thus: you will get no corn at all, or pull out all the styles (silks) and the result will be the same; but leave the silk perfect, go to a field of white corn in bloom, cut off some of those blossoms, bring them to the hill of black corn, and shake the pollen (fecundating dust) on to the silk of the black corn, and the ovulum, or kernel, will be impregnated with the fructifying principle of the white corn, and in "the time of harvest," every ear of corn on that hill and every kernel on each ear will be white corn. Now "plant" that corn by itself, or with its like, and the product will be like that planted, white corn. The nature of the first seed planted, has been changed from black to white.

Application. The black corn represents the natural man,—the tassel, the human will or fleshly mind; the style or silk, faith; the ovulum or kernel, the soul or life; the field of white corn, the word of God; the pollen, the spirit of Christ; the white corn produced, the spiritual seed; the crop from that seed, the spiritual body, and the fruit of that body, everlasting life. The human soul, composing the church of Christ, is every where represented as of the feminine gender, while Christ is represented as of the masculine, the one to receive truth and nourish it, the other to "shed forth" the spirit of truth, to quicken us into life by his appointed means.

The natural man, then (a sinner), in order to become a spiritual man (seed), must take the "sword of the Spirit" and "cut off" his own will; then through faith receive the mind or will of God, contained in his word, in place of his own, and the effect of receiving this spirit or mind of Christ, will be to quicken him into the life of the Spirit. He is in Christ, and has become a new creature; old things will have passed away, and all things will have become new. The very moment that any man believes the word of God unto right-doing, as a fruit of that faith, he is a converted man, he has "experienced religion," and he may then make confession with the mouth unto salvation; he has become a spiritual seed in Christ, ready to be planted together in the likeness of his death, that he may grow together with him in the likeness of his resurrection, sowing to the Spirit, that of the Spirit he may reap life everlasting.

EVIL SPEAKING.

The Scriptures give numerous and explicit commands in regard to the sin of evil speaking. Mr. Wesley in his sermon says, "the command, speak evil of no man, is as plain as thou shalt do no murder; but how few there are that understand it. What is evil speaking? it is not the same, as some suppose, as lying or slandering; all a man says may be as true as the Bible, yet the saying of it is evil speaking; for evil speaking is nothing more nor less than speaking evil of an absent person. If the tale be delivered in a soft and quiet manner, perhaps with expressions of good will, then we call it whispering, but however it is done, still the thing is the same, still it is evil speaking if we reveal to another the fault of a third person when he is not present to answer for himself."

David in two places described a citizen of Zion; he says, "who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart." And again, "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle, who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor." One command is as plain and authoritative as the other, and yet how often is it the case that some good sisters who have cleansed their hands as they say, by stripping them of gold, (which is in accordance with Scripture, for we are commanded not to adorn ourselves with gold, or pearls, or costly array) will, after speaking of this in meeting, have no scruple whatever, about going home and telling about their neighbors, or brethren or sisters; coolly dissecting them as it were, speaking of their faults and failings, discussing their temporal and spiritual affairs, their exercises in meeting, etc. This kind of evil speaking is carried on sometimes in a laughing spirit, something as a child does when it believes that others are listening, and its pride and vanity are encouraged, if it can force a smile from them by its remarks. It is sometimes done with the secret, scarcely acknowledged thought in the heart that by this judging of others, the hearers will give credit for superior discernment and a knowledge of the way of the Spirit; and sometimes with the idea that it is on account of the work of the Lord; thus doing evil that good may come, but the results are not good after all. Sometimes people are discussed and taken to pieces merely from the result of an impression upon the mind.

"Some judge of the spiritual condition of others by the attention they show to them, or endorsement they give to their own views and labors." So it is often the case that if a person will not endorse another's views and uphold them, he is judged to be wrong and reported of accordingly. These forms of evil speaking strike out in a thousand different directions and spread desolation and division, and the best plan is to check the evil within ourselves. We may be impressed that others are wrong, but if we are in any way speaking evil of them we may be sure that we are, and need to get that cured first; we are otherwise greatly in danger of being governed by impressions instead of by the word of God, which says, "a tale-bearer revealeth secrets, but he that is of a faithful spirit concealeth the matter." Mr. Wesley says, "Do not think to excuse yourself by saying I was so burdened that I could not refrain, you are under the guilt and sin of disobeying a plain command of God."

A sister who is now on a sick bed says that during the early part of her sickness she was visited by church members, who regularly entertained her, and themselves, with accounts of their neighbors' faults. At that time she was also a professor, but soon after experienced religion, and one of her first duties was to tell these sisters that she could not have them come to her house and talk as heretofore, she had seen what a sin it was. If they chose to come and read the Bible, and pray, and talk of Jesus, she would be glad to see them. They all discontinued their visits but two. Other evils which are possibly not as baneful in their results are enlarged upon, while this one is comparatively unheeded, even by those who make a high profession. May the Spirit of the Lord enable us to look within, and correct our impressions in regard to the duty of exposing others' faults, and compare ourselves with the written word:

"Thou shalt not go up or down as a tale-bearer among thy people." Lev. 15: 16. "Thou sittest and speaketh against thy brother," Ps. 50: 20. "Speak not evil one of another, brethren." James 4: 11. "To speak evil of no man." Titus, 3: 3. "Wherefore laying aside all malice, and guile, and hypocrisies, and all evil speaking." 1 Pet. 2: 1. "In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin, but he that refraineth his lips is wise." Prov. 10: 19. "My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation, for in many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body.' James 3: 1, 2.

The safest way is that laid down in the Scriptures, which say, "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him."—Earnest Christian.

THE "GATHERING."

"For wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together."—Matt. 24: 28

The carcass here, no doubt, has reference to "the Lord Jesus Christ" at his appearing in "mid heaven"; and the eagles probably represent the saints which are caught up to meet him. But, as our planet is round, and as Christ is a tangible being, the idea that all the inhabitants of earth are to see him in an instant, is, in my mind, a hasty conclusion. It would be an utter impossibility.

But, how then, it may be asked, will "every eye see him"? We will presume. And if we should assume, as he ascended from the Mount of Olives, and promised to "return in like manner," that he will first make his appearance in mid heaven directly over that consecrated spot, who would object? Then he is to "send forth his angels," and they are to "gather his elect from the four corners of the earth; from one end of heaven (the heavens) to the other." That is, "he will make his appearance in mid heaven," and then the angels will commence gathering the elect from the north pole, and from the south pole, and the earth moving on its axis would, in just twenty-four hours, bring him again directly over the Mount of Olives, with "all his saints." Then he can fulfill the prophecy of Zechariah (Zech. 14: 4, 5)—"And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives," etc. "The Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee."

But, says one, "According to your theory, then, only the saints will see him. What of the nations which are afar off?" Read Isa. 66: 18, and you will see. "It shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come and see my glory."

NUMBER TWENTY-THREE.

RUTH GLEANING IN THE FIELDS OF BOAZ.

The story of Ruth is beautiful as a poem, illustrating the most delicate as well as the purest and noblest qualities of our nature. It is sweeter than any romance, purer than any fiction ever invented. It breathes the rarest fragrance of human affection, and leaves no impression that would mar an angel's dream.

Famine had driven the family of Elimelech from the no longer fruitful fields and vineyards of Judah, to sojourn for a time in the distant and more favored land of Moab. There in the home of the stranger the sons of Elimelech found wives among the daughters of Moab. For a time prosperity smiled upon them, but at last the unseen messenger entered the happy household, and Elimelech was laid low; then, that the cup of Naomi's affliction might be full, the two sons Mahlon and Chilion were taken, and the widowed mother was left to mourn with her daughters-in-law over the sad affliction of Providence.

In this dark hour of adversity, Naomi longed to revisit the land of her nativity, where all her fondest thoughts clustered. She announced her resolution to her daughters-in-law, and arose to give them her farewell blessing, and desired them to remain among their people and kindred. Orpah received her mother's blessing with tears, and returned to her kindred. But Ruth would not forsake her mother in the hour of sorrow, and when entreated to return, she answered, "Whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."

Naomi could want no further proof of Ruth's affection, and she accepted it as a benediction of Heaven, a remaining sunbeam of her former prosperity, still left to strengthen and to cheer in life's after vicissitudes. Stronger than the love of native land and kindred, stronger than all the sweet recollections of girlhood, was Ruth's affection for her mother-in-law. Faithfully, tenderly, with all a true daughter's affection, she followed the footsteps of her lost husband's mother to the land unknown and the scenes untried of the far-off Judah.

Long and toilsome was the journey, yet, ever mindful of each other's wants, the two journeyed on. The one was leaving behind all the dear associations of a lifetime; the other approaching the scenes where the days of her prosperity had smiled. The plains of Moab were soon lost in the haze of the harvest sun, and the hills where Ruth had wandered in childhood's opening hours had all faded out in the dim distance. The land of Reuben had been passed, the Jordan crossed, and at last the walls of Bethlehem arose in full view above the vale of Gihon.

Brightly shone the harvest sun upon the hills of Judah, where plenty smiled once more. Golden harvests waved on every side, and the groves echoed to the songs of the happy vintners. But this was naught to Naomi; the prosperity that smiled on others made her lot the more bitter. Deep were her emotions as she entered her native city. Her former friends came forth to greet her and welcome her back after her sojourn in foreign lands. But in the anguish of her heart she said unto those who welcomed her, "Call me not Naomi, but call me Mara; for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me. I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty." She deeply felt her bereavement, the more when she beheld the desolate home that, in the years gone by, was smiling with the light of joy; she had buried her hopes on the hillsides of Moab, and had returned empty indeed.

It was harvest time in Palestine. Busy hands were reaping the golden grain, and the poor were gleaning after the reapers according to the custom of the Hebrews. Naomi was poor, and the fair Ruth went forth into the fields with the other poor maidens to glean the scattered blades, to sustain life. Modest as good and beautiful, the devoted Ruth gleaned daily in the fields which by chance belonged to Boaz, the kinsman of her deceased husband.

When Boaz came to his fields and greeted the reapers with "The Lord be with you," and renewed the response, "The Lord bless thee," in the kindly phrase of the far-off olden times, he observed the modest Ruth. Her propriety of manner and gentle demeanor chained his attention. He commanded that she should be kindly treated by all; he spoke to her kindly, and desired she should glean in his fields till the end of the harvest. "Then she fell on her face and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger? And Boaz answered and said unto her, It hath fully been showed me all that thou hast done unto thy mother-in-law since the death of thine husband; and how thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knewest not heretofore. The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come to trust."

These kind words were balm to the gentle Ruth, and she treasured them up as a precious remembrance. Ruth repeated to her mother-in-law all these things, and the kind treatment she had received. Then Ruth was advised by Naomi to adopt a Jewish custom and make claim to Boaz to redeem the lands of his kinsman; in doing this he would of necessity espouse Ruth, to perpetuate the house of Elimelech. However distasteful to the modest Ruth this might have been, she was prevailed upon to adopt the advice of Naomi, and she performed her part in so proper a manner that she won the heart of Boaz. And according to the custom of those days, Boaz made known in the gate of the city that he had purchased all that once belonged to Elimelech, as well as the lands of Mahlon and Chilion, and further, that he had espoused Ruth, the Moabitess, to be his wife.

Thus the modest gleaner came to be the spouse of the first man in Bethlehem, and in time she was one of the mothers in Israel who bore sons to the long-illustrious line of kings and princes who have left their names emblazoned on the tablets of the glorious past. This noble line was not extinct till the Shiloh came, till a Deliverer arose in this same Bethlehem; then it ended in a blaze of glory, and became extinct in the Lion of the tribe of Judah.

MISSIONARY WORK.

A new and important field for missionary labor has been opened among the Freedmen at the South. They are more eager to receive the light and truth than we are to get it to them. This is very rarely the case. It is usually far otherwise in all foreign heathen lands. But now the missionary field is opened at our doors, let us hasten to go into the vineyard at once, and help in reaping the abundant harvest. There is no time to be lost. Soon it will be too late to work. If christians do not occupy the field immediately, we may expect that Satan will send his mediums there to lead them into the great delusion of these last days. Let us do our duty, and thank the Lord for such a privilege as is now open before us. Who will go and teach those hungry souls the way of life? Who will help furnish the means? Let us be liberal for the Lord. He loves "a cheerful giver."

"PARLIAMENTARY LOGIC."

The above is the title of a work published by one Mr. Hamilton, a member of the British Parliament, in 1762. He was called "Single Speech Hamilton." He derived this name from the fact of his being a member of Parliament forty years, and yet made but one speech. The object of his book is to teach how to defeat truth. We think some have learned the art of doing it, who have never seen Mr. Hamilton's work. The following are a few points which he specifies as rules for those who would sustain error:—"If you cannot convince, a heap of comparisons will dazzle." "It is an art to make use of what is doubtful, as an unquestionable maxim, and so argue on a single case as if it were a maxim." Again he says:—"You may evade an answer to objections by raising other objections."

Whoever is disposed to oppose the truth, if he has intellectual ingenuity, can usually make out an apparently good case before the unsuspecting, honest soul. But we much prefer one who cheats us financially, than intellectually. We had rather be robbed of money than of the truth.

NEW ORDER OF SOCIETY.

This is truly an "age of progress." But wherefore? To what result will this progressive age arrive, when it accomplishes its object? According to the Scriptures, it will arrive at a state of things like that in the days of Noah and Lot,—wickedness and infidelity. And yet there is much talk about "PRINCIPLES," "eternal principles," among the advocates for the "new order of society." Among their principles, of which we hear much, and see as little, are "LOVE, JUSTICE and BROTHERHOOD." These terms sound well, and are among the great principles of christianity. Satan has now inscribed these on his banner, as a rebel pirate would raise the Union flag of the stars and stripes to deceive his victim. The arch demon and his familiars well know how to transform themselves into angels of light, and thus lead the careless astray from the path that leadeth unto life.

The following is from the June number (1865) of a Spiritualist paper, published in Ind., called "The Kingdom of Heaven":—

PLATFORM OF PRINCIPLES FOR THE ORGANIZATION OF A NEW ORDER OF SOCIETY ON EARTH.

Done, and adopted at Huntsville, Madison Co., Indiana, May 8th, 1865.

OBJECT.—To secure happiness for ourselves, the universal world of humanity, and more especially to a posterity yet unborn.

MOTTO.—In unity is our strength. We unite to succeed.

In conjunction with all the so called great and good minds, who once dwelt upon this rudimental, mundane sphere, but who are now ministering angels of love, peace and good will to the children of earth, and in whose aid, comfort and guidance we trustingly confide, we adopt the following platform of principles, upon which to organize or consociate together; for the purpose of inaugurating the era or age of universal LOVE, JUSTICE and BROTHERHOOD. Accepting the world as OUR country, and every human being as our countryman.

1st: It is resolved that it is conceded by all good and wise mortals and angels, that all men and women are born free and equal, so far as natural rights are concerned; that those natural rights are inalienable, in the broadest, widest and fullest acceptation of that term; that amongst these is the right to self, in any and every sense, under all circumstances, at all times and in all places; that as this right is unalienable it can not be given up nor justly restrained, with or without the consent of the individual; but that all men and women are endowed with the natural right, (and hence inalienable) to pursue happiness in the way and manner they may choose, amenable and accountable to no power but the God who conferred it.

2nd: It is furthermore seen and resolved that all institutions, governments, edicts, proclamations, laws, customs or enactments which conflict with the foregoing "self evident truths," are inimical to human rights and human happiness, and therefore unnatural, inoperative and void. That in as much as it is a "self evident truth" that all men and women are born alike free and equal, it follows as a natural consequence that none can justly or rightfully claim the right, individually or collectively, to dictate, govern, restrain the liberty or take the life of a fellow being; for as President Johnson has most truthfully said, "man was not made for government." That an individual, or any number of individuals, in order to lay claim to the right to govern and dictate to others, restrain them of their liberties or take their lives, should first prove that THEY are without sin, unequal and superior to those whom they would dispossess of life, liberty and the right to pursue happiness.

3d: It is furthermore seen and resolved, that there is no natural right to the exclusive ownership of earth, air or water, animals or the natural productions; further than are necessary for the actual comfort, and really demanded to supply individual wants. That therefore the privilege extended and guaranteed by human society and human governments to the crafty and cunning ones of society, to monopolize more of this world's goods than their actual wants demand, is playing the dog in the manger, is ungodly and unnatural, therefore unjust, inexpedient and unwise.

4th: Therefore, it is also seen and resolved that all men and women should have, as they naturally and rightfully do have, an equal chance to cultivate, produce and manufacture, without let or hindrance, from the earth and its productions.

5th: Resolved, that to restore an equilibrium in society, by discarding the principle that "might makes right," and that other equally erroneous sentiment, that "the majority should govern the minority," and by adopting and living the principles of equal and exact justice to all men and women, with exclusive privileges to none, is and should be, the first and last great object, end and aim of all the so called great and good men, women and angels. That in laboring for this most desirable consummation, men and women should neither quarrel or fight, but make it an universal rule to endeavor to overcome so called evil with so called good. That when mortals can not agree, they should peaceably separate on principles of equal and exact justice, as did Abraham and Lot of old. (See Genesis 13th chapter, 7th, 8th and 9th verses.) That men and women should endeavor to understand and be guided by the divine law of attraction and repulsion, that like attracts like, and unlike repels unlike; and KNOW who are, and who are not, adapted by nature to dwell together. That it is these natural laws or principles, a science, and not a religion that will restore the rights of man, and effect an equilibrium in human society, as it has in the society of angels, our fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and friends in the world of spirits.

6th: Resolved, that for the support and sustenance of these principles, we pledge, and are ever ready to sacrifice, all that life can give or death take away.

7th: Resolved, that as religion, (which is but a new name for the mythology of the heathen,) has for nearly twenty centuries proved a failure, in being inefficient to produce an equilibrium in human society, in bringing that peace and good will, which reigns in Heaven, or the abode of spirits or angels, that we discard it, as the creature of weak, ignorant minds; and put our trust in the principles of science, confide our faith in that principle or spirit of love, wisdom and power, which is doing "all things well," whom Jesus of Nazareth served, and Paul declared unto the ignorant Romans. That trusting to the purity of our intentions and justice of our cause, we take an invincible stand for THE RIGHT; aloof from human institutions, governments and rulers; and appeal to all the so called great and good men, women and angels, to aid and support us in restoring an equilibrium in human society, and thus rendering all alike happy.

Approving spirits or disembodied minds present:

Jesus Christ, Emanuel Swedenborg, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, Henry Clay and legions of others."

NOTE.—We would have our readers understand that we have no more reverence for Jesus Christ, Geo. Washington or Abraham Lincoln, than we have for Judas Iscariot, Benedict Arnold or J. Wilkes Booth. We neither worship or praise the former, or condemn the latter. All were but instruments of Omnipotent power. Neither of whom were any better than you or I.

It is PRINCIPLES we reverence; Love, Wisdom and Power, which we see above, beneath and around us, every where in every thing."

It will be noticed there is much talk about "PRINCIPLES" in the foregoing platform, which are deified, or made to take the place of our Savior. Some of these principles are very popular ones, and constitute the rallying points. These are the mask that cover demons, and give them the appearance of angels of light; but we inspect them a little more closely, and their horrid character is very apparent. The seventh resolution calls on those who adopt the platform to "discard" religion "as the creature of weak, ignorant minds" and to put their trust in the "principles of SCIENCE," not in Jesus, our Savior; and yet it is claimed that one of the "approving spirits" was "Jesus Christ."

The following from the same paper, will give the reader some idea of their "Divine principles" of government:—"To . . . acknowledge no power, government, ruler or governor, be he known by the specious name of President, King, Caliph, or Priest."

The following gives their views of prayer: "I sometimes go out in the woods and pray to a pine tree, for I find more gods in the trees than I do in the churches or ministers."

Here is their marriage principle, as expressed by the editor of the "Kingdom of Heaven:"—

"Yet we are neither a Shaker or a Mormon; nor are we to be bound by the popular marriage laws and customs of society as now organized; but we would that man and woman should mate only by nature's law of attraction, with as little outward law and ceremony as do the little birds in the groves."

Persons holding such principles are the ones who claim that a religion based on the Bible is "DEMORALIZING." This is very much like a drunkard and rum seller, who should speak of the demoralizing effects of temperance societies, because he had less company and patronage; or a seducer, who should call virtue demoralizing because it deprived him of his victims.

"THE WORLD'S SPIRITUAL CONVENTION.

It will be recollected that we mentioned a "World's Spiritual Convention," to commence in New York city Feb. 22d. Several have desired to know the results of that convention. We were not able to be present, and have had no reliable source of information relative to the meeting until within a few days, when we met the President of the convention, from whom we learn that the following subjects were introduced for consideration:—

"The future of America, Europe, and the world; Franklin's prophesy, the Coming Man, and the Apostolic and great central circles; organization, and who can present a perfect constitution? where would be the best place for a practical settlement of a community? California to be the central court of the world, where the elect are to be gathered; Christ's coming like a thief in the night, and his three methods of appearing; the earth's shrinkage, ærial navigation, Louis Napoleon the destined monarch to scourge the nations; foreign war soon to follow between France, England and Spain with the United States; the origin of all things, and eternity a substance; the existence, attributes, and power of Deity, human rights as applied to both sexes and all races; a criticism on the spiritual literature and the last three conventions of spirits; free love, or the sovereignty of the individual, and how it is to be supplanted; how to raise troops without drafting, electrical telegraphing to be superseded by spiritual telegraphing, freedom in justice triumphant, six distinct forms of governments only can be introduced into practice on any planet, the last form always producing so much justice, peace and harmony, that the people never wish to change it; for by this form are God and celestial beings governed, united to pure spirits for one great end, viz., universal progression, development and happiness; who are the best mediums, and which is the superior process of communion, entrancement or inspirational? When justice reigns over the earth under the sixth form of organization, with the accompanying inventions and improvements in productive industry, there will be required no more labor than will be necessary for health and development; and it will be more than one half less than is now performed. Then will the transmission of desired qualities from parents to children, and an integral education and development, be guaranteed to every child of society,—the true methods of reform without bloodshed contrasted with the false ones."

The convention was adjourned until the 22d of next Feb., when, we understand, the same subjects are to be considered, and such others as the times may demand. Most of our readers have but a faint idea, we think, of what the spirits of demons are doing, and what they propose to do in a short time. It is high time for every christian to be on his watch tower, having "on the whole armor of God, that" he "may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil."

INQUIRIES CONCERNING REV. 10TH AND 11TH CHAPTERS.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you answer the following questions, and relieve the mind of a seeker after truth?

1st. Has the Advent movement fulfilled any part of the 10th chapter of Revelations?

2d. Is it the same angel continuing the conversation with John in the 11th chapter? (Please notice the first verse.)

3d. Can the 10th chapter have its fulfillment down here, and the 11th nearly a century ago?

4th. If the third wo follows the second wo quickly, can seventy years intervene?

5th. Will not the third wo be poured out on the wicked after the saints are taken away?

E. A. ABBEY.

Portsmouth, N. H.

Questions are very often sent us which we are not able to answer, because our own mind is not yet settled on the points. That is the case with some of the foregoing. Again, other questions are sent which we have not time to answer. This statement may account for the fact that all questions sent are not answered. We purpose to do the best we can, and answer as far as practicable. Be patient.

In answer to the foregoing inquiries, we would say that we are not prepared to speak definitely at present in relation to them all.

1st. We are not satisfied on this point.

2d. We think it is. We see no chance to come to any other conclusion.

3d. It does not appear plausible that the fulfillment of the 10th chapter should take place "nearly a century" before the eleventh.

4th. We should think not.

5th. We think so.

"BREATH OF LIFE."

BRO. GRANT:—Is the original for "breath of life," in Gen. 7: 22, the same as in the 2: 7? Can either be translated "Breath of the spirit of life"? And also can "living soul," in Gen. 2: 7, be translated animal soul and rational spirit?

Gen. 7: 22 may be rendered "the breath of the spirit of life," but not Gen. 2: 7.

The Hebrew words nephesh chaiyah, rendered "living soul" in Gen. 2: 7, cannot be properly rendered "animal soul," or "rational spirit."

TERMS OF THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

The Young Pilgrim will be continued semi-monthly the ensuing year at the following rates:

For a single copy,—Fifty Cents a year; and at the same rate for any number of copies under ten.

Ten copies, or any number of copies under fifty, when sent to one address,—Forty Cents a year for each copy.

Fifty copies, and any number of copies over fifty, when sent to one address,—Thirty-five Cents a year for each copy.

To Canada subscribers,—at the same rates, with no extra charge for American postage.

All subscriptions for the coming year must be made at the above rates.

The friends will understand that these advanced terms are necessary to make the paper self-sustaining. Should the expenses of publication another year be less, and the circulation advanced so as to warrant a lower price, the terms will doubtless be decreased accordingly. It is hoped, therefore, that all, in the mean time, will bear this slight advance in their expenditures cheerfully, and help the Young Pilgrim on his way with a free and liberal hand.

The call for donations to the Sunday School Fund, to make up the past year's deficiency, is withdrawn.

We shall send the July numbers of the new volume to all of our present subscribers, and hope to hear from every one before the 1st of August. After that, no more will be sent, except to those who have renewed their subscription.

CLUBS.

Sunday Schools and neighborhoods, by taking the paper in clubs, at the above rates, and having them all sent to one address, with no other name on them, will save, in clubs of fifty and over, 37 cents a year on each copy; in clubs of ten to fifty, 32 cents a year on each copy; and, in smaller clubs (of less that ten), from 12 to 21 cents a year on each copy.

Subscriptions may commence with January, April, or July, and at no other times. Back numbers will be sent from either of these dates.

All communications, orders, and remittances, should be addressed to the YOUNG PILGRIM, BOSTON, MASS.

A SABBATH AMONG THE FREEDMEN.

A missionary in Beaufort, S. C., gives the following account of his first Sabbath among the freedmen:—

"I can never forget it. It is a memorable day in my pilgrimage, so far as my own feelings are concerned, at least. Let me briefly review it. Sabbath School at eight A. M. As we entered the church we saw that some hundred and fifty of all ages were present, and were engaged in the work. They were singing, with full, clear voices, 'Oh! I'm glad I'm in this army'—a song most dear to my heart for its associations with the past. My own dear boy used to tune his bird-like voice with it, while he tarried with us. Then came the lessons. Each one had a book of some sort—a primer, a spelling or question-book—and was trying to spell out the words. A few classes could read the Testament. The teachers were all blacks, but a short time since set free from the prison-house of slavery. A great many bows and smiles were given us as we entered. I sat down and surveyed the scene; called up the past—how the light of life had been withheld from these dark minds; the history of their wrongs; and then the wonderful events by which deliverance has come at last. I thought of the twenty-five years past of prayer and labor that the shackles might fall. Here I saw the answer. My heart was full. I could but bow my head, and give vent to my joy and gratitude in a flood of tears.

At eleven A. M. came my first effort to preach to them. They were earnest listeners. They understood, and the momentous truths of the glorious gospel seemed to penetrate the hearts of many. In the afternoon we had a funeral sermon, by an ex-slave. I have heard many at the North not one whit better than that. It contained gospel truth, uttered with vehement earnestness and deep feeling. It was, however, fragmentary, disjointed and jumbling, and uttered in the negro dialect. The house was full, and the feelings of the five hundred hearers ebbed and flowed with the speaker's. Toward the close he paid a touching tribute to President Lincoln for having made so many free. Then he referred to those of us who had come to care for their souls, and to teach their children. 'For dis very ting I now see and hear have I prayed and prayed a thousand times in the woods alone. It makes me tink of ole hymn:

"How blessed are our eyes,
Which see this heavenly light," etc., etc.

He made an earnest appeal to the people to hold up our hands by prayer and earnest co-operation.

In the evening the house was again crowded to overflowing. Some thirty soldiers present. After a short address to them and to the blacks, liberty to speak or pray was given. All were ready and in earnest. By invitation, six came forward, desiring the prayers of the church. I cannot read the heart, but I believe God was showing them their sins, and leading them to feel after him, if haply they may find him. Truly God was in the midst of us. At the close my hand and arm took such a shaking and squeezing as they never got before. Blessings, for coming to preach Jesus to them, were showered upon us, as if we had descended from some better world, and were ourselves something else than the frail flesh and blood that we are.

Thus ended my first Sabbath in Beaufort I retired to rest, thankful for the past and the present, and hopeful for the future. Will not our praying friends remember us and this people?"

BAPTISM:—WHAT IS IT?

Let us hear from John Calvin, the man who endorsed—if he did not write—the book published at Geneva, advocating sprinkling for baptism, and who exerted his influence to persuade the church to adopt sprinkling for the rite. Notice his confession,—"The very word baptize, however, signifies to immerse; and it is certain that IMMERSION WAS THE PRACTICE OF THE ANCIENT CHURCH."—Calvin's Insti., vol. 3, p. 343.

Dr. Whitby,—"It being so expressly declared here (Rom. 6: 4, and Col. 2: 12) that we are buried with Christ in baptism by being buried under water, and the argument to oblige us to a conformity to his death, by dying to sin, being taken hence, and this immersion being religiously observed by all christians for thirteen centuries," etc.—Whitby, Note on Rom. 6: 4.

Martin Luther,—"Baptism is a Greek word, and may be translated immerse, as when we immerse something in water, that it may be wholly covered. And although it is almost wholly abolished, they ought, nevertheless, to be WHOLLY IMMERSED, and immediately drawn out,—for that the etymology of the word seems to demand.

"The Germans call baptism tauff, from depth, which in their language they call teeff, because it is proper that those who are baptized be deeply immersed.

"Baptism is nothing else with the word of God than IMMERSION IN WATER."—Luther, Op. vol. 1, p. 336.

So argued the great reformer on this point, although the error of sprinkling was so prevalent, and superstition so blind, he felt obliged to indulge the people in this matter, and allow them to sprinkle.

Melancthon,—"Baptism is an entire action, to wit, a dipping, and pronouncing these words, 'I baptize thee,'" etc.—Remington on Bap., p. 8.

Dr. Neander, an eminent church historian,—"There can be no doubt whatever that in primitive times it was performed by IMMERSION, to signify a complete immersion into the new principles of the divine life which was to be imparted by the Messiah."—Neander's Letter to Judd.

Dr. J. M'Knight, an eminent Scotch divine and critic,—"In baptism the baptized person is buried under the water, as one put to death with Christ on account of sin, in order that he may be strongly impressed with a sense of the malignity of sin, and excited to hate it as the greatest of evils.

"Moreover, in the same rite, the baptized person being raised up out of the water, after being washed, he is thereby taught that he shall be raised.

"Christ submitted to be baptized, that is, to be buried under the water by John, and to be raised out of it again, as an emblem of his future death and resurrection."—Discourse on Col. 2: 12.

Prof. Lange,—"Baptism in the apostolic age was a proper baptism,—the immersion of the body in water. As Christ died, so we die (to sin) with him in baptism. The body is, as it were, buried under water, dead with Christ. The plunging under water represents death, and rising out of it the resurrection to a new life. A more striking symbol could not be chosen."—Lange, Infant Bapt., p. 81.

For the World's Crisis.

GOOD THINGS.

Here they come! What? Why, offerings for the Freedmen, and with them many kind and cheering words; another proof that other hearts are beating high with benevolent emotions towards those long held under the iron yoke of oppression,—a good stimulus when one is weary to help one labor on. One dollar from a dear sister in Bristol, Ct., whose acquaintance we formed in '43, when we joyfully received the sound—"Behold, He cometh!" Well, blessed be God, "The King IS COMING SOON;" then that dear friend, who so generously remembered the poor Freedmen in his last bequest, will live again. Methinks heaven was a happy witness of that will.

Another day, and another letter from an old and tried friend of like precious faith, in Pleasant Valley, Ct., containing one dollar for herself and twenty-five cents for a little boy bearing a name I have occasion to use every day. God bless the children, and enable them to deny themselves of candies to help those poor colored children learn to read; for, let me tell you, these children can learn; they are not those stupid dolts some would try to make us believe. My brother has a school numbering seventy-two pupils. Last January they commenced in the alphabet, and now can read and spell well. How many of our little folks can beat this? And then I notice in my brother's report in "The National Freedmen" for April, among other things, "Not one case of insubordination, but all are willing to mind!" I think the cases are scarce here at the North, where an equal number of pupils could be thus reported.

Again, dear children, many of these colored children live some miles from the school, and are very poor, but they desire to learn. Remember, they or their parents have never been allowed to own anything, not even their own bodies, until quite recently; thus you see the reason of their poverty and ignorance. Now help them by your prayers and pennies, and God will bless you.

Two or three days have passed, and a letter postmarked Hockanum, Ct., is handed me. I open it, and out falls a greenback, with a figure five. I thus read—"My Dear Sr. Mathewson: God bless you for pleading the cause of the poor Freedmen. I have often wondered that the Crisis did not take more interest in the poor slaves. But, thank God, our Advent people are waking up," etc. Perhaps, sister, the right time has just come for us to bestir ourselves in this direction. I am sure that we as a people have a heart to sympathize with the oppressed everywhere. God knows that from a child I have sighed and prayed for Afric's sable children; and now that the set time to favor them is come, my heart overflows with joy. But if the Crisis had been filled up with sympathy in months and years in the past, what would it have amounted to? An impervious fort shut us entirely away from them. But now we will rejoice that God's great battering ram has leveled this fort, and we can go to them with our teachers, preachers and books, with impunity. Yes, sister, now, just NOW is the time to work for them, and I am so glad you have a heart for this work.

Again, when engaged in the culinary preparations of Saturday, another letter arrives from Delphi, Ind. What is this? I have no knowledge of any person in that region. Hands must be disengaged from dough, the letter is opened, when another greenback with the figure five greets our vision. It is from a father of seventy-two winters, who loves apostolic religion, when no man said aught of the thing he possessed were his own, but entirely repudiates this selfish religion which makes great demonstrations of love to God in word, but hates the brethren if their skins should be tinged a little darker than their own. Amen. I believe Jesus discards such a religion. I sometimes try to imagine what will be the feeling of these fastidious religionists when God shall marshal his hosts and send them forth to gather not exclusively the intellectual whites, but HIS ELECT, out of every nation, kindred, tongue and people; some of the little Bushmen of South Africa, whose average height is from three to four feet; some of the Hottentots, who are of a little higher grade, and some of the common negroes, a little higher still. Also, the dwarfish Greenlander and the tall European will join together in swelling that grand chorus of praise, where the sound is like many waters and like mighty thunderings. God has a great variety of stature, as well as of color, in the four great, grand divisions of the globe, with all the islands of the sea, out of which will be gathered his redeemed family; and there is no reason to doubt that all are alike equally dear to "Our Father." Yes, a South Sea Islander, redeemed by the blood of Christ, is just as dear to him as one of the Newtons with all their scientific lore. Then what encouragement we have to labor for the ignorant, that we may be instrumental in bringing them to Christ.

I thank you all, my dear friends, for putting the means in my hands with which to relieve the poor Freedmen. But then there remains a kind of anxious solicitude relative to the small donations. I know those who could give ten or twenty cents, who could not afford five dollars, or one dollar. Well, a day or two, and my heart is made glad by receiving twenty-five cents from "B" in Michigan, and some books. This looks right. Let all remember their mite will be acceptable to the Lord. I desire all the readers of the Crisis to enjoy the blessing this sacrifice will bring to them. I think I never was more conscious of working with God than while engaged in this late enterprise for the Freedmen. Others here seem to feel the same.

Will not the sisters in each church make an effort to get up a barrel of clothing for the poor Freedmen? In some places it may look almost like an impossibility to accomplish this; as cloth has been so high, people have worn their clothes closer than ever. I must confess, when I started on such an enterprise a few weeks since, I did it with some misgiving, yet it seemed so like the work of God, I determined to commence and do as fast as I could, knowing that God required no impossibilities, and in time I trusted it might be done. To my happy astonishment I received bundle after bundle,—one garment from here, and another from there, until instead of one, two barrels were closely packed with garments made and mended,—buttons on, all ready for wear. For some of the good sisters here plied the needle with me in earnest until the work was completed. And now about this time I hope they have reached the place of destination, to gladden the hearts of the poor. I think my brother's heart must be gladdened while distributing to those he knows to be so worthy.

Dear brethren and sisters, you will find it easier working for the Freedmen than you thought for. There seems to be an unseen hand that moves the car right along. In my humble opinion we must work a little for the Freedmen, and then we shall hear it said, "Thou hast been faithful over a FEW things," not over an empire, a nation, but just what we could be faithful in, and the Master will say we have done well. Your sister,

B. MATHEWSON.

For the World's Crisis.

THE POULTNEY CONVENTION.

REPORT.

As we, the undersigned, whose names are attached to this Covenant, do believe time is short, and it behooves us to be up and doing; and as we have found many females who feel God has called them to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, but because of the prejudice of the church in its present backslidden state, they are kept back from laboring efficiently; and believing we are living in the day when God will pour out his Spirit upon his handmaids, we therefore have assembled in Convention, in answer to the call of Sister Anna E. Smith, to all women of America, independent of denomination or color, who feel they have been called of God to preach, exhort, pray, or to write, on the subject of his speedy coming and a preparation for that coming,—we have met to advise, to encourage, to sympathize with and to strengthen each other in this great and blessed work of the salvation of souls; and having learned by past experience how little good has been accomplished for want of oneness of motive, union of action, and sympathy of feeling, we have met to arrange plans and adopt measures whereby we can assist each other temporally and spiritually, to labor more advantageously together in the vineyard of the Lord.

COVENANT.

Having been, as we trust, brought by divine grace to embrace the Lord Jesus Christ, and to give ourselves wholly to him, to walk in him with christian love, and to his glory as our common Lord, Therefore, as followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, looking for his personal and speedy advent to earth; believing the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be a revelation from God, and a perfect rule of faith and practice; we do hereby covenant with God and each other to be governed by that rule, and to convene together as often as possible. We do also engage in His strength to exercise a mutual care, as members one of another, to promote the growth of the whole body in christian holiness and comfort, to the end that we may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. That to promote and secure this object, we will assist each other by our love and friendship, by our advice in perplexity, our sympathy in sorrow, our encouragement in disappointments, by our prayers, publicly and privately, that God may help us in this great work. We will through his assisting grace uphold the public worship of God and the ordinances of his house, and maintain communion with each other by letter, or otherwise; therein promising faithfulness to each other in submitting to gospel order.

The foregoing was unanimously adopted.

Proceeded to organization, by choice of the following officers: President, Mrs. Anna E. Smith. Secretary and Treasurer, Jane Boide.

Resolved, That we be known as the "Female Union Missionary Association."

Members of this Association shall be amenable to all the rules of this Association; and if taken sick in their fields of labor, shall be assisted to their homes and friends.

This Association shall have the power to send Missionaries to every part of the United States of America, wherever their services are needed; the said Association requesting recommendation as to the character and qualifications of said persons. Churches desiring missionaries to labor among them will defray expenses to and from their field of labor.

No one shall be accepted by this Association who does not sustain an irreproachable character.

All members of this Association are expected to deport themselves as becometh christians, not to make show of self, and to dress neatly and plainly, as becometh their profession and calling.

Any member of this Association who shall walk disorderly, and by so doing bring a reproach upon the cause, shall be brought before the Association, and if charges are sustained, either by letter or otherwise, she shall be expelled.

Any sister desiring to become a member of this Association, who cannot meet with us because of distance, by sending her name, with recommendation, and a dollar for the support of Association, may become an annual member. The sum of five dollars constitutes a life membership. Any one can become a member of this Association who feels interested in the great work of the salvation of souls and will assist us, either by laboring or with money; but only those who are laboring in the field, and bring their reports to this meeting, will be considered as delegates.

It shall be the duty of every sister laboring under the direction of this Association, to keep a full account of her labors, and report the same at every meeting of this Association, either by letter or otherwise. It shall be the duty of the President to see that all reports are brought before this Association at its sittings, and all letters read that will cheer the hearts and strengthen the faith of its members.

It shall be the duty of every sister laboring under the direction of this Association to use all lawful means to the building up of the cause of Christ, either by preaching, exhortation, prayer, reading the Scriptures, or visiting from house to house.

Every sister of this Association shall have the privilege, where she has labored in a place and souls have been added to her ministry, and it is requested by those converts, and she feels it her duty, to organize and establish a mission; she shall do so after the order of the "Providence Mission" of New York City. In every case said sister shall be considered superintendent of said mission; said sister having the right to invite any minister in Christ to administer for her the ordinance of baptism and the Lord's Supper. The members of said mission may be male and female.

No sister will be authorized by this Association to organize a mission in any place where it will injure or weaken the body of Christ already established, for our aim is to build up, and not to tear down. No sister shall organize more missions than she can attend to. Every mission shall have services every Sabbath, and one or two evenings through the week. Any member of this Association who shall be sent for by any brother minister to come and help him labor for souls, shall do so, and report such labors to this Association.

For the World's Crisis.

EVANGELIST FOR NORTHERN OHIO.

At our general conference, held at Norwalk, O., in February last, among other things, our brother in the Lord, G. W. Stetson, of Olena, was chosen as an Evangelist, to travel and labor in the churches in Northern Ohio for the ensuing year; which office he generously accepted, without pecuniary aid or charge to the conference, trusting himself and family in the hands of that God in whose service he has long been engaged. We therefore feel to commend him to the consideration of the brethren, as worthy of their attention and support, believing that his services will do them good, and advance the interest of the great cause of truth pertaining to the soon coming of Christ and kindred doctrines. Remember, dear brethren in the Lord, that the laborer is worthy of his hire, and that we are all co-workers in the common cause of salvation.

J. D. Knapp, President; P. Alling, Vice President; J. Wendell, minister of church in Norwalk;—members of said Conference.

Correspondence.

From Bro. S. Tenney.

Bro. Grant:—For a few months past I have had the reading of the Crisis. Have been interested and profited by it. What I desire is the truth as it is in Jesus. To ascertain this we must study the Bible, take God's word as it reads; not fix it over to suit any man's theory; in short, take the word of God for the man of our counsel and govern ourselves by its precepts. I love the truth as revealed in the gospel of Christ, and mean to try and live in accordance with its teachings, hoping for a blest immortality in the coming kingdom of our Lord.

I was educated in the faith of eternal life in torment; gave my heart to Christ at an early age, and for some years tried to live the life of a christian, and found Jesus to be a present help in time of need, a friend that was ever ready to assist and support amid trial and temptation, for which I still praise him. But I had my misgivings as to the truthfulness of the doctrine of eternal torment in hell-fire, as taught by the orthodoxy of the present day. The Adventists were regarded as a set of fanatics, with whom it was almost infidelity to associate in a religious capacity. After a time I grew careless and indifferent in religion, and went so far as to denounce religion as a delusion, and the Bible as the work of man. For years I travelled in the dark, not knowing whither I went, enjoying nothing, but having at times a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. Heb. 10:27. But God in his infinite mercy sent me a message (a little tract) that awakened me to a sense of my situation, and after debating the matter in my own mind for months, I at last resolved to obey God and leave the result with him. I began to study the Bible with an increased interest, and found it rich in truth and promises to the faithful. The theory of "eternal torment in hell-fire" vanished, for I do not find it taught in the word of God; and give me the "Thus saith the Lord," before the theories of men. I am now trying to learn the truth as it is in Jesus; live the life that now is, by faith in Jesus, having the blest assurance of eternal life beyond the grave in the kingdom of Jesus Christ our Savior.

How important we so live that we may have the witness of the Spirit daily that we are born of God (1 John 5:1, 12) and have a title to that blest inheritance prepared for all his faithful children. Matt. 24:13. That inheritance is life, eternal life in the kingdom of God, promised to us at the resurrection, and not until then. 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; 2 Cor. 5:1, 4; Rom. 8:23; Luke 20:36; 21:28; Eph. 4:30, 31. Be of good cheer, fellow-pilgrim, for the day of our redemption draweth near, and soon we shall welcome our Lord as universal King, come to redeem this sin-cursed earth from its burden, and to take his waiting children home.

S. Tenney.

Machiasport, Me.

From M. H. Morrison.

Bro. Grant:—We surely do occupy a glorious time.

> "We are living, we are dwelling,
> In a grand and awful time;
> In an age on ages telling
> To be living is sublime."

How much every sentence of these lines has been realized by me. It is a great privilege to live in these "last days," seeing the death struggles of old earth. I would desire to live to the end. Yes, Death now gets the victory, until He who is stronger than him "that had the power of death" comes and breaks his strong, icy chain. Then the captives will go free. Then comes the song of victory over death and the grave. To us the thought of dying has always been unwelcome, but the prospect of living until Jesus comes is glorious.

"The end of all things is at hand"—a great and solemn truth; and how few there are that really believe it. When we endeavor to impress this great fact upon the minds of people, our heart is pained at the indifference they seem to manifest. It is truly a solemn thought to one who feels concerned for the eternal welfare of perishing mortals, and who realizes that "the time is short," when presenting the great truth of the coming of Christ and the nearness of that event, to see it received with such manifest coldness. But has not the Master told us that this indifference would be one of the characteristics of "the last days"? "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall the coming of the Son of man be." Doubtless the good old patriarch was very earnest in preaching and warning that doomed people, as much so as many in these last days, who are exhorting men "to flee from the wrath to come." Faithfulness is required of all who have the truth, in this great work; and if they will not hear, their blood shall be upon their own head. These are "the last days," and there is no use for idlers in "the vineyard." Then "every joint" unto their "working," or station, with the sword of God in hand.

Yours in the Lord, hoping soon to meet the blood-washed band,

M. H. Morrison.

New Glasgow, C. E.

From Bro. S. Nutt.

Eld. Miles Grant, Beloved in the Lord:—I would say to you through the goodness of a beloved brother in Christ, Dea. Nathan S. Morrison, I have been highly favored and wonderfully blest by the reading of three volumes of the Students' Library by H. L. Hastings, viz.: The Voice of the Church, Thessalonica, or the Model Church, The Great Controversy between God and Man, together with numerous tracts; and I can say from the heart that never have I read three volumes with more profit and satisfaction, and I never received so rich a blessing by the reading of any man's work through all my pilgrimage of nearly eighty-one years. For several years I have been principally confined at home. I seldom hear a sermon, or a prayer, except my own tremulous voice. You may well believe that spiritual food is very delicious and comforting to one who has stood so long on the walls of Zion and preached Christ's gospel as long as I have, but for several years deprived of the privilege of that blessed employment I once so dearly loved. My last sermon was nearly two years ago, on a funeral occasion, and then I had to be seated in a chair, not able to stand up to pray or to preach. I feel my work is about all done, and God help me to finish my course with joy, and receive my crown at the resurrection of the just.

I have learned by these volumes that the Society had tracts to distribute to the poor, without price. Now if that is the case, if the Society will send to me in Franklin, N. H., any number of tracts (such as the Great Controversy between God and Man), I will distribute them all around and let them preach to the careless sinner and backsliding church-members.

Samuel Nutt.

Franklin, N. H.

From Bro. C. F. Buck.

Bro. Grant:—I thank the Lord with all my heart that he has raised up men in these perilous times who are fully qualified to point out the great truths of the Bible. How precious to the child of God is that promise of our Savior given to his sad and weeping disciples just before he left them to go to his Father,—"I will come again." Glorious promise! On it rest the hopes of all the righteous, from Abel down to the last one that shall fall asleep in Jesus.

Yes, He must come, or the great plan of redemption can never be accomplished. If he comes not there can be no resurrection; and if no resurrection then are the dead perished. But he will come; not as a root out of dry ground, in whom there is no form nor comeliness; not to be led as a lamb to the slaughter, or as a sheep before its shearers; not as a man of sorrow, despised, and rejected of men; not to be crowned with thorns, and led away to die; not to cry in the agony of death, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" No, no! he will come robed in dreadful majesty, to take to himself his great power and reign. Before him earth's proud monarchs quail; for he is the only potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords. Empires, kingdoms, and all forms of governments, must give place to his. He comes to sit on David's throne, and to reign over the house of Jacob forever. He comes to destroy death and him that had the power of death. At his voice the earth shall cast out her dead, and the sea also; and death and hell shall give up the dead which are in them, and they shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of condemnation.

I tremble when I contemplate the events of that great day. Shall I be found of Him in peace without spot and blameless? shall I hear his welcome voice saying unto me, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord"? Will he save me in the great day of his wrath; when the kings of the earth and the great men, and the rich men, and chief captains, and the mighty men, and every free man, and every bond man, shall hide themselves in the dens and rocks of the mountains? I have hope, which hope has been like an anchor to me in storm and tempest, in perils by sea and land, in sickness and health, in joy and sorrow, in prosperity and adversity; and I have the assurance of my Saviour that it will hold till the last great storm is over.

My heart overflows with gratitude to God when I contemplate the glory of that better land, when earth is restored to its Eden beauty. Jesus will be there, angels will be there, Abraham will be there, Isaac and Jacob will be there, Moses and the prophets will be there; the poor fishermen, who left their nets by the sea of Galilee to follow Jesus, will be there; Paul and Peter will be there; John, the beloved of Jesus, will be there, and the martyrs, whose blood lies mingled with the dust, will be there. Ye weeping mothers, your little ones shall come from the land of the enemy, and be there. Brethren and sisters will you be there?

Charles H. Buck.

From Bro. H. McClary.

Bro. Grant:—I have a good supply of the Young Pilgrim yet. Shall send some subscribers for the Crisis, and Voice of the West, and Young Pilgrim soon. I intend to act as free agent for these messengers of truth all the way to the Celestial City. I scattered some of them in the car, when the boy that sold the yellow-covered literature told me to stop giving away my tracts, for he had the privilege of selling his to make a living. But my books and papers got the preference. When I give a reason of my hope with meekness and fear, when I tell them I believe a dead man is a dead man, and that God never made one man to punish another for sin, I am looked upon as having no charity at all. I do not want to embrace any doctrine that will make me so uncharitable. Brethren, cry aloud, sound the alarm. The tares and the wheat are ripening for the harvest. I see the field is all white, all ready for the harvest. My prayer is, Lord, send forth more laborers into the field. The gathering time is about to take place. The sifting time is coming.

O brethren in the East, there are more laborers wanted in this Western part of the vineyard. I attended one of Bro. Sheldon's tent meetings. The brethren here are few and far between. I am about to leave Richland Co., Wisconsin, to go to Fillmore Co., Minnesota, to hunt up some of the lost sheep of the house of Israel. I do not think much of going on pilgrimage as Rev. Mr. Smooth-it-away and Rev. Mr. Reformist recommends. I had rather go the old-fashioned way, slow and sure. I find many homes better than my Master had, and I have no reason to complain. It is enough for the servant to be as his Master. Yours in love,

H. McClary.

Mrs. C. Strauss, Jonesborough, Ill., writes: "My husband is absent from home on a preaching tour among the Germans in Indiana and Ohio. There are very many among the Germans who are looking for the speedy coming of our Lord Jesus, and yet there are but few preachers who speak of it to their congregations."

The subject of this notice early embraced the doctrine of Christ's second advent to earth, and strove to order his daily conduct for that great event. He now sleeps in Jesus.

May those aged parents and brothers be prepared to meet him in the morning of the resurrection. A comforting discourse for that sorrowing group of friends was given by Eld. T. W. Piper, demonstrating conclusively that between death and the resurrection man is unconscious.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

The New Constitution of Missouri.—The following is a synopsis of the leading features of the new constitution of Missouri, which has just been adopted:

It declares Missouri a free State forever.

It establishes the equality of all men before the law.

It prohibits legislation interfering with the personal rights of men on account of their color.

It declares that Missouri shall ever remain a member of the American Union.

It excludes from the ballot-box and from office traitors, rebels, rebel sympathizers, guerrilla marauders, bushwhackers, and their aiders and abettors.

It in like manner excludes Knights of the Golden Circle, Sons of Liberty and O. A. K's.

It in like manner excludes those who enrolled themselves as disloyal, or as Southern sympathizers, to avoid militia duty.

It provides for an efficient registration of voters, thereby securing the exclusion of illegal votes.

It removes the rule requiring treason to be proved by at least two witnesses, and leaves it to be proved as any other crime.

It invites immigration from Europe, by extending the elective franchise to those persons of foreign birth who have, more than one year before an election, declared their intention, according to law, to become citizens of the United States.

It forbids private, local and special legislation, which for thirty years has cursed the State, and brings the State under a uniform system of general laws.

It prohibits lotteries.

It forbids the Legislature making compensation for emancipated slaves.

It stops the creation of corporations by special acts, with enormous and dangerous powers, and requires all corporations to be formed under general laws.

It prohibits the creation, renewal or extension of the charter of any bank of issue.

It protects the interests of the people by imposing upon stockholders individual liability for the debts of corporations.

It secures an efficient system of common schools for the free education of the children of the State.

It gives increased facilities for its own amendment, and allows the people a direct vote upon every amendment proposed.

A Vera Cruz letter of the 1st inst. states that the Confederates still continue to flock to Mexico.

There is no doubt that Gwinn will get his project through. It only awaits the signature of Maximilian to become a law. He goes out as the Director General of emigration for the States of Sonora, Chihuahua, Durango and Tamaulipas, with extraordinary powers and 8000 French troops to back him. The region is to be strictly Southern. Ten thousand Confederates are to be armed and paid by the Empire, but kept in the above mentioned States as a protection to emigrants.

Grierson's cavalry have arrived at Vicksburg, ending at that point their month's campaign through the States of Florida, Alabama and Mississippi. The expedition passed through portions of Alabama and Mississippi never before visited by hostile troops. They report the interior of those States in a most prosperous condition, with thousands of bales of cotton which the owners were anxious to get to market, and also that there would be large crops of cotton this year. Thousands of acres which had been planted with corn, were plowed up and cotton substituted. The crops generally were looking very fine.

Advices from Metamoras of the 15th confirm the report of a defeat of the Juarez General Negrete, after his unsuccessful attempt on Matamoras. He is reported to have lost 700 men killed and 2000 taken prisoners.

London Paved with Gold.—The city of London is exactly the size of a farm of 631 acres and ten poles. Into this small space are crowded daily more than 800,000 persons, and at night about 130,000 repose there. To these must be added uncountable vehicles and animals of every description. Land everywhere in the city is dear, but especially in the neighborhood of the Bank of England, the Royal exchange, and other commercial points. The last cheap thing in Lombard street was sold at two millions and a quarter per acre! say £70 per superficial foot, or £630 per superficial yard! Imagine paying an annual rental of £25 odd for a space not much larger than a full-sized tea-tray! The old idea that London is paved with gold becomes literally realized, when one must place 79 golden sovereigns on each superficial foot. Well may citizens choose to live out of town, and only do business in the city, when one first floor in Lombard street lets for £4,500 annually, and another for £2,800. Vast indeed must be the transactions whose concoction and completion take place on these costly floors. Mighty steam, by rail and by sea, and the wonderful telegraph, have made London the accessible focus of the business world.

Destitution about Atlanta.—From a recent report made by order of the military authorities, it has been ascertained that there are thirty-five thousand men, women and children in the counties of Georgia, immediately surrounding Atlanta, who are dependent upon the United States Government for support and preservation from death by hunger. In the counties of North Georgia there must be at least as many more.

☞ One of the lions at Washington just now is a cow which has marched with Sheridan's army since November 19th, 1864, and has traveled in all 1220 miles. She has constantly given from a gallon to a gallon and a quarter of milk daily. This veteran bovine bummer has been presented to the Soldier's Home.

☞ The crops in Northern Mississippi are said to be excellent. A great deal of cotton is being raised. Corn and fruits are abundant. The wheat harvest, nearly over, is fully one-third more than has been raised for years.

☞ In the course of the next six weeks nearly all the general hospitals will have been broken up. Convalescent patients are being discharged or transferred as fast as possible. There are about 10,000 sick in hospital at present.

☞ A train of sixty wagons, containing Mormon saints, who, on the ground of political and social differences, are fleeing from Utah and Brigham Young is expected to reach Council Bluffs in a few days.

Tremont Grove and Campmeeting.

This meeting will be held upon the same ground as last year, one-half mile from the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., on the Old Colony and Cape Cod Railroad, thirty-five miles from Boston, and eighteen from New Bedford. It will commence July 25th, and continue over the Sabbath. We hope to greet the many we have met there before, and many more beside. Shall we not see many from Portsmouth, Concord, Lawrence, and from towns round about Boston? Encouraged by the blessings of God upon this meeting in the past, we expect a larger and a better one this year.

Preachers who may come in the name of the Lord will find a cordial welcome. We, however, assume no responsibilities save with such as are engaged. None are desired who come in their own name, or in the name of some strange doctrine. The objects of this meeting are to comfort and strengthen the saints, and save men "from the wrath to come."

THOUGHTS UPON THE SABBATH.

'Tis Sabbath morn, and O! how sweet
To think that many youthful feet
Are on their way to the house of prayer,—
For the good of earth do gather there.

How sweet to sit and hear God's word,
And hear of Jesus Christ our Lord,
And think that he was once a child,
That he was gentle, meek and mild.

It's sweet to hear how soon he'll come
And gather all his dear ones home,
And all that love him with the heart—
Will live with him, no more to part.

How good to think in that bright world
No fears from Satan can be hurled,
For he will be at last destroyed,
And we by him no more annoyed.

Then let us strive to overcome,
And live with Christ no more to roam,
In one eternal Sabbath day,
Where tears and sighs are passed away.

North Dana, Mass. LUTHERA B. WEAVER.

MISTAKES OF INFIDELS.

A favorite field for the display of their knowledge of science, and ignorance of the art of reading, by our modern infidels, is the Bible account of creation, in the first chapter of Genesis, which is alleged to be utterly irreconcilable with the known facts of Astronomy and Geology. Leaving the latter out of view, for the present, the astronomical objections may all be arranged under four heads. First, that the Bible account of the creation of man, only some six or seven thousand years ago, must be false—because the records of astronomical observations, taken more than seventeen thousand years ago, by the Hindoos and the Egyptians, are still in existence, and have been verified. Second, that the light of some of the stars, now shining upon us, and especially of some of the distant nebulæ, must have left them millions of years ago, to have traveled over the vast space which separates them from us, and be visible on our globe now; whereas, the Bible teaches that the universe was created only some six or seven thousand years ago. Third, that the Bible represents God as creating the sky a solid crystal, or metallic sphere, or hemisphere (they are not agreed which,) to which the stars are fastened, and with which they revolve round the earth; which every schoolboy knows to be absurd. Fourth, that the Bible represents God as creating the Sun and Moon only two days before Adam, and as creating light before the Sun; which is also held to be absurd.

1. The first of these objections—that the Hindoos and Egyptians made astronomical observations thousands of years before Adam, and that the accuracy of these observations has been verified by modern calculations—is simply untrue. No such observations were ever made. The pretended records of such have been proved, in the case of the Hindoo astronomy, to be forgeries, and in the case of the Egyptian records, blunders of the discoverers. There is not an authentic uninspired astronomical observation extant for three thousand years after Adam.

The objection, however, is worth remembering, as a specimen of the way in which ignorant men swallow impudent falsehoods, if they only seem to contradict the Word of Truth. When the labors of Oriental Scholars had made the Vedas and Shasters—the sacred books of the Hindoos—accessible to European philosophers, a wonderful shout was raised among infidels. "Here," it was said, "is the true chronology. We always knew that man was not a degenerate creature, fallen from a higher estate, some few thousand years ago, but that he has existed from eternity, in a constant progress toward his present lofty position; and now we have the authentic records of the most ancient and civilized people of the world—the people of India—reaching back for millions of years before the Mosaic cosmogony, and allowing ample time for the development of the noble savage into the cultivated philosopher. These records have every mark of truth, giving minute details of events, and histories of successive lines of princes; and, moreover, record the principal astronomical facts of the successive periods—eclipses, comets, positions of stars, etc., which attest their veracity. Henceforth, the Hebrew records must hide their heads. Neither as poetry nor history can they pretend to compare with the Vedas."

The Hindoo Shasters were accordingly, for a time, in high repute, among people who knew very little about them. Even Dr. Adam Clarke was so far led away with the spirit of the age, as to pollute his valuable commentary by the insertion of the Gitagovinda, after the Chaldee Targum on the Song of Solomon; where the curious reader can satisfy himself as to the scientific value of such Pantheistic dotings. By the infidels of Britain and America they were appealed to as standard works, of undoubted authority, and hundreds who declared that it was irrational credulity to believe in the Bible, risked their souls on the faith of the Vedas, of which they never had read a single sentence!

Now, when we remember that these veracious chronicles reach back through maha yugs of 4,320,000, years of mortals, a thousand of which, or 4,320,000,000, make a kalpa, or one day of the life of Brahma, while his night is of the same duration, and his life consists of a hundred years of such days and nights, about the middle of which period the little span of our existence is placed;—that among the facts of the history, are the records of the seven great continents of the world, separated by seven rivers, and seven chains of mountains, four hundred thousand miles high (reaching only to the moon;) of the families of their kings, one of whom had a hundred sons, another only ten thousand, another sixty thousand, who were born in a pumpkin, nourished in pans of milk, reduced to ashes by the curse of a sage, and restored to life by the waters of the Ganges;—and that among the astronomical observations by which the accuracy of these extraordinary facts is confirmed, are accounts of deluges, in which the waters not only arose above the tops of earth's mountains, but above the seven inferior and three superior worlds, *reaching even to the Pole Star—we may well wonder at the faith which could receive all this as so true, that on the strength of it they rejected the miracles of the Bible as false. Even Voltaire ridiculed these stories.

But a visionary man, named Baillie, calculated the alleged observations backwards, and found them sufficiently correct to satisfy him that all the rest of the story was equally true. It never seems to have occurred to him, that if he could calculate eclipses backwards, so could the Hindoos. It is just as easy to calculate an eclipse, or the position of a planet, backwards, as forwards. If I watch the motion of the hands of a clock accurately, and find that the little hand moves over the twelfth of a circle every hour, and the large hand around the circle in the same time, and that the large hand, now at noon, covers the little one, I can calculate that at sixteen minutes and a quarter past three it will nearly cover it again; but then, it is just as easy to count that the two hands were covered at sixteen minutes and a quarter before nine that morning, or that they were exactly in line at 6 A. M. If my clock would keep going at the same rate for a thousand years, I could predict the position of the hands at any hour of the 29th of March, of the year 2857; but it is evident that the very same calculation applied the other way would show the position that the hands would have had a thousand years ago, or five thousand years ago, just as well. And if I were to allege that my clock was made by Tubal Cain, before the flood, and for proof of the fact declare, that on the first of January, 3857, B. C., at 6 o'clock, P. M., I had seen the two hands directly in line, and some wiseacre were to calculate the time, and find that at that hour the hands ought to have been just in that position, and conclude thence that I was undoubtedly one of the antediluvians, and the clock no less certainly a specimen of the craft of the first artificer in brass and iron, the argument would be precisely parallel to the infidel's argument from the Tirvalore Tables, and the astronomy of the Vedas.

But suppose my clock ran a little slow; say half a minute in the month, or so; or that it was made to keep siderial time, which differs by a little from solar time, and that I did not know exactly what the difference was; it is evident that on a long stretch of some hundreds or thousands of years, I would get out of my reckoning, and the hands would not have been in the positions I had calculated. Now, this was just what happened with the Brahmins and their calculations. The clock of the heavens keeps a uniform rate of going, but they made a slight mistake in the counting of it; and so did their infidel friends. But our modern astronomers have got the true time, set their clocks, and made their tables by it; and on applying these tables to the pretended Hindoo observations, find that they are all wrong, and that no such eclipses as they allege ever did, or possibly could have happened in our solar system.* So the Hindoo astronomy is now consigned to the same tomb with the Hindoo chronology and cosmogony, except when a missionary, on the banks of the Ganges exhibits it to the pupils of his English school, as a specimen of the falsehoods which have ever formed the swaddling bands of Pantheism; or when some Louisiana planter astonishes a Yankee schoolmaster in search of employment, with an exhibition of the profound philosophy sheltered among the cane-brakes.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

NUMBER ELEVEN.

PRACTICALLY CONSIDERED.

"What has been done, can be done."

"Union, union,
Of kindred hearts—in Jesus one—
O, this is heaven on earth begun!"

The author of the following communication is well known to the benevolent public; his labors of love and self-sacrifices have been indefatigable in spreading a pure gospel.

In addition to the facts stated in the article below, this faithful and beloved missionary of the cross has been instrumental in organizing some six or eight churches in his own native slaveholding State, Kentucky, on anti-slavery, christian union principles, in the midst of great opposition and persecution.

These churches, adopting the Bible exclusively for their creed, covenant, and discipline, are still flourishing,—lights shining brightly in a dark place. But to the communication. Let Bro. Fee speak for himself:—

DEAR BRO. NEWTON:—Since the beginning of the present belligerent struggle, we have this proverb—"War is a great eye-opener." Among the many things to which it is opening our eyes, is that of the folly of sects among true christians.

Last summer, whilst laboring in this camp, several christian laborers with myself, felt the necessity of a christian association—a church—a place where christians might have mutual edification and discipline, and where sinners might come and commit themselves for Christ. The question arose, "What shall be the basis of the association?"—the church, "What creed and what name"? Every one admitted that we could not for a moment bring in the confession of faith of the Presbyterian church, for there were things in it to which Methodists would object. For a like reason, we could not bring in the Methodist discipline,—Baptists would object. Some of us said, "Let us agree to take the Bible—Scriptures of the Old and New Testament—as our rule of faith and practice." Some were afraid that was too latitudinarian. The majority decided that we would get nothing better,—the early christians had nothing better. It was adopted.

The next question was as to name. The reasons which existed against a Presbyterian creed, or a Methodist creed, existed with equal force against a Presbyterian, Methodist, or Baptist name. So we might not be called Wesleyans, or Lutherans; such names would not only be an occasion of division, but also dishonoring to Christ.

One brother, then a chaplain to the hospital, said, "Whilst in camp I am willing to fellowship all who manifest the Spirit of Christ; but when I go home, must be a Presbyterian still." The overwhelming majority said we must take the Bible as our rule of faith and practice, and stand as the church of Christ at Camp Nelson.

We have in camp the one church, male and female, white and colored. To this accessions now are frequent,—most accessions from the colored.

Would there not be a great saving of time, money and labor, if christians everywhere were thus united? Would there not be much more of harmony and efficiency?

I believe this war is a striking event, showing the necessity of union in order to efficiency. As there is necessity for union in government, so there should be in church.

In our camp there is a lieutenant who is a deacon in the Methodist church. He has license to preach and to baptize. He had written to his Bishop concerning the organization of a Methodist church within this camp. The Bishop replied, it is a question "whether to attempt a regular church organisation in camp without a regular pastor, or only a mission board to invite all denominations of pious men during their term of service in the army." The sentence is not very perfect, but the sense is clear: whilst in camp—in the war—he thought pious men ought to be united; I would not unite them as "denominations," but as "pious men"—let the "denominations" die with "whigs and democrats." What do you say to this?

For the World's Crisis.

"SHOULD CHRISTIANS FIGHT?"

BRO. WELLCOME:—Personally unknown to me, yet known through your writings, I address you as a brother in Christ. I have just been reading, with much pleasure and interest, your seasonable tract—"Should Christians Fight?" Without flattery, I can say it is the best thing I have ever read on the subject, and corresponds more perfectly with the views I have entertained for some years, than anything I have ever seen in print (always excepting the Book). The argument showing the distinction between powers and laws, or enactments, I believe to be unanswerable.

Rom. 13:1,—"There is no power but of God." Some Greek copies read upo, instead of apo, which conveys a very different idea; upo being under God; apo being of, from, or by God. Also in the last clause of the verse the idea now generally conveyed by the term ordained is much stronger, as implying approbation, than the original will admit of. And there is also quite a difference between obedience to laws, and submission to power.

There is one point in which you have failed to bring out the full force of the argument; and it is a very material point also, and mainly relied upon by the war party. Luke 22:36, etc.,—"And he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one, because I say unto you, that this that is written, must yet be accomplished in me. And he was reckoned among the transgressors (anomon, outlaws): for the things [prophesied] concerning me have an end [object]. And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough." Enough for what? certainly not enough among twelve or more men, for either successful offense or defense, against the armed ministers of the "ordained powers," but enough to fulfill the prophecy; i. e., he was found in company with a band of "outlaws," or rebels,—men with arms in their hands, resisting his arrest, by the constituted authorities.

I think the terms "outlaws" and "mob" should not be applied to the Roman soldiers and the servants of the High Priest, for in them both civil and ecclesiastical government were represented. It was well said by the Master, that the things prophesied concerning him had an object, which rendered their fulfillment absolutely necessary. Did you ever think, Brother, that had those two swords been absent, the whole plan of atonement, by the pouring out of the blood of the Lamb, our passover, must have failed? Those two swords furnished absolutely all the evidence (of which we have any knowledge) upon which Pilate could sentence him to the Roman capital punishment of crucifixion. This evidence failing, the only other shadow of an accusation against him was for blasphemy, the punishment for which (even if it could have been sustained) was by stoning to death, in the infliction of which his blood would not have been poured out upon the altar (the earth) as the price of its and our redemption, and also some of his bones must have been broken, contrary to another prophecy. Oh! how wonderful are God's ways and purposes.

Again, "Flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God," but flesh and bones will. What of Christ, who was buried, raised from the tomb; for "he saw not corruption"? "Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have," (his blood was not buried with him). Now, no mode of capital punishment ever practised, is so well adapted, as that by which our Savior suffered, to drain the last drop of blood from the human body. The slow and lingering death caused by driving the cruel nails through the palmer arch, and a similar congeries of arteries in the soles of the feet, and the final thrust of the soldier's spear, were effectual to accomplish the end, and the law, and the types, and the prophecies are fulfilled.

But to return to the practical question, "Should Christians Fight?" In addition to the instruction of the Master in connection with Scripture above considered, a corrected translation of 2 Tim. 2:24 is conclusive as to the teaching of Paul on this subject. "But the servant of the Lord, must not fight, but be mild with all,—skilful in teaching, enduring (or patient) of evil." This injunction was given especially with reference to religious controversies which were such a fruitful source of wars in the early days of church apostasy. How much less should they participate in merely political or territorial wars.

There are no less than five different words in the Greek New Testament, which are indifferently rendered strive in our common version; and, of course, in most, or all cases, fail to convey to the ordinary reader the different shades of meaning manifest in the original.

1. Erisei, Matt. 12:19,—"He shall not strive." The same word in Rom. 1:29 is rendered "debate," and is the true meaning, and signifies a verbal controversy.

2. Agonizo, Luke 13:24,—"Strive to enter in," etc.; true meaning, agonize, and signifying a mental controversy or struggle.

3. Athlee and athleesee, 2 Tim. 2:5,—"And if a man also strive," etc.,; and "except he strive lawfully." Here is signified a muscular effort, or struggle of the naked and unarmed athletæ in the races of the Olympian games.

4. Philotimoumenon, Rom. 15:30,—"Yea, so have I strived to preach," etc., literal interpretation, have desired the honor." All these "strivings (except the first) have a good signification, and are commended, but do not contemplate the use of any other than the sword of the Spirit.

5. Machas, machesthai and logomachein, 2 Tim. 2:14, 23, 24. In all these verses the rendering is strive, strfies. The root of the word is machaira, a sword, a sabre; and from it is undoubtedly derived the Spanish-Mexican, machete, a short sword or cleaver, used both for fighting and cutting wood. The primary and literal signification of the verb is, to fight; and of the noun machee, is battle, war. It describes an evil to be deprecated and avoided by christians, or servants of the Lord Christ. It is used solely to convey the idea of warfare with carnal weapons. But Paul teaches that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of strongholds."—2 Cor. 10:4. May God help his people consistently to confine themselves to such.

THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT.

This great blessing is the privilege of all true believers.

Mr. Wesley says: "By a sense of pardon, I mean a distinct, explicit assurance that my sins are forgiven. I allow, first, that there is such an explicit assurance; second, that it is the common privilege of real christians; third, that it is the proper christian faith which purifieth the heart and overcometh the world."

The appositeness of the following quotation from Dr. Clarke, will fully justify its length. Preaching once in Plymouth, Eng., on the Witness of the Spirit in the souls of believers, after having produced and commented on those Scriptures which are supposed most pointedly to contain the doctrine, he said:

"It might have been doubted that we have misunderstood these Scriptures, and made them the basis of an article which they do not support, if the general testimony of all the sincere converts of the gospel of Christ had not illustrated the facts; and had not the experience of those converts been uniform in this particular, while in many cases their habits of life, education, and natural temperament were entirely different. And this not only among persons bred up with the same general view of christianity, in the same christian communion, but among persons bred up in different communions, with creeds in many respects diametrically opposed to each other! And, further, this has been the same in persons in different climates and countries. All who have been convinced of sin, righteousness and judgment—have truly repented of their sins, and taken refuge in the blood of the cross, have had their burden of guilt taken away, and the peace of God communicated, and with the Spirit of God witnessing with their spirit that they were the sons and daughters of God Almighty, so that they had no more doubt of their acceptance with God than they had of their existence.

"I should have never looked for the witness of the Spirit, had I not found numerous scriptures which positively asserted, or held it out by necessary induction; and had I not found that all the truly godly, of every sect and party, possessed the blessing—a blessing which is the common birthright of the sons and daughters of God. Wherever I went among deeply religious people, I found the blessing. All who had turned from unrighteousness to the living God, and sought redemption by faith in the blood of the cross, exulted in this grace. It was never looked upon by them as a privilege which some peculiarly favored souls were blessed with; it was known from Scriptures and experience to be the common lot of the people of God. It was not persons of a peculiar temperament who possessed it; all the truly righteous had it, whether in their natural dispositions sanguine, melancholy or mixed. I met with it everywhere, met with it among the most simple and illiterate, as well as among those who had every advantage which high cultivation and deep learning could bestow. Perhaps I might with the strictest truth say that, during the last forty years I have been in the ministry, I have met with at least forty thousand who had a full and clear evidence that God, for Christ's sake, had forgiven their sins, the Spirit itself bearing witness with their spirit that they are the sons and daughters of God. The number need not surprise you when you learn that every Methodist preacher converses closely, and examines thoroughly, every member of his society, concerning the work of God upon their souls, once every three months."

Martin Luther says: "Let us assure ourselves that God sendeth his Spirit into our hearts. This I say to confute that pernicious doctrine of the Papists, which taught that no man certainly knows whether he is in favor with God or no, whereby they utterly defaced the doctrine of faith, tormented men's consciences, banished Christ out of the church, and darkened and denied all the benefis of the Holy Ghost."

John Calvin speaks on this question in the following language: "St. Paul means that the Spirit of God gives such a testimony to us, that, he being our guide and teacher, our spirit perceives our adoption to be certain. For our mind, of itself, independent of the preceding testimony of the Spirit, could not produce this persuasion in us. For while the Spirit witnesses that we are the sons of God, he at the same time inspires this confidence into our minds, that we are bold to call God our Father."

We select the following testimonies from the English Martyrs:

Bp. Hooper (1554). "Blessed is the man in whom God's Spirit beareth record that he is the Son of God. I believe that the Holy Ghost is the pledge and earnest of our inheritance, by which we are assured, ascertained, and certainly persuaded in our conscience that we be the children of God, and brethren adoptives to Jesus Christ, and consequently coheirs to eternal life."

Archbishop Usher (1650). "From adoption flows all the christian's joy; for the Spirit of adoption is, first, a witness (Romans 3:1); second, a seal; third, the pledge and earnest of our inheritance, setting a holy security upon the soul, whereby it rejoiceth even in affliction, in hope of glory."

Bp. Pearson (1672). "It is the office of the Holy Ghost to assure us of the adoption of sons, to create in us a sense of the paternal love of God towards us, to give us an earnest of our everlasting inheritance."

Cranmer (1540). "The same Holy Ghost doth also assure us that our sins are forgiven, and that our pardon is signed with God's seal."—Earnest Christian.

DO NOT DESPAIR.

BRO. GRANT:—With your permission, I would address a few words to that large class of persons who at times doubt the possession of the spirit of Christ by themselves or others—for this reason: they know that Jesus would have done differently from what they did, in the same case. For instance, one is very irritable, and at a slight provocation speaks abruptly, perhaps harshly, and conscience condemns him at once; and he says, "I know that Christ would not have spoken thus, and I cannot belong to him, for if I have not the Spirit of Christ I am none of his."

I would not persuade any to think they are christians when they are not; neither would I advise any to continue to indulge in evil passions. No; rather strive always to do as you think Jesus would do under the same circumstances. But do not at once and forever condemn and cast off yourself or others, and say there is no hope, because we fall short of doing at all times as we think HE would have done. We cannot doubt that Peter belonged to Christ—we are sure he was a true christian—yet he did not always act as his Master would have done in the same situation.

And it is so without doubt with all christians of all ages. Not but that they may attain to a state where they may be "free indeed;" but many can say they have not yet attained, neither are "already perfect."

But let us continue to strive to be like CHRIST, and not give up because we fail in some points. Does not the apostle say, "in many points we offend all?" Let us humble ourselves in the dust on account of our faults, and as we deeply feel our weakness let us cry earnestly for help from above. And if we may be made entirely free from all sin and its evil consequences, let us seize that freedom, and "stand fast in the liberty" of the sons of GOD.

We want to be indeed living temples of the Holy Ghost. "And this also we wish, even your perfection." F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

DEMONISM.

I find the following in Leslie's Illustrated newspaper of May 20th, 1865, on "Devils abroad," which I think may be interesting to the readers of our paper. JOHN TAYLOR.

"DEVILS ABROAD."

It seems to be no longer the fashion for devils to distinguish themselves by the cloven foot. Fashions change everywhere, and there is no reason why devils should be behind the rest of the world. . . . Since the time Robert Montgomery depicted Satan on Lord Macaulay's authority, he has attempted to come out in his old character. The theory that he raps on tables and tells a variety of contemptible lies, is indeed little creditable to him. . . . Lately, it seems, he has been doing something in his earlier and more malignant style.

The people of Morzine, in Savoy, a remote valley to the south of the Lake of Geneva, have for the last eight years been the victims of a series of trials. The first patient was a girl of ten years old, who was being prepared for her first communion, and who exhibited certain symptoms which were immediately attributed to diabolic agents. From her the infection seems to have spread until there were one hundred and twenty cases of possession in a village of two thousand inhabitants. The antics performed under this strange influence were alarming to the last degree. The afflicted persons went through extraordinary physical contortions. They turned over and over in one bound. They leaped like a steel spring suddenly released, bending backwards so that head and feet touched the ground together. A boy of twelve ran up a pine tree eighty feet high; then he bent down the top shoot, and stood on it head downwards, singing and gesticulating. Suddenly he came to his senses and called for help. His elder brother cried out, "Devil, enter again into this child, that he may be able to come down again." The devil obeyed with singular good nature, and the boy immediately ran down head foremost like a squirrel. The victims seized, who were of all ages and positions, invariably spoke of themselves in the third person, and personated evil spirits. The voice of one woman exclaimed, during a religious service by a bishop, "Ah! damned carrion of a bishop, thou makest me depart." . . . As a rule the devils professed to be the spirits of human beings, who were suffering for their sins on earth. . . . .

Every attempt has been made to put a stop to the plague. Physicians were sent for and could do nothing. Exorcisms were tried, and, as might naturally be expected, the excitement only made matters worse. The prefect came and spoke to some of the women; they fell upon him and his gensdarmes; they lifted strong men in their arms, and pinned them against the walls; then, with a bound, they sprang through the windows, one after the other, and disappeared. The bishop came and tried the effects of a high mass; it produced a fearful scene of cries, oaths, blasphemies, and fearful convulsions, and the bishop was glad to escape without actual violence against himself. . . .

Many curious symptoms, such as insensibility to pain, preternatural acuteness of the senses, and a power of predicting the phases of their disease, are mentioned as characterizing this display of diabolic energy. One cannot but feel the deepest sympathy for three thousand people shut up in the recesses of an Alpine valley, to be tortured by such an appalling complaint. To them it is of course witchcraft and demoniacal power made visible. . . . The strange phenomenons which we have noticed have a curious bearing upon another topic. The prevailing scepticism of the period, though it has not affected the people of Morzine, has of course affected their observers.

Scientific men have given a variety of names to the demons. They set them down not as Abaddon and Lucifer, but as hysteria-mania, etc. It is a mere round-about-way of concealing profound and utter ignorance perhaps, until a better theory has been discovered. It would be as well to leave the name of demons to the occult cause. It does not mean very much, and it serves as well as any other to denote a mysterious agency, of which we know nothing at all. They make arm-chairs prance; they usurp the place of conjurors, and they are evidently not above contributing to the smallest and most childish kind of amusement.

QUESTIONS TO THOSE WHO NEGLECT PRAYER MEETINGS.

1. Are you not always better employed? If not, can it be right in you to absent yourself?

2. Do you get more good to your own soul, and do more good to others, by staying away? If not, can you be acting wisely?

3. Does your own conscience justify you, or have you not sometimes a difficulty in keeping it quiet on the subject?

4. Will a death-bed commend your present course, or will you then look upon your neglect of prayer-meetings with pleasure, think you?

5. Does not your pastor suffer by your neglect? Does it not hurt his feelings, cool his zeal, and hinder his usefulness?

6. Are not your fellow-members in the church discouraged by you, and may you not thus offend Christ's little ones?

7. Is not your own family injured by your neglect? What will your children think of prayer-meetings, seeing you habitually neglect them? Is it surprising if they despise them?

8. Is there no reason to fear that unconverted sinners may be both hindered and led to think lightly of prayer by your conduct?

9. Can you have a proper concern for the prosperity of the church the spread of Christ's cause, and the conversion of sinners, if you never meet to pray for them?

10. Are you sure that you fulfill your duty as a church-member, while you neglect prayer-meetings? Is neglect of duty no sin, and is there no probability of your being called to account for it?

11. Did any one ever really gain anything, either in temporal or spiritual things, by neglecting prayer-meetings? If you think so, can you prove it?

12. Is there no selfishness, or pride, or worldly-mindedness, at the root of your neglect? If so, ought such things to be encouraged?

13. Would it be right to give up the prayer meetings? Do you think this would please God, or improve the cause? But if all the members did as you do, must they not be given up? Could not the rest find excuses for staying away, think you, as well as you? Do you not think they would, if their hearts were as worldly, or as cold, or as indifferent about the prosperity of the cause as you appear to be?—United Methodist Magazine.

TWO PICTURES.

Two bright little blue eyes hidden,
Two hands on the still breast laid,
Two feet by the Guest unbidden
In the third year's journey stayed.
Fresh buds in the hair so flaxen,
Soft robes of the sunset hues
On the waist and the limbs so waxen,
And two little velvet shoes.
A coffin with silken lining,
Of wood of the richest tint,
With trimmings of silver shining,
And "Eddie" in gilded print.
Deep grief in the stately dwelling—
Sad faces beside the dead,
Where sorrow that knows no telling
Denies to be comforted.
A mother's fair, jewelled fingers
Soft touching the chilly brow,
While father long gazing lingers—
O, what are his riches now?
Fair hands on the still cheek pressing,
Hot tears on the icy face,
Lips pressed for the caressing
From Charlie and sister Grace.
A mound by the fairest willow
That graces the place of graves,
That weeps by his lowly pillow,
And softly above him waves.
Fresh flowers in Parian vases,
A statue with curly head
And sweetest of childish faces
To watch by the precious dead.

PICTURE SECOND.

Two more little blue eyes hidden—
Other hands on the quiet breast—
Other feet by the Guest unbidden
Stayed fast for their long, long rest.
No buds in the hair so flaxen,
No robe but a tattered skirt;
Bare shoulders and arms so waxen,
And naked the thin, white feet.
A clumsy old box unshaven,
Of cedar-wood roughly built,
With "Eddie" in charcoal graven,—
No silver, nor silk, nor gilt.
Tho' hardened the mother's fingers,
Yet softly she smooths his hair;
Lone Annie beside them lingers,
But "father" has "gone before."
Sure these in a home so lowly,
If any who mourn their dead,
By sympathies kind and holy
Have need to be comforted.
No marble, nor flowers adorning
That grave in the Potters' field,
Where multitudes wait that morning
When secrets shall be revealed,
When Death with its train of sorrows,
Impartial to rich and poor,
The If of all wished-for morrows
Shall conquer its hosts no more;
But its armies of captives, rather,
From the enemy's land shall come,
And the Father-all-God shall gather
Each child of the kingdom home.

THE BUSY BEE.

Young friends, boys and girls, month after month, year after year, we have lifted imploring hands, warned, entreated, with all long suffering and doctrine. We have cried aloud, "stop! stop! Keep away from the idlers and loafers. Shun them as the plague, the viper. Keep away." Has our voice been heard? Are you diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord? Have you formed habits of virtuous industry, regular, systematic employment? Is every moment occupied in something useful and profitable?—something that will count for salvation in time and in eternity? The following beautiful lines illustrate our meaning more fully.

EMPLOYMENT.

Employment! Employment!
Oh, that is enjoyment!
There's nothing like "something to do";
Good heart-occupation
Is health and salvation;
A secret that's known to but few.

Ye listless and lazy!
Ye heavy and hazy!
Give hearts, hands and feet full employment;
Your spirits 'twill cheer up,
Your foggy brains clear up,
And teach you the real enjoyment.

The lilies, they toil not;
They drudge not and moil not,
And yet they are cared for, 'tis true;
But the lily, in beauty,
Fulfills its whole duty;
E'en lilies have "something to do."

They sew not, they spin not,
'Tis true, but they sin not;
They work, uncomplaining, God's will;
Their work never hasting,
Their time never wasting,
The laws of their nature fulfill.

Your hands white as lilies,
Remember God's will is,
"Whoso doth not work shall not eat."
'Tis heart occupation
Prevents heart-starvation;
Wouldst thou the great Lawgiver cheat?

Then up, man and woman!
Be godlike, be human!
To self and to nature be true!
Employment! Employment!
Oh, that is enjoyment!
There's nothing like "something to do."

LESSON FROM THE ANTS.

Ellen had become discouraged about her Sabbath-School class. "It is of no use," said she to herself, "it is of no earthly use! I go Sabbath after Sabbath to this school, and what is the result? I see no fruit of all my labors."

She left her room and took a walk into the garden. Turning a corner of the path, she suddenly espied her young brother lying in the grass, and seemingly intent on something that interested him greatly.

"What are you doing, Charlie?" said she in a gentle tone to him.

"Hush, dear Ellen," said the child; "do not speak out loud, but come and sit by me, and I will tell you what wonders I have seen. There is an ant's nest under the lime tree, and their track is all across the path as far as the old acacia. Well, somebody has thrown a handful of gravel across their track, and I thought, when I first saw it, that they would be sure to alter the path, and go round it; but no, they mean to remove every grain away; and if you look, you will see fresh ants coming from all quarters to help. And they will do it, too," said the delighted child; "I am sure they will."

Ellen sat down by her brother, and was soon quite as much engrossed as himself. Each ant removed one grain from the heap and returned again and again with untiring energy to the work. They did not pause to look at the congregated mass, but each one addressing himself to his single grain, removed it out of the way with apparent ease. And it was not until the whole obstruction was cleared away that these indefatigable little creatures returned to the usual business of the day.

Ellen sat and gazed, for to her this simple scene was replete with interest. It contained a deep and important lesson, and she almost thought her steps had been guided thither on purpose that she might learn it.

"How foolish I have been," thought she, as, holding her brother by the hand, they returned together to the house. "How falsely have I reasoned! What have I to do with the amount of evil that is permitted in this world of ours? Enough for me if I am allowed to remove but one grain, and to know that my gracious Master will accept this trifling service. And I am not working alone, as my foolish heart almost persuaded me this morning to believe. Am I not one of a band of teachers, who, from all corners of our land, are going forth this Sabbath morning with this one sacred object in view?—some plying their hallowed task in the crowded lanes of the dark city; some, like me, in the happier retreats of rural life,—perhaps none quite so blessed as I am!" And she looked around with loving eye upon the scenes among which her childhood had been nurtured, and which were blending imperceptibly with all thoughts and feelings of her ripening age, forming a storehouse of high thoughts and memories, of holy and happy recollections, to which she might revert in after life, when its active duties, and perhaps sad realities, should come upon her in all their overwhelming power.—Quiet Thoughts.

EXPOSE YOUR FAULTS?

Certainly, little folks, certainly, by all means, your faults should be exposed—and you ought to be very thankful to any one who faithfully does this. The person who exposes your wrong doing is your best friend—and instead of taking offence, you should express your hearty thankfulness, your devout gratitude. Suppose you are left to yourself, your own deceitful heart—that no one exposes your folly and wickedness, your disobedience and recklessness, pulls you out of the fire—what then? Where your reputation, your welfare for time and eternity?

Some little boys and girls, and some big ones too, take offence, are quite huffy and puffy; even wrathy, when their faults are exposed, their sins brought to light! Does not this indicate a proud, haughty, rebellious spirit? a case almost fit for burning?

"Correction is grievous to him that forsaketh the way—and he that hateth reproof shall die."—Solomon. D. F. NEWTON.

INFANT PLEADERS.

God loves to hear children pray. He loves to see children amongst those who come to him.

All little boys and girls should pray, asking God to bless them, and their parents, their friends, and all people.

If they have any sick neighbors, they should pray for them, and also for poor persons who have not food enough or sufficient clothing. When children go to church, they see many people who need God's blessing, and it is well to ask him to be kind to them.

The Turks, even, think that God specially hears the petitions of little ones; and when the plague raged, and thousands of corpses were carried out every week from Stamboul, through the Adrianople gate, to the great groves of cypress which rise over the burial grounds, the Sheikh Ul Islam assembled all the little children on a beautiful green hill, called the Oc Maiden, or the "Place of Arrows;" and the little darlings bowed down to the ground before the Father of mercy, and they lifted their innocent voices to beseech him to have compassion, and spare the afflicted city.

Dear children, pray every day. God is sure to hear you, and he will not think you too young to bless and save; for our blessed Savior said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God."—Early Days.

CONSCIENCE.

I am afraid children sometimes think they are too small to keep a conscience. They do wrong things, and excuse themselves by saying or thinking, "Oh! it's only little I. When I grow up, I mean to do better." They deceive their parents, and say, "Oh! they won't suspect me"; or they say they cannot learn their lessons, when, in fact, they have not faithfully tried; and so they lose their conscience.

Children, hold fast to your conscience. Keep it. God has given it to keep you. You do not want to be lost; and lest you should be, God gave you this little voice to direct you always in the beautiful and blessed path of well doing.—Ex.

GODLINESS GREAT GAIN.

An aged christian was once asked by some thoughtless people, why he deprived himself of so many worldly pleasures. "It is all very well," said they, "to serve God, but you ought to serve yourself too."

"That is the very thing," replied he, "that I am trying after; for I have long since found out that I get ten times more in obeying God than I do in obeying my own evil heart."

FAITH'S VISIONS.

There's a time just along in the future, we're told,
When the children of faith shall be free
From mortality's ills, which in bondage now hold
And them compass like waves of the sea;
And the land whence they go is all wondrous, they say,
In glory and beauty sublime.
There no night ever comes to obscure one glad ray,
For the glory of God is the light of that day,
Through th' unnumbered hours of all time.

O! the rivers majestic bear life in their wave,
And the trees droop in beauty and grace,
With their all-healing burdens, the nations to save,
A joy and delight to the place.
There visions of beauty the eye ever sees,
And melody dwells in the air;
There sweet notes of praise by zephyr and breeze
Are heard as they swing through the tall forest trees,
And bowers of loveliness rare.

And there with its mansions prepared for the blest,
Coming down out of heaven from God,
Is a city of transcendent glory, of rest,
The saints' own regal abode.
From afar will the nations behold its glad rays,
And thither with joy then repair;
For its walls are Salvation, its gates are named Praise,
Its temple the Lamb and the Ancient of Days,
Its high name, "Jehovah is there."

And forms that now languish in sorrow untold,
Or sleep in the cold silent tomb,
Shall tread with glad measure its pathway of gold,
All radiant with life's 'during bloom.
O! the rapturous joy in the shouts that they raise,
As they greet when their warfare is o'er!
O, the crowns and the palms! O, the heavenly lays!
O, the harps that they bear, and the high notes of praise,
To God and the Lamb evermore!

And to welcome them, lo! the heavenly hosts there,
Winging down from the regions of light,
A dazzling throng again filling the air,
As they came on redemption's birth-night.
Ah! the heavens bend lovingly over, I ween,
And wonder at visions so fair;
And new lustre take from the transcendent scene,
With which to adorn their own flowing sheen,
That the glory of God doth declare.

O! the hour is at hand; now the Orient beams
With tokens of fast coming day,
When earth's pestilent vapors, its mists and vain dreams,
And darkness, shall all flee away:
And Thou, whom our souls wait in deep agony,
O! haste thou thy coming again;
Roll away time and space, and bring us to see
Thy glorious face, and join us to thee
In union eternal, Amen.

ABOUNDING IN THE WORK OF THE LORD.

A CHARITY SERMON.

Delivered in St. Luke's Church, Chelsea, by Rev. P. B. Morgan, and reported for the Crisis.

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."—1 COR. 15: 58.

(Concluded.)

And this caring for and ministering to men's souls and bodies, is the work the apostle enjoins upon us in contemplation and anticipation of the resurrection of the dead. You will observe how he connects these two things—practical work, with the hope of the resurrection. After discoursing largely upon the doctrine of the resurrection, he adds: "Therefore"—by which word he means, for this reason; in consideration of the fact that you believe in and look for the resurrection, the time when you will realize a "perfect consummation and bliss both in body and soul" in eternal and everlasting glory,—be steadfast, and abound in the work of the Lord.

But there remains one more question for me to notice in this place, namely: How can we carry on this work of the Lord? And the answer to this question is manifold. There are certain prescribed duties which have come to be acknowledged by the religious community as necessary to a favorable and healthy growth in grace; such as secret prayer, attendance upon public worship, the ministration of the word, and the Holy Sacraments. But beside all this there may be a thousand things practically helpful to the work and cause of Christ, which know no law but the law of the Spirit. There is such a thing as being "led by the Spirit" (providing we have the Spirit). And to bring these things under the arbitrary regulations of written law, is as impossible and as inconsistent as it would be for a philosopher to prescribe the manner in which showers should fall in April, or the manner in which trees should grow or men should breathe. And upon this, I beg you, do not misunderstand me. I reverence the written law of God; and in nothing would I be disloyal to the church which combines in its rubrical and Canon law the wisdom of ages, defining and guaranteeing to us severally our rights and privileges. I am no advocate of lawless individualism.

But what we say is this: There are, beside what is prescribed by written law, a thousand things known only to the law of the Spirit. Every thing is perhaps the better for conformity to defined law where such a thing is possible. And so perhaps every phase of religious life would appear more pleasing to the eye, perhaps would be better on every account, if brought under a rigid discipline; but because a fruit tree in a garden grows in a very awkward shape, and has on it several excrescences, it does not follow that the tree is without law, or that the fruit is not good. It is subject to the law of growth, and although the fungus growth is certainly a deformity, yet it is caused chiefly by the luxuriance of its growth. So that, save to a fastidious mind, there is no essential wrong in the tree. So it is in the religious life: subject to all the laws of God, growing as God causes us to grow; yet no written law does or can arbitrarily prescribe every exhibition of religious life, or every form of charity. There was no law directing the woman to break the alabaster box of ointment, very precious and very costly; yet Christ approved of it. When St. Paul and the brethren at Ephesus knelt down and prayed, the brethren weeping sore and falling upon Paul's neck and kissing him, no one will pretend there was any written law prescribing any such phase of religious life as was witnessed there, and yet no one will affirm any thing wrong in it.

The narrow, selfish soul, that seeks only to know in exact measurement how much he must do in order to be saved, cares nothing for this law of the Spirit, and probably little more for the law of faith. But to the soul that seeks to abound in the work of the Lord, it is a question of the greatest moment to know by what law we should be guided, and by what limits we should bound our religious efforts. And what we have said indicates the only law we know touching this matter.

And so, considering the diversity of character found in the church, and the contingencies of life, it ought to be: with so much prescribed by law as is necessary to with one heart and one voice glorify God,—maintaining the one catholic faith,—and yet with an endless variety of phases and expression. This is God's way: Divinity in unity; one God, a common brotherhood, all bound by the fixed laws of our being, and yet perhaps no two persons to be found in all the world exactly alike; and so also we have one church,—the mystical body of Christ,—but taking in men with all the idiosyncrasies of their individual character.

And such is what we claim for this branch of the church catholic. Whoever regards this church simply as a people bound in the stately but frigid laws of a ritualism, does not know the Protestant Episcopal Church. True we are too frigid. There are too few that can say with David, "The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up." But at the same time we sincerely believe that the forms of devotion prescribed in our Liturgy are the best for a congregation simply desiring to worship God that have ever been devised; and a purer form of evangelical faith we do not believe exists. But at the same time we believe, whatever may be said to the contrary, that this church is organically as broad and comprehensive as are the wants of man. And this I do not say to make a plea for the church; but to show you, my brethren, that instead of our being bound upon a procrustean bedstead, we have the largest and freest scope possible for the exercise of our religious and charitable sympathies; that this is sanctioned and approved by the church. And without referring to the great missionary or charitable enterprises with which you are familiar, let me, in illustration of what I have here said, to show you the comprehensive character of this church, refer you to the following facts:

If a man has some peculiar fancies about "altar cloths," and his mind so leads him, he is gratified. If a company of men wish for a prayer and conference meeting, they have it. The Bishop of the Church of England at Jerusalem, and our own Bishop of Massachusetts, have each of them a weekly prayer meeting over which they personally preside. Of course what is true of these Bishops is true of many Presbyters. The Bishop of London has been down many times for years past and preached to the masses from the steps of the Exchange. Not a few of the clergy of the Church of England have habitually gone into the streets and parks of London, and stood up with laymen preaching alternately, first the clergyman and then the layman. See also how much is being done amongst the workingmen of Pennsylvania. And how much is constantly being said in our journals about Lay co-operation.

But perhaps in nothing have we a more striking illustration of this matter than is found in the efforts of the Church to bring into public recognition and exercise the ministry of godly women,—those who of all earthly beings are oftentimes the most potent for good or for evil. Much has been said of the order of deaconesses; and in many places I believe they have been successfully employed for a number of years past. And why not? Are there not many things which they can do for the church better than any body else? And who that will consider the exalted position appointed to christian women in the New Testament; or who that has read the lives of Madame Guion, Bourignon, the wife of the Rev. John De La Fletcher, Hannah More, or Lady Huntington; or who that knows the sweet, hallowed power of a christian mother, sister, or wife, will for a moment doubt the ability of woman to do much in the service of Christ and his church? And further, let me give you the following, which I find in one of our Church papers of the week past, "The Christian Times":

A REVIVED FEMALE MINISTRY.

The Missing Link Magazine received the following from a clerical friend in Ireland:

The revived ministry of women seems to be one of the clearest and most remarkable signs of the present time, indicating, among many others, the near approach of the latter-day kingdom and glory.

We say revived, because in Apostolic and primitive times it is certain that women were earnestly and actively employed in the ministry of the church. We read of "Phœbe, a deaconess of the church at Cenchræa," and of Priscilla, who assisted Aquila in the instruction of Apollos, a man "mighty in the Scriptures"; and Paul salutes "those women who labored with him in the gospel."

The revival of this ministry in our own day restores "the missing link" in all the various and multiplying departments of female usefulness in the service of the Lord; and this restoration appears to be clearly foretold in the prophetic Scriptures, in connection with the extraordinary evangelistic labors of the latter times.

The first passage to which our attention has been directed on this subject, occurs in the prophet Isaiah 40: 9, where he foretells the restoration and glory of Jerusalem: "O Zion, that bringest good tidings," more literally translated by Bishop Lowth and others, "O thou that bringest good tidings to Zion." This is evidently a prophecy of the second coming of Christ, and the announcement is that "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young." But what is remarkable in this prophecy with respect to "the missing link" is, that the literal translation of the Hebrew is, "O thou female publisher of good tidings," the word "mebassereth," a publisher or announcer of tidings, being feminine. Neither can it be said that the word being feminine by nature is necessarily used even to express a male subject, since we find the correspondent masculine "mebassair" in other places; e. g., Isaiah 52: 7, "How beautiful are the feet of him that bringeth (mebassair) good tidings, and publisheth peace." Bishop Lowth remarks upon the former passage, "I have added the word daughter to express the feminine gender of the Hebrew particle, which I know not how to do otherwise in our language; and this is absolutely necessary in order to ascertain the image. For the office of announcing and celebrating such glad tidings as are here spoken of, belonged peculiarly to the women.

But the matter becomes still clearer when we refer to the 68th Psalm, where the feminine noun "mebassereth" is found in the plural "mebasseroth," and the passage is thus translated by Bishop Lowth: "Jehovah gave the word (that is, joyful news): the women who published (ha-mebasseroth) the glad tidings were a great company." And surely in these latter days the Lord hath given the word, and sent it forth with power in the conversion of souls to Christ in a way exceeding any thing we have ever seen or heard of since the day of Pentecost, both as to the world-wide announcement and the number of the saved.

In this blessed and glorious work the "Missing Links," the mebasseroth, have had their ample share as Bible women, Sunday School teachers, district visitors, hospital nurses, missionary collectors, conductors of mothers' meetings, writers of gospel tracts, essays, articles in religious serials, and books abounding in gospel truth. They are now indeed "laboring in the gospel," and their labors have been abundantly owned and blessed of the Lord; and we have reason to believe that every succeeding year will open up fresh channels of usefulness before them until the Lord come and find them actively employed in his service, waiting and watching for his appearing, and ready to "enter into the joy of their Lord."

In the same paper we have an account of an accomplished lady, a Mrs. Thislethwaite, standing up before a congregation which she had gathered in a Scientific Institution in London, to expound to them the Scriptures, of which the Daily News remarks:

"Thus, too, she dwelt at length upon the fitness of woman as an instrument of salvation and a messenger of mercy. The fact of the disciples leaving the sepulchre, while a woman remained behind to weep—that a woman should have first seen Jesus after the resurrection—and that a woman was the chosen recipient of the first assuring message sent to the apostle, were all brought forward, as we understood, to prove woman's special fitness for the work of conversion. These points were urged with a rapid fluency, a constant transition of voice, and an energetic elocution of which it is difficult to convey an adequate idea, without, at the same time, seeming guilty of exaggeration. . . . The elegant black silk dress, with its plain white collar and cuffs, formed no unseemly contrast to the gown and bands one is accustomed to behold on the orthodox figures of clergymen of the Established Church; and granting it be expedient for a lady of Mrs. Thislethwaite's position to preach at all, there was nothing in her demeanor or arguments to provoke hostile criticism."

And who that has read the interesting narrative of the work of the "Bible Readers," published in the last two numbers of the Church Monthly, will question the practicability of employing devoted, godly women, as a powerful agency in helping on the work of the Lord? This plan was adopted in New York about four years since, after the example of the "Bible women" in England, whose business it is to "go from house to house, carrying with them the Bible, reading it when they can gain permission to the inmates, and by interesting themselves in the personal, temporal wants of the poor, show that they were putting into practice the precepts of the Book." Of a woman engaged in this the narrative says she is "a most indefatigable Bible reader"; much success has attended her labors. "She visits the people at their houses, makes herself their friend, reads to them, talks with them, knows them by name," and "exercises great watchfulness over them." "There is no cellar too deep and dark, no garret too high for them to enter; no degradation too great for her to deem hopeless. Although she has been engaged less than a year, scores have learned to bless her name." And as you read the reports, did you not feel a fascination unequalled by romance? Were not the visits of many of these women like angels' visits? so heavenly their messages, and so delightful the results! Twenty-six of these christian women are now laboring in New York. God grant their number may be multiplied!

These things are not mentioned as perfectly faultless exhibitions of what we desire in this congregation, but withal as indications of what Divine Providence is opening up before us,—of the wide-spread field to which the laborers of Christ are now welcomed. Doubtless all this is preparatory to the approaching harvest. And now will we, my friends, be provoked to good works? I have shown you how you can work; how vast and wide the field is that is spread before you. I have shown you that it is the pleasure of Christ that you do work; that you abound in that work; and that downright, earnest, persistent work, for every one of you, is, instead of an indication of an unsound mind, a constitutional and normal state for every living member of the church of Christ. O that the Holy Spirit may be breathed upon us! that every man, woman and child may hasten to ask, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? For soon the night cometh when no man can work. And oh! to have the day of judgment come, and the Master say to us, "Depart from me," because in the person of my humblest poor, "I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked, and ye clothed me not; sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not." How sad! how sad! But do you ask, How can I do this; I who have my own family to provide for; who am confined to my business; who know no suffering ones, or where to go to find them? We answer, "The poor ye have always with you." Go, and you can find them. But if it be so that duty forbids your going in person, then we ask you to join and help us with your counsel, your prayers, and your means, that we may in Christ's name, and for Christ's sake, send out our helpers, our Bible readers, our true sisters of charity and humanity. Let us work and pray and give as the Lord has prospered us, and so be found at the last "abounding in the work of the Lord."

THY WAY, NOT MINE.

Thy way, not mine, O Lord, however dark it be;
Lead me by thine own hand, choose out the path for me;
Smooth let it be or rough, it will still be the best,
Winding or straight, it matters not, it leads me to thy rest.
I dare not choose my lot, I would not if I might;
Choose thou for me, my God, so shall I walk aright;
The kingdom that I seek is thine, so let the way
That leads to it be thine, else I must surely stray;
Take thou my cup, and it with joy or sorrow fill,
As best to thee may seem, choose thou my good or ill.
Choose thou for me my friends, my sickness or my health;
Choose thou my cares for me, my poverty or wealth;
Not mine, not mine the choice in things so great or small;
Be thou my guide, my strength, my wisdom, and my all.

For the World's Crisis.

ASTRONOMY CONTINUED.

In our last, we proved, by one whom Prof. Hudson recommends as "an accomplished astronomer," that those eclipses which have been offered in support of Ptolemy's Canon can not be made according to the record; and if not, they are against rather than in support of the correctness of the canon. According to Ptolemy, the moon "was eclipsed three digits" on the 8th of March, B. C. 720. In proof of the strict correctness of this, Prof. Hudson says that it was "actually observed, recorded, and dated, hence no mere result of Ptolemy's calculation." If it is true that the people of Babylon really saw the moon eclipsed "three digits," on the 8th of March, B. C. 720, then it is certain that there was no eclipse at all on the 25th of April, B. C. 491; neither at Babylon, or at any other place on earth; and if there was no eclipse of the moon at Babylon B. C. 491, no man can prove by astronomy that the word of God is incorrect.

As this is an important point, we will call in other witnesses, that in the mouth of "two or three . . . every word may be established." According to Pingre's tables, the eclipse of March 8th, B. C. 720, was only three-fourths of a digit. To make this answer to what claims to have been observed at Babylon, we must reduce the distance from the node enough to make the size of this eclipse 2¼ digits larger; but this will throw the moon too far from the node, by more than one fourth of her whole diameter, to make the size of the eclipse which, according to Ptolemy, occurred in the 31st of Darius; hence no man can prove by astronomy that the word of God, as to the interval between the first of Cyrus and the birth of Christ, is incorrect.

We will now call in Struyk, as another witness. According to his tables, the size of the eclipse on the 8th of March, B. C. 720, was one digit and five minutes; hence we must reduce the distance from the node enough to make one digit and fifty-five minutes more, to make it answer to what Prof. Hudson says was at that time seen at Babylon. But this throws it too far from the node for any eclipse at all on the 25th of April, B. C. 491. Thus we have proven, by three witnesses, the correctness of the statement which we made on page 34 of the "Book of Daniel Opened." It should be borne in mind that, until astronomical tables can be found that will make those eclipses, they cannot prove the correctness of Ptolemy's Canon. If Prof. Hudson is not yet satisfied, let him produce the tables that will make them according to the record, and I pledge myself to yield the point as soon as he does so. But as eclipses of the moon occur so often, they are not so reliable in establishing a correct chronology as those of the sun.

I wish now, in an especial manner, to call the attention of the reader to that which learned men seemed to have forgotten, which is this: Of all the eclipses of the sun recorded in history, there is not one to be found in harmony with Ptolemy's Canon before the beginning of the Peloponnesian war; hence Struyk, in his catalogue of eclipses recorded in history, has not one of the sun before the year B. C. 431. Many learned astronomers, following Ptolemy's Canon, have tried, but tried in vain, to find those eclipses. For example: I. K. Lombard, quoting from the Penny Encyclopedia, mentioned in the Crisis, not long since, that the eclipse of Thales is not to be found between B. C. 650 and 580, which proves the incorrectness of Ptolemy's Canon. Prof. Hudson, when noticing this, thought it was against us, and proved that the eclipse of Thales could not be found; but if the reader will turn to page 234 of the "Book of Daniel Opened," he will discover that the eclipse we have given as the one of Thales occurred B. C. 549; that is, 31 years later than the time in which we are told that it could not have occurred. In an article written on the Parian Chronicle, we have clearly proven that the eclipse of June 19th, B. C. 549, is the only one that can be found in harmony with Herodotus, Demetrius, and the Chronicle, which proves the correctness of our Bible Chronology.

In harmony with Ptolemy's Canon, men have tried, but tried in vain, to find the eclipse which occurred when Xerxes invaded Greece; but rather than admit the incorrectness of Ptolemy's Canon, it has been said that Herodotus did not say that this was an eclipse. It is true that he did not use the word "eclipse," but he used language far more expressive. The meaning of the word eclipse is simply to obscure; hence, if he had only used the word eclipse, this might be evaded by saying that the sun might have been obscured by a cloud. For example, Nicodemus, in allusion to the darkness at the time of the crucifixion, says: "While the sun was eclipsed, behold the veil of the temple was rent." Now all know that this was not caused by the moon's passing over the sun's disk, for the moon was at that time on the opposite side of the earth. If Herodotus had only said that the sun was eclipsed, we could not tell whether the eclipse was caused by the moon or a cloud; but when he uses language like this:—"The sun, quitting his seat in the heavens, disappeared, though there were no clouds, and the air was perfectly serene, and night ensued in the place of day"; we discover that it is impossible to evade his language, for we are compelled to acknowledge that nothing short of a total eclipse of the sun can answer to his description. Dr. Strukely, in allusion to a total eclipse of the sun which he saw, says: "We lost sight of the sun, whose trace we could now no more discover than if it had never existed." Compare this with the description of Herodotus,—"The sun, quitting his seat in the heavens, disappeared, though there were no clouds." Then ask yourself, What language could a heathen people employ to convey a better idea of a total eclipse?

Those who can receive the word of Herodotus as authority, must admit that, at the time Xerxes invaded Greece, there was a total eclipse of the sun; and having examined the fourth year of each Olympiad, from B. C. 754 down to 431, we discover that the eclipse of Dec. 16th, B. C. 457, is the only one that can be found; which, to my mind at least, clearly proves two things: first, that the chronology which places the time that Xerxes invaded Greece either earlier or later than B. C. 456 is incorrect; second, that those astronomical tables that do not make that eclipse total are incorrect; for all astronomers, who are willing to examine the subject, must admit that the total eclipse alluded to by Herodotus was either there, or nowhere.

The next eclipse mentioned by Herodotus occurred in the second year of the war with Greece. Learned men, in harmony with Ptolemy's Canon, have searched in vain for this also; and being unable to find it, they refer us to one which occurred in the fall of the first year of the Olympic games; but since the one recorded by Herodotus occurred in the spring of the second year of those games, the one they refer to amounts to nothing. See "Book of Daniel Opened," page 45. Now, if Prof. Hudson, by searching the world over, can find astronomical tables that can make these three eclipses in harmony with Ptolemy's Canon, as we have found them in harmony with the "Bible Chronology," I will yield the point. And since he admits that "facts are not our enemies if they may help us to the truth," we are anxious to see all the facts on this point.

In conclusion, let the reader call to mind that the point here is not as to whether Thurman can be relied on as a practical astronomer; but we invite Prof. Hudson to find one, among all of the learned astronomers of earth, who claims to find by astronomical tables a single eclipse of the sun, among all that are recorded in histories, in harmony with Ptolemy's Canon, before B. C. 431; and if this can not be done, we ask in the name of all that is reasonable, how can man prove anything clearer than we have the incorrectness of Ptolemy's Canon? Read again what we have said on the subject in the "Book of Daniel Opened."

Now, dear reader, when we part, you will soon forget the most that we have said; but may I not insist on it that you remember this: Ptolemy's Canon claims for its support astronomical authority. This is the great foundation on which it is said to rest; and yet, he that prefers the Canon to the word of God is compelled to reject at least all of the eclipses of the sun found on record before the year B. C. 431. It is a mystery how any one can reject such overwhelming evidence.

WM. C. THURMAN.

THE FEAR OF MAN.

Next to covetousness, we think the fear of man is the secret of a vast amount of the inefficiency we see in the church. "The fear of man bringeth a snare," is so amply illustrated in the history of individuals and the church, as to have become an almost universal guide to the cause of declension and backsliding. The apprehension of evil from man, his opinion, influence, and example against us, though really very small in themselves, become overwhelming by the magnifying power of fear. Mole hills swell to mountains; pigmies tower to giants, and we shrink to grasshoppers in the presence of danger; we quake and tremble much like the ancient orator flying from the enemy, who cried to a bramble whose thorn had caught his robe, Spare me!

This fear of man accounts for much of the half-way dealing we see so frequent in the church. Many a minister blinks the truth of the Bible to some extent, lest some one being offended should lay an embargo on his support, and poverty grin at his window.

The good opinion of some men in the church has pilloried many a good-hearted minister, who is afraid to face that opinion with the stern, unbending truth of God faithfully preached; and thus the poor man, chameleon-like, with one eye on heaven and the other on earth, blunders on unsuccessful and humbled; generally the very thing he dreads comes upon him; if he has smoothed the rough edges and knocked the corners from the truth for the sake of any earthly gain, he is almost sure to lose the thing he seeks.

But as this fear of man is, there is a most glorious remedy for it. "Perfect love casteth out fear"; and we know perfect boldness is one of the chief characteristics of the cured soul. Weak men turn to giants. Ignorant men are wise, and despised ones come forth clothed with authority. O that the whole church were soundly cured of this dreadful disorder. Let us ask for this perfect love; then shall the old days of christianity be more than lived over again; days of power, when the thunder of prayer shook heaven, and the onset of testimony stormed hell, and Christ was gloriously exalted; "For when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus."—Selected.

For the World's Crisis.

"WHAT I HAVE WRITTEN, I HAVE WRITTEN."—John 19: 22.

We pass now to follow Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews, until we shall hail him King of kings and Lord of lords, or Lord of all. We saw him on the cross, crucified, dead, taken down and buried, but risen again, and we have testified of him in all these things openly; let us still "stand up for Jesus," and he will lead us into all truth. "The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our Fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus, whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go . . . and killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead" (Acts 3: 13); "Who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with (like) God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon himself the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men, and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in earth and things under the earth: and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. 2: 6); "for unto the angels hath he not put in subjection THE WORLD TO COME whereof we speak" (Heb. 2: 5); "but unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity: therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows" (1: 8, 9). Whom also He hath appointed heir of all things, . . . being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they . . . and again he saith, let all the angels of God worship him (1: 2, 4, 6). "Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet, for in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him" (2: 8).

"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28: 18). "But now, WE SEE NOT YET all things put under him" (Heb. 2: 8; Luke 19: 10–15) "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which is lost, and as they (the Jews) heard these things, He added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem and because they thought THE KINGDOM OF GOD should immediately appear. He said therefore, A certain nobleman (Jesus) went into a far country (heaven) to receive for himself a kingdom (the sovereignty) and to RETURN. And he called his ten servants, and delivered to them ten pounds (ten commandments) and said unto them, OCCUPY TILL I COME. But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to REIGN over us. And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received THE KINGDOM," etc. And the "THIEF ON THE CROSS" said, "LORD, remember me when thou COMEST INTO THY KINGDOM." And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Luke 23: 42, 43.

To every impartial mind it must be apparent, that the answer of our Lord, as punctuated above, does not correspond with either the malefactor's petition, the Savior's parable of the kingdom, or any of the previously quoted Scriptures. But punctuation points, and the place they stand in, are not of inspiration, being a human device of about the eighth to the tenth century, and every reader of "church history" KNOWS, perfectly well, that from A. D. 500 to A. D. 1000 was the age of "pious fraud and forgeries." Prior to this invention the original Greek manuscripts were written without any distinction of members, periods, or words; consequently when these "points" were introduced, they would naturally be so placed in the sentence, as to give to it such meaning as should correspond with the faith, views, or sentiments of the punctuator, so far as it was practicable.

From Leo I. A. D. 500 to Leo X. A. D. 1500 was the age of corruption as well as superstition, and it was this last-named polished and learned, but corrupt and impious prelate, who is claimed to have jocosely remarked, "What a source of gain has this FABLE of the Virgin and her Son been to us." Truly, they had turned the truth into a fable. Their religion, faith, practice and doctrine, was that of the "Roman apostasy," of "false teachers," who privately brought in "damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, . . . through covetousness, with feigned words making merchandise of men."

Let us have a sample of them, from D'Aubigne's History of the Reform. vol. 1, pp. 66, 67. "A bishop of Dunfeld congratulated himself on having never learnt either Greek or Hebrew. The monks asserted that all heresies arose from these two languages, and particularly from the Greek. 'The New Testament,' said one of them, 'is a book full of serpents and thorns. Greek,' continued he, 'is a new and recently invented language, and we must be upon our guard against it. As for Hebrew, my dear brethren, it is certain that all who learn it, immediately become Jews.' . . . Thomas Linacer, a learned and celebrated ecclesiastic, had never read the New Testament. In his latter days (in 1524), he called for a copy, but quickly threw it away from him with an oath, because on opening it his eyes had glanced upon these words: 'But I say unto you, Swear not at all.' Now he was a great swearer. 'Either this is not the gospel,' said he, 'or else we are not christians.'"

A very rational conclusion we must admit. Now is it any marvel, that these men who had taken the Greek Fables and converted the "regions of Pluto" into Purgatory, the "Elysian Fields," into Paradise," the river Styx, into the "great gulf," and old Charon,—who was there with his boat to ferry the ghosts of the dead over the river,—into a Priest, is it any marvel, I say, that these men who were entirely ignorant of "God's plan of salvation" to a lost and ruined world, should so punctuate Luke 23: 43 as to make it sustain their system of merchandise in getting souls out of Purgatory?

SELF-EXAMINATION.

I am alone with Jesus, and I feel that his blood cleanses me from all unrighteousness. Bless his name forever! While meditating this evening before God in his word, oh, how the poor formalists loom up in my mind! Lord, pity them. I have been asking the question why is it that people live thus, and these words came to me, "If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out and cast it from thee, for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." Matt. 5: 29. Let us examine our hearts. Why do I chew tobacco? I love to. "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit," etc. 2 Cor. 7: 1. Do any chew it that loathe it? Why not? Have none such a watery stomach? Why do I attend the Masonic lodge? I love to. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you." 2 Cor. 6: 17. Will God receive us if we do not obey him? Why do I read political papers on the holy Sabbath day! I love to. "Study to show thyself approved of God." 2 Tim. 2: 15. Why do I rejoice in the things of the world more than in Jesus? "Should we not rather rejoice that our names are written in heaven?" Luke 10: 20. Why do I purchase and wear costly clothing, when cheaper would do me as well? 1 Pet. 2: 9. Why do I wear these artificials and these rings? I love to. "Let it not be that outward adorning, of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of apparel." 1 Pet. 3: 3. Why do I spend hours in talking about the things of earth, and so little about Jesus and heaven? "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness." 2. Pet. 3: 11. Are there any right eyes here? "Love not the world neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John, 2: 15. (The 16th and 17th verses tell why this is so). Now shall we lop off some of these branches? No! The (gospel) axe is laid at the root of the tree. "Therefore, let us present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable," etc. Rom. 12: 1. Then as we see a right eye that offends, or stands between our souls and God, "pluck it out," give it up, die to it. "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." 1 John 5: 21. If we will not do this, are we prepared to be judged by the word (Bible). "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." John 12: 48. Oh, let us lay up treasure in heaven; and we may know when we are thus doing, for "where our treasure is, there will our heart (mind) be also." —Earnest Christian.

TREMBLING.

"When Ephraim spake trembling, he exalted himself in Israel."—HOSEA 13: 1.

It is not abject terror that causes the trembling here spoken of; it is rather that humility which leads us to feel deeply our own unworthiness and weakness; that distrust of self which leads us to "work out our own salvation with fear and trembling."

One who has had large experience in the higher walks of christian life, writes, that none walk so tremblingly before the LORD as those who have received the baptism of fire. "None feel so sensibly their utter unworthiness and weakness, none so deeply realize the constant need of the atoning blood." Even Ahab, when he humbled himself, and walked tremblingly, found that there was mercy for the vilest. Said one to a minister of much experience, "I have not had a doubt or a fear these many years." The reply was, "Then allow me to fear for you."

This spirit of trembling is the safe middle ground between the extremes of despair and presumption. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

☞ Genuine neighborly love knows no distinction of persons. It is like the sun, which does not ask on what it shall shine, or what it shall warm; but shines and warms by the very laws of its own being. So there is nothing hidden from its light and heat.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN ELD. FAITHFUL AND BRO. HOPEFUL.

Hopeful. I have called to see you in order to have a conversation on the subject that is most essential to my welfare, and I hope you will excuse me; I do not wish to intrude.

Elder F. I am truly glad to see you, my brother. I am entirely at your service for an hour, if you wish, and I assure you it is no intrusion. How is it with you at present?

H. I have a moderate degree of enjoyment; I feel that my sins are forgiven; yet I do not have that full assurance of which many speak. I have some of the comforts of hope, but I have not yet attained that entire freedom, that perfect liberty, which I think it the privilege of the believer to enjoy.

Elder F. What are your habits? do you have family worship constantly?

H. I do. When I first began housekeeping I was in a backslidden state,—did not have any evidence of acceptance; yet as soon as my companion and myself were seated at the table for the first time in our new home, I proposed to give thanks and ask a blessing. This seemed quite right to her, as that had been the custom in the family where she had been living. I began thus, and have kept up the practice; and we have family worship every morning and evening. Yet sometimes I have felt that there was not much life and power in our worship. I do not mean to be a mere formalist; yet it comes pretty near that at times.

Eld. F. Do you feel the nearness of God in your devotions?

H. Not always. It seems like sending a message a great distance. The distance seems almost infinite, yet I feel as though my prayers do reach His ear, and at times I trust I have answers of peace. But oh, I do desire to feel Him near!

Eld. F. Does it seem to you as if God was very distant now?

H. My heart burns within me, and I feel the workings of the Holy Spirit. O that I could always have such a sense of the divine presence!

Eld. F. You find usually, when you earnestly desire to feel that presence, that your desires are granted. You must strive to avoid a mere formal worship. Fervent prayers are almost always effectual. Permit me to ask if you attend to the duties of the closet—secret prayer?

H. Not very constantly. When I am alone through the day, and feel the spirit of prayer, I often kneel in secret to present my petitions; but when in company, I seldom seek out a place for secret prayer.

Eld. F. Do you think this accounts for your coming short of full assurance?

H. I have often felt that I ought to be more regular in my devotions. I have no doubt that I should find the healing that my spirit needs, if I sought it constantly and earnestly in the closet.

Eld. F. Will you resolve now to make conscience of this duty, and endeavor to enter your closet often and "pray to your Father who seeth in secret"? If you do this, I have no doubt He will reward you openly.

Sutton, Mass. F. H. Chamberlain.

GAY AND COSTLY APPAREL.

The following observations and conclusions upon the subject of personal attire and behavior were made by Mary Fletcher, in the nineteenth year of her age, and are the more valuable from the circumstance of her having been "brought up amid the gaieties of fashionable life, and surrounded by the seductions of wealth and pleasure." They may be taken as evidences of her sincere conversion through attention to the secret operations of the Holy Spirit upon her mind. She was the wife of John Fletcher, vicar of Medley, Shropshire, England.

She says, "I prayed for direction, and saw clearly that plainness of dress and behavior best became a christian; and that for the following reasons, among others:

"The apostle expressly forbids women professing godliness to let their adorning be in apparel; allowing them no other ornament than that of a meek and quiet spirit.

When I appeared like the world, in Babylonish garments, I had its esteem and knew not how to part with it. But when I showed by my appearance that I considered myself as a stranger and foreigner, none can know, but by trying, what an influence it has on our whole conduct, and what a fence it is to keep us from sinking into the spirit of the world. For there is no medium: they who are conformed to the fashions, customs and maxims of the world, must embrace the spirit also, and they shall find the esteem they seek; for the world will love its own. But let them also remember that 'The friendship of the world is emnity with God.'

"I saw myself as a steward, who must render an account for every talent. I saw clearly that the helping of my fellow-creatures in their need was both more rational and more pleasant than spending my substance on superfluities; and, as I am commanded to love my neighbor as myself, and to consider all done to the household of faith as done to Christ, surely I ought not only to suffer my superfluity to give way to their necessity, but also (as occasion may require) my necessities to their extremities.

"The end usually proposed by young persons in their dress is such as a devout soul would abominate. A heathen may say, 'It will promote my being comfortably settled in life;' but I believe the Lord appoints the bounds of our habitation, and that 'no good thing will he withhold from those who walk uprightly.' I have therefore nothing to do but to commend myself to God, in holy obedience, and to leave every step of my life to be guided by his will. I will therefore make it my rule to be clean and neat, but in the plainest things, according to my station; and whenever I think on the subject, these words will pass through my mind with power: 'For so the holy women of old adorned themselves.'"

PROCRASTINATION.

"Procrastination is the thief of time," yet how few act as though they believed it. Many think they will be more consecrated to the Lord at some future time. And many there are who think at some future time they will repent and give their hearts to the Lord and get ready for the judgment. Dear reader, let me warn you against delay. Let not the present moments pass unemployed. They may be your last. You have no assurance of tomorrow. "Behold, now is the accepted time."

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Tuesday, July 11, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

THE 2300 DAYS.

Dr. Hales says, "There is no number in the Bible whose genuineness is better ascertained than that of the 2300 days. It is found in all the printed Hebrew editions, in all the MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi's Collections, and in all the ancient versions, except the Vatican copy of the Septuagint, which reads 2400, followed by Symmachus; and some copies noticed by Jerome, 2200; both evidently literal errors in excess and defect, which compensate each other, and confirm the mean 2300." New Anal. Chro. Vol. 2, p. 557.

When speaking of the 2400 days found in the Septuagint, Mr. Cunningham says: "Although all our common editions of the Septuagint have this typographical error, being printed from an edition into which it had crept, yet the manuscript in the Vatican, from which that very edition was printed, has 2300, and not 2400. And of all the principal standard editions of the Septuagint, that alone from which ours are taken has this error."

Dr. Hales says: "This simple and ingenious adjustment of the chronology of the 70 weeks, considered as forming a branch of the 2300 days, was originally due to the sagacity of Hans Wood, Esq., of Rossmead, in the county of Westmeath, Ireland, and published by him in an anonymous commentary on the Revelation of St. John, London. 1787. Payne. 8vo. Whence I republished it in the Inspector, 8vo. 1799. And afterwards, in the Orthodox Churchman's Magazine, 1803; and now more correctly, 1809." Dr. Hales' New Analogy of Chronology, vol. ii. p. 564.

It is thought that "Mr. Wood ended the seventy weeks at the destruction of Jerusalem." It is very evident, we think, that they do not end as the crucifixion, nor within seven years of that point, as has been believed by many. We think the true light is now shining on the prophetical weeks of Daniel, and that soon all the prophetical periods will be well understood by the church of Christ, if they are not already. We may expect new manifestations and developments that will show clearly where we are in the history of this world. All things indicate that within a very brief period we shall see Jesus coming in all his glory.

THE COST OF WAR.

Perhaps there is no way by which ruin can be brought upon a nation so successfully as by war. It not only ruins financially, but more especially in a moral sense. The whole system of war is anti-christian, and leads only to ruin. It seems strange that any one, who is at all acquainted with the teachings of our Savior and the apostles, should attempt to prove that it is right for christians to fight.

But a word about the cost of war. One may well be astonished at the amount of money spent in the last four years' war. Had our nation, and the individuals, who have made such liberal donations, been called on to give one-tenth part as much to save people from eternal death, and lead them in the way to everlasting life, we think they would have let them gone to perdition before they would have made such sacrifices. It is estimated that "half a million lives and four thousand millions' worth of property have been destroyed by our civil war."

BREAD MAKING.

As many who read our paper, cannot obtain the cast iron baking pans of which we spoke a few weeks since, we give this week in the health department, on the fourth page, instruction so simple that all, who have the Graham meal, can make good bread without yeast. We have scarcely tasted of any but unleavened bread for the past six years. One can do much more work, either physical or mental, on such bread, than that made of fine flour. Try it.

NAPOLEON AHEAD.

But few are aware of the great advantage that Napoleon is getting over the nations of the earth. It may well be said, "Who is able to make war with him?" In all his movements he is sure to come out ahead, and stand in advance of all his neighbors, friends or foes. He matures his plans with great skill, and executes them with remarkable firmness. When he has once taken possession of a country he is sure to keep it. He is evidently a special favorite of the demons, and Satan's prime minister among men. He occupies the same relation to Satan that the Pope of Rome claims to hold to Christ,—his vicegerent on earth,—the one through whom he rules the nations. Napoleon is the man of wonder upon our planet, and is still rising in power and influence. A late invention makes him more fully master of the seas than ever before. It is described as follows:—

"The Messager du Midi publishes a letter from Toulon, dated the 10th instant, which states that on that morning a decisive experiment was made with an electrical instrument of destruction invented by the Vice-Admiral Prefet Maritime of that port. The result exceeded the hopes of the inventor, and the writer says that henceforth, thanks to the new machine, all defences, such as ramparts, batteries and other old-fashioned expedients employed for the protection and security of the ports of France, can be dispensed with. The writer adds, that if ever an enemy's squadron dare present itself before a French port it could easily be pulverized before it could have time to fire a shot. All present at the experiment were convinced of the fact when they saw an old ship-of-war, thirty feet wide, lifted out of the water, split and sunk in less than a minute at a signal from the inventor. The destructive effects of the machine were so startling that it became evident no iron-plated ship-of-war could resist such a shock. What is very remarkable in this new instrument of destruction is that it is not necessary to wait until the enemy's ship strikes the machine, as in the case of the torpedoes invented by the Russians and the Americans. The French system is said to be more certain and more expeditious. The electric spark reaches the enemy's ship, and destroys it with the rapidity of lightning. There were twenty thousand persons present at Toulon the same day to witness the launch of the Taureau. The enormous mass glided smoothly into the water amid the applause of the assembled multitude."

NAPOLEON AND MEXICO.

It appears evident that Napoleon must soon do something decisive in relation to Maximilian and Mexico, or else his power there will be cut off. He has claimed that he had no desire to press himself upon the Mexicans, beyond their wishes; but the world should have learned by this time, that there is wide difference between saying and doing; especially in relation to Napoleon III. The following is from the Montreal Telegraph, July 4th, 1861:—

"More French troops are coming to Mexico. The official organ of Napoleon, the Moniteur, has been compelled to acknowledge the fact. It undertakes to explain, however, by saying that the terms of most of the soldiers now in service will expire next December, and those who follow are designed to take their places. This is a diplomatic bait, intended to catch American gudgeons, and to dodge the necessity for an explanation which is almost certain to be demanded."

CATHOLICISM.

Facts show that the Catholics are laying plans to control the political power of the United States. The organization of the Fenian Brotherhood societies has a significant meaning at the present time. Some plan is on foot for gaining power. The pretence is to liberate Ireland, but we think other objects are in view, more intimately connected with the American government. At the beginning of the war with the South, they appeared to be in sympathy with the Union; but now there is an evident change. They know if the slaves become voters, they will be on the side of Protesantism, hence they are now acting more in harmony with the South, as they do not wish success to any thing opposed to Romanism. The government of the States has been so tolerant of all religions, that they have found but few obstacles to their progress. Signs now indicate a decided movement on their part for the purpose of gaining the first position in the States.

We think the following from the New York Observer expresses the truth in the case:—

"I will not stop to point out the fact that the Papal Church has been persistently aiming at political power. The man that does not recognize the danger with which it menaces our institutions is either ignorant or indifferent. Nor will I take space to show that the imported Romish vote is the element which gives it power. Romanism is kept strong by immigration. This immigration promises to be larger in the future than even in the past. Already in our great cities it holds the balance of power; it may, whenever there comes a nearly equal division of great parties, hold it all over the country. No observant man can be in doubt of all this when he studies the attitude of the Papacy in this land, or listens to its occasional demands, or notices its claims and expectations as they find utterance at times on the other side of the ocean."

JESUS NOT RISEN.

All the spirits, so far as we can learn, deny the literal resurrection of Christ, thus proving they are antichrist in their character. In 2 John 7, we read, "many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist." Erkomenon, rendered "is come" in the foregoing passage, is more properly translated "is coming;" hence the passage teaches that those who deny that Jesus "is coming in the flesh," are antichristian. If Christ was not raised from the dead, of course he cannot come again in the flesh; and if he is "not risen" "then" as Paul says, "is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain; yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raiseth up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." —1Cor. 15: 14–18.

The foregoing language is very positive and plain. Let us compare it with what the spirits say. The following questions and answers appeared in the Banner of Light, June 10th, 1865:—

"Q. If departed spirits can and do take forms like the hand and body, where would the old resurrectionists stand?

A. The old idea of the resurrection of the physical body has been exploded long ago in all honest and reasonable minds. That the disembodied can return, we know. That thousands and tens of thousands do return, we also know. That it is a fact that has been many times demonstrated, we know. That it has become not only a belief, but a positive knowledge with many, we also know. You are constantly being resurrected; constantly leaving the old and entering the new.

Q. How is it with those who, having died, are said to have been seen after that, bodily?

A. If they were seen at all, they were seen in spirit; surely they could not have been seen in the body. That would have been an absolute impossibility. Nature is very exact in all her movements; never breaks one of her laws. It is said by a class of false reasoners, that Jesus the Christ, arose from the dead in physical life. This is not so, nor is it so that any individual, either of his time, or any other time, ever arose from the dead. . . .

Q. Is that the reason Mary didn't know Jesus, when she met him in the garden and took him to be the gardener?

A. We are not sure that he met even Mary according to the record. . . .

Q. How could he have ate with his disciples, if he was not present with them in the body?

A. Are you sure that he did? We are not; the revelation says so, and a very poor, fallible revelation it is. Pardon us for our declaration.

Q. May not the record be true, and Christ have been there spiritually?

A. Doubtless he was there spiritually.

Q. The record then may be true, may it not?

A. There is very little life in the record, consequently very little truth.

Qr. The record says that he ate fish with his disciples.

A. The record says a great many other foolish things.

Q. If we throw the Bible aside, what shall we have to guide us?

A. Your own common sense, which is far better.

The foregoing is a sample of what spirits and Spiritualists teach. All can see that it is very far removed from christianity; and yet its supporters claim it is the same as that which the apostles preached. It would be as consistent with facts to say that Jesus was a horse thief, a drunkard, or a licentious person, as to say that Spiritualism has any thing in common with ancient christianity. No system of infidelity has ever been advocated that was more directly opposed to the principles that Jesus taught, than the one held by Spiritualists. It completely uproots christianity wherever it is received; and it is all idle talk on the part of its defenders, when they endeavor to show that it bears the least resemblance to the pure Christian religion taught by our blessed Savior.

MEANING OF THE WORD "SOUL."

In the "Union Bible Dictionary" we find the following definition of the word soul:

"The Scriptures evidently distinguish between the spirit and soul. (1 Thess. 5: 23, Heb. 4: 12.) The word which we call soul is used to denote mere animal life, the seat of sensations, appetites, and passions. Gen. 1: 20. Here the word translated life is the same with that which is elsewhere translated soul." —Union Bible Dictionary, p. 588. He goes on to say that "we have our bodies and animal life in common with brutes." This is in harmony with the Bible thus far. After admitting the foregoing facts in relation to the soul, the author assumes that the difference between man and the beast is the spirit which the man possesses in distinction from the beast; but the Bible declares that "they have one breath," or spirit; and that "as the one dieth so dieth the other."

THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH.

It will be seen by the following that we may expect to have in a little while telegraphic news flashing across the ocean between Europe and America. We have been expecting to see this great work accomplished before the coming of Christ. There are certain expressions connected with the account of the fall of the Babylon of the Apocalypse, that indicate to our mind some rapid means of conveying news between distant parts of the world, at the time the "great city" is burnt.

The following shows that the telegraphic cable will soon be laid:—

"The whole 2300 miles of the Atlantic telegraph cable was on board the Great Eastern, and as soon as the balance of the paying out machinery was put up, the telegraph fleet would sail for Valentia, and it was hoped before their departure from Valentia that a United States Government steamer would join them. The vessels will probably leave Valentia on the 10th of July, and arrive at Heart's Content, Trinity Bay, about the 24th of July. The directors of the Company have decided on the following uniform tariff between all points of the United States and British North America:—To Great Britain, 20*l* sterling for twenty words or less, and 1*l* for each additional word; to the Continent of Europe, 21*l* for twenty words, and 1*l* 1s for each additional word; to Asia and Africa, 25*l* for twenty words, and 1*l* 5s for each additional word. The address, date and signature, are all to be counted and charged for in the message. Messages for places in Asia and Africa to which the telegraph does not extend, will be forwarded by the first mail, postage paid. Messages in cipher will be charged double these rates. The directors are convinced that unless they charge high prices at first, there will be such an accumulation of business that great delay will arise in the transmission of the messages; but they intend to put down new cables as fast as possible, and then reduce the prices. The cable will be opened for business as soon after it is laid as possible, and all messages will be forwarded in the order in which they are received at Heart's Content and Trinity Bay. . . . No more visitors were to be admitted on board of the Great Eastern before she sailed. The present condition of the cable was all that could be desired, and those most interested in it seemed to be perfectly confident of its complete success."

Mr. Adams, the American Minister, said that during the recent troubles he was selfish enough to wish the cable might not be laid, as he would have been overwhelmed with telegrams; but now he wished it every success, as he believed it would do more than any other agency to strengthen the bonds of union between the two countries. We think there is much more probability that it may become a cause of war than of peace. We shall see whether it is used for war or peace purposes. It was said when the world's fairs were introduced some few years since, that they would serve to unite in peace all the civilized nations of the world; but we have seen no such results yet, but directly the opposite. So we think it will be.

THEOLOGY OF THE SPIRITS.

The following gives some of the points in the theology taught by the Spirits and believed by Spiritualists:

"No God but nature; no depravity but physical malformation, immaturity of powers, or some incident of outward condition; no Providence but the working of material causes and of statistical laws; no revelation but that of consciousness; no redemption but the elimination of evil by a natural sequence of suffering; no regeneration but the natural evolution of a higher type of existence; no retribution but the necessary consequences of physical and psychological laws."

Many thousands, and even millions, are adopting this theology of demons, believing it to be the teaching of human spirits that once lived in bodies here on earth. If such would only believe the Bible, the teachings of common sense and sound philosophy, they would be shielded from such dangerous fables. We can find no antidote for the poison of Spiritualism but a firm belief in "the sleep of the dead."

THE CHILD'S SOUL.

Bro. Grant:—Will you please answer the following question and oblige a lover of truth? In 1 Kings 17: 17, we find that the sickness of the child "was so sore, that there was no breath left in him." In the 21st verse, the prophet prays, "Let this child's soul come into him again." Because the word "again" is here used, some of our preachers have taught that the prophet desired the child's breath to return, affirming that it must be "the same that went out of him" that was to return, because the prophet says, "Come again." What are the facts? Is the original word rendered "breath" in the 17th verse the same as is rendered soul in the 21st verse?

J. R. Preston.

Floyd, Iowa, June 17th, 1865.

The word rendered breath in verse 17 is n'shahmah, and the word rendered soul in ver. 21 is nephesh. Nephesh occurs 752 times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and is rendered breath once, in Job 41: 21. When describing the leviathan, he says, "his breath (nephesh) kindleth coals, and a flame goeth out of his mouth." N'shahmah occurs twenty-four times, and is rendered souls once, in Isa. 57: 16,—"I will not contend for ever, neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit (ruah) should fail before me, and the souls which I have made."

The word n'shahmah occurs first in Gen. 2: 7,—"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath (n'shahmah) of life, and man became a living soul." When speaking of the flood, Moses says, in Gen. 7: 22, "All in whose nostrils was the breath (n'shahmah) of life, of all that was in the dry land, died." In Isa. 2: 22, we read,—"Cease ye from man whose breath (n'shahmah) is in his nostrils." N'shahmah and ruah are used interchangeably to represent the spirit or breath of life, and applied to both men and beasts. N'shahmah is rendered breath, breatheth, and breathed, seventeen times out of the twenty-four that it occurs in the original.

In the case of the widow's child "the breath (n'shahmah) of life" "in his nostrils" was taken away, and he died. Then in order to live again, it was necessary that he should receive again "the breath of life." When that breath was received, his life, or soul, came again; hence we have the true idea expressed in the Septuagint, as follows:—"And when he had breathed on the child three times and called on the Lord, he said, O Lord, my God, I beseech thee let this child's LIFE (nephesh) be restored to him. And so it came to pass, and the child cried." The word nephesh is rendered life 120 times in the Old Testament, and would be properly rendered life in this passage, as it is in the Septuagint.

Instead of saying, "let this child's" "breath of life" "come into him again," the prophet uses an equivalent expression, when he says, "let this child's soul" or life "come into him again"; because, when the breath came again, life came again.

This is the only passage in the Bible that says any thing about the soul's coming back; and in this case it is certain, we think, that it simply means life, which was restored by the return of "the breath of life." The breath that left the child and came again was not the child, but that which caused him to live; hence "Elijah said," after the breath came again, "see, thy son liveth." With these facts before the reader, we trust all is plain.

"LET US MAKE MAN."

Bro. Grant:—Will you tell to whom God was talking in Gen. 1: 26,—"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness"; and oblige one seeking after truth?

N. H.

The best critics show that "us" is not used in Gen. 1: 26 to represent a plurality of persons. Elohim, the word rendered God, in Gen. 1: 2, is usually in the plural number, and yet it has a verb in the singular. The use of the plural form of the noun is understood to represent a "greater fulness, emphasis, and intensity of meaning." See Bush's Notes on Genesis, p. 26.

The pronoun "us," in Gen. 1: 26, is evidently used in the same sense as Elohim, and stands for the person of the Creator. This plural form of a noun in the singular "is a Hebrew idiom," quite common. "It is applied to God, and also to man, where only one is intended."

GATHERED UNTO HIS PEOPLE.

"Bro. Grant:—I would like to have you explain, through the Crisis, Deut. 32: 50. Who were Moses' people that he was gathered unto at his death?" R. C. Russell.

We think the plain meaning of the passage is, that Moses should die and be laid away in the grave, as the rest of the children of Israel had been who had died before him, Sheol, or the grave, is represented as "the common receptacle" of all who die; and when they go into the grave, they are said to be gathered to their fathers; or as Paul expresses it, when speaking of the death of David, he "fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption."—Acts 13: 36.

For the World's Crisis.

"LAST DAY TOKENS."

Bro. Grant:—With your permission I would like to ask the many readers of the Crisis if they have read Bro. Brewer's works on Prophecy? It seems to me that brethren and sisters do not know what a vast amount of precious, soul-stirring truth is contained in these little books. They ought to have a place in every family library. They are cheap, I might say, at any price; just what we all ought to read, and read again and again; just what all our children should study (mine do with delight); and they are just the books to lend our neighbors and friends.

I would say to all who wish to do good in the world, and to all who desire to aid this faithful old soldier of our Lord, to send their orders on immediately. Do not procrastinate. Only one dollar and twenty-five cents for a sett. Address S. S. Brewer, Ashburnham Depot, Mass. Your brother,

Lincklaen, N. Y. Frederic Corker.

LARGE LIBERALITY.

The house of Brown Brothers gives $10,000 to endow the Hebrew Professorship in the Union Theological Seminary of New York.

Prof. S. F. B. Morse donates $10,000 to found an annual course of lectures in the same on "The Relations of the Sciences and Religion."

Mr. L. S. Ely of New York gives the same institution $10,000 to found a course of lectures on the "Evidences of Christianity."

Mr. Daniel Fish of Lansingburg, N. Y., pledges the sum of $10,000 towards establishing the "Methodist Biblical Institute," to be located in or near Boston.

The national debt is now about three thousand millions. A plan has been proposed by which it can be paid at once, or within the year: that is,—by individual subscriptions from $10,000 to $20,000 each. Several subscriptions on this plan have already been made. Commodore Vanderbilt pledges to give $500,000, and James Gordon Bennett $40,000.
